ator from Nebraska that the purposes of the amendment reported by the committee is not to get a report from the Interstate Commerce Commission on this resolution, but it refers the subject to them for investigation and for such action as they deem advisable under the law and in the public interest. They have the entire field of judgment and of discretion regarding

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contemplate that, if this resolution were passed, the chairman of the commission would make a report back to the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; not at all; it does not contemplate

Mr. NORRIS. Then I do not understand the meaning of the resolution.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It merely calls their attention to the facts stated in the resolution as the basis of an inquiry by them. Mr. Green, who is named here, can appear with his witnesses before the commission, and then they will doubtless proceed with the inquiry if the facts warrant it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I gather the situation from the discussion, the Senator from Nevada, representing the committee, desires to refer this resolution to the Interstate Com-merce Commission without any specific direction at all to them-simply to send the resolution to them. Would that be doing anything more than the committee itself might have Might not the committee of which the Senator is chairman have sent the resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission for advice as to whether or not it should be passed, as we often do with reference to matters coming before us relating to the public lands, for instance? We send them to the Secretary of the Interior, and so on.

I do not see that we shall gain anything by simply sending this resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission without any instructions or authority or direction on our part. may consider it or they may not. They may make an investi-gation or they may not. In other words, it would be no more than if the Senator from Oregon had taken the resolution and sent it down to them. Is not that correct?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It would be nothing more than that, and that is all that is necessary under the law. It is the right of anyone to go before the commission and make complaint that rebates are being received, and it is the duty of the commission to make an investigation of such a complaint; and it is the duty of the Attorney General, if facts showing the payment of rebates are presented to him, to institute an action for three times the amount of the rebates. All that the Senate of the United States can do is what any individual can do, what Mr. Green could have done, what the Senator from Oregon could have done-communicate with the commission, either orally or in writing, present the complaint and demand an investigation. All that we are called upon to do is to bring to the attention of the commission the allegations made in the resolution presented by the Senator from Oregon.

We are anxious that this matter should be speeded. I have been endeavoring to bring it up for days. I think it likely that facts exist such as are alleged here, though no proof of them has been presented to us, and though proof of them was demanded. So far as I am concerned, I want to see public justice accomplished, and I think this is the best and speedlest way of doing it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LANE. I yield. Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, to me this is rather a singular proceeding. The Senate has determined nothing with respect to it. The Interstate Commerce Commission will not be informed as to whether or not the Senate believes an investigation of this kind should be made. It gives no direction, it makes no recommendation, with respect to it. It is simply an idle ceremony by which the Senate gets rid of a resolution offered by the Senator from Oregon.

If the Senate is going to deal with this matter at all, it ought to have the courage to deal with it effectively one way or the If it feels that this investigation ought not to be made, it should say so. If, on the other hand, it has determined through its committee that the investigation should be made, again it should say so and either make the investigation itself or direct the proper authority to make it.

Neither of these things has been done in this case. simply handing this resolution over to the commission to do with it as it pleases. The commission can do that without any direction or any request on the part of the Senate. Therefore, I say again, it is purely an idle ceremony that amounts to absolutely nothing.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I shall be brief.

I am of the fixed and firm opinion that there will be no relief to the economic conditions in this country, that the peo-ple will neither secure their rights nor secure their liberties nor even secure justice, until their affairs which are intrusted to the hands of their servants are dealt with openly and publicly.

I am opposed to secret hearings, to caucuses, and to executive meetings, both of the Senate, as a rule—there are exceptions in this case—and of the committees of the legislative branch of the Government.

I presume I am a bit prejudiced on that subject. I am willing to concede that I am not very patient with such proceedings. I fear them. They are what some irreverent people term "legislative rat holes," down which disappear the rights of the people and the property of the people.

I wanted an open hearing. That is all I ask. I wanted the Senate, if it felt it should do so, to ask for one. I wanted the Senate, if it did not believe the thing to exist, or that I had not properly presented it, to vote down the resolution. are going to have any hearing at all, however, let us have it out in the open. That is all I ask.

I am going, before I close-and this is not a pleasant task; it is a thankless task-to call attention to something which is of as much importance, perhaps, as the resolution, and that is these committee meetings held behind closed and locked doors, the reports of which do not present all the proceedings, but are gone through and edited, and printed documents go upon the records of this Government in which the proceedings are only in part presented.

I have heard of "senatorial courtesy," and I realize the gravity of making a statement such as I do; but a half presented and illy presented, and, as it seems to me, an unfairly presented report, does not meet with my approbation, and I question it.

I therefore make my assertion, and wish to protest against this report. I protest against it on the ground that it is only in part true; that it does not give a full relation of the circumstances, as it should have done, in fairness.

I am asking only for fair treatment. I would give the Steel Trust just as fair treatment as I would this man Green, who is a witness against them. I do not want any punishment put upon them which does not belong to them. I would fight to help them preserve their rights, and I ask the same treatment

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Smith, Ariz. Smith, Ga. Smith, S. C. Smoot Stephenson Sterling Ashurst Bacon Borah Bradley Norris Hollis James Johnson Jones Overman Page Perkins Pittman Pomerene Ransdell Robinson Saulsbury Shafroth Sheppard Brady Brandegee Bristow Jones Kenyon Kern Lane Lee, Md. McLean Martine, N. J. Myers Nelson Newlands Thompson Vardaman Bryan Chamberlain Walsh Warren Williams Clapp Cummins Cummins Dillingham Sheppard Shields Works Shively Simmons du Pont Goff

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. Culberson's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], and to say that he is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. RANSDELL (when Mr. Thornton's name was called). The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton] is absent on account of sickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee, which will be stated.

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 241, reading as follows-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word. I am opposed equally to the resolution as introduced by the Senator from Oregon and to the resolution as reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee. I do not believe Congress ought to meddle with the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The commission is authorized, under the law, to initiate a proceeding against any railroad company guilty of discrimination through rebates or any other sort of favoritism. The proceeding can also be instituted by an interested person. either event it is an adversary proceeding. Notice must be given, and the hearing must go forward as an ordinary proceeding at law. If Congress or the Senate can assume the right-I am now speaking of the original resolution-to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to initiate a legal proceeding, it can also assume the right to direct it to discontinue a proceeding already instituted.

I would no more join in a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to originate a legal proceeding than I would join in a resolution that commanded it to abandon a proceeding. I would no more attempt to command the Interstate Commerce Commission in the exercise of its unquestioned jurisdiction than I would attempt to command a court to dismiss or to continue a proceeding that had been brought before it.

It must be understood, of course, that the Interstate Commerce Commission is much more largely a judicial tribunal than it is an administrative tribunal. We give it, of course, its power as an administrative tribunal; but the real character of its work is judicial. If any railroad has given rebates—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask whether the Senator from Georgia will not temporarily lay aside this measure so that we may dispose of the pending resolution? I think it will take but a few moments longer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I were sure that the resolution could be disposed of in the next 15 minutes, I would not object to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business, but-

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course I can give the Senator from Georgia no assurance on that point. I can give an assurance in regard to the length of time I shall occupy, but what time others may occupy it is impossible for me even to conjecture.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, I wish to say that I want to disentangle this thing—in my own mind, at least-before we vote upon it. I do not see that we are getting anywhere, that we are arriving at any place

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

Mr. BORAH. The Senate is going through the form of doing that which the Senator from Oregon could have done without the Senate at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the Senator from Idaho to know that I am just as much opposed to the resolution reported out of the committee as I was to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that, under the circumstances, I should yield the position which the agricultural extension bill occupies. It will be entirely practicable to-morrow morning to go on with the discussion of the resolution. It seems that there are several Senators who still wish to participate in it. Under the circumstances, I feel constrained to ask the attention of the Senate to the regular order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to say that I will resume, if I can get the recognition of the Chair, the discussion that is thus interrupted when the resolution again comes before the Senate.

With the permission of the Senator from Mr. NEWLANDS. Georgia, I will state that I will bring the matter up for further action to-morrow at the close of the routine morning business.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in section 3, page 3, line 20, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$600,000," so as to read:

That there is also appropriated an additional sum of $600,000 for the fiscal year following that in which the foregoing appropriation first becomes available.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], just before the Senate adjourned on yesterday, referred to what he thought was an understanding with me. Even before that time, in the debate, he had referred to the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, increasing the appropriation to $600,000 annually, beginning with January 1, 1916, as something in the nature of a compromise. I am sure the Senator did not intend it, but yet these suggestions do injustice to the committee, and they do injustice to me. We did not understand that we were compromising, and I did not understand that I sought from anyone an understanding which would check the amount of these appropriations.

On January 16, 1912, I introduced a bill in the Senate which was substantially the present bill. The next day it was introduced in the House by Mr. Lever. The members of the Committee on Agriculture of the two Houses, and certainly Mr. Lever and myself, have been quite industrious for the past two years to bring this measure to public attention, to bring it to the attention of agricultural organizations, to bring it to the attention of those who would give it support, to bring it to the attention of Congress, to bring it to the attention of the public at large.

We began with the appropriation of $300,000 annually in our bill, and with the limit of $3,000,000 added to the $480,000, giving $10,000 to each State. It was not that we would not have preferred a larger amount, but because we felt that the public mind must be educated somewhat to the importance of this measure and that a conservative request would strengthen our earlier efforts.

I welcome at this late-day the Senator from North Carolina into the active support of this measure, but it would hardly be just to those of us who have been working upon it so long and so earnestly to be put in any sense in the attitude of being forced by him into a compromise or being forced by anyone to give more, when we ourselves all the time have desired all that Congress thought proper to give.

Furthermore, we not only believe that this measure is most important, beginning at once, but that it will permanently be of great value. We think that permanently the full amount of great value. We think that permanently the full amount or $4,800,000 a year would in no sense be too much. We see a vast permanent work for these trained leaders in agriculture to do throughout the country when we will have one in every county, not alone to demonstrate the scientific truths developed at the colleges and experiment stations and the truths developed at the Agricultural Department, but one of their most important functions will be, when the Agricultural Department fully develops its market division, to aid in the cooperation of farmers toward the better preparation of their crops for market, toward bringing closer together consumers and producers, toward not only helping to increase the volume of products, but toward bringing that produce into a condition where the farmer himself will receive a higher profit, and yet at the same time the consumer be able to obtain his food supply even at a less cost.

Mr. President, on yesterday I called attention to the difference of view which I entertained from that of the Senator from North Carolina upon the subject of the permanency of this fund, and I replied to his statement that they will not need quite so large a sum as they do now 10 years hence. He said, "I do not think that the farmers will need quite as much money for agricultural demonstration purposes 10 years hence as they need to-day." I was a little embarrassed this morning when I read the RECORD to see the Reporter had not caught the language of the Senator from North Carolina just as he had used it and had reported him in such a way that it almost made the remarks I made on the subject impertinent. The Reporter quotes the Senator from North Carolina as saying, "I do not think, speak-Senator from North Carolina as saying, "I do not think, speaking relatively, that the farmers will be as much in need of this demonstration work 10 years hence as they are to-day," when, as I heard the Senator, he said, "I do not think the farmers will need quite as much for agricultural demonstration purposes 10 years hence as they do to-day." Not having heard the words "speaking relatively," the remark of the Senator conveyed to my mind an entirely different meaning. Had I understood the Senator as the report has represented his language, my reply would have been useless.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President.—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In one moment, Mr. President, I

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In one moment, Mr. President, I will be through, and then the Senator can have the floor.

Now, with reference to this increase. I do not object, and, so far as I can learn, the committee do not object, to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that the figure "4" be stricken out and the figure "7" inserted, so that the increase of $600,000 a year shall continue for seven years. the Senate is ready to accept that sum, I am sure the committee would be gratified; and I want to be distinctly understood, both for myself and the committee, that we do not object, and we never did object. We came with a more modest sum, and we are gratified that Senators, convinced even at this late day of the wisdom of our measure, should come into the Senate and suggest an increased amount. We for two years have sought to build a public sentiment behind this measure which would fortify it in the House and Senate, and we accept with satisfaction, not as a matter of compromise, but we gladly accept the sup-port of Senators converted by this public feeling in behalf of this measure to the enlarged sum.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think in anything I have said I have been claiming any credit or denying to the committee full credit. I know that the Senator from Georgia has for several years-in fact, ever since his advent into the Senate-been profoundly interested in this subject. While he has made very many excellent speeches since he has been a Member of the Senate, I think about the best speech I have ever heard him make was, probably something like a year ago, in de-fense of the principle of this bill. He deserves, and the country, especially his constitutents in Georgia, will give him great credit for the excellent work he has done in this behalf.

I am sure that the Senator was no more satisfied with the amount which the bill brought in by his committee allowed for this work than I was myself. But, Mr. President, the fact remains that the committee brought in its bill for $300,000, the initial increase, and $3,000,000, the ultimate increase, and I offered, very modestly, an amendment to it. At that time I understood the Senator from Georgia to oppose the amendment. I do not and I did not then think he opposed it because he thought the amount carried by his bill, was sufficient or because he did not believe a more liberal appropriation ought to be made for this great work, but because he thought there might be some embarrassment at the other end of the Capitol.

Now, the Senator from Georgia, I think, is unduly sensitive this morning. Nobody is going to try to take any of the credit from the Senator. Everybody in the Senate and in the country acknowledges his great labors in this behalf and knows how greatly interested he is in the farmers of the country

Mr. President, I had not meant to put the Senator or the committee in the light of compromising with me and as a result of any agreement with me bring in the amendment increasing the initial appropriation. By what I said yesterday I meant rather that I would compromise with myself. The facts are that before the Senator offered his amendment he had stated to me that his committee had met and had authorized him to offer an amendment which increased the initial appropriation from $300,000 to $600,000, but retained the ultimate amount of I stated to the Senator that that would be reasonably satisfactory to me, because, in my judgment, there was greater necessity for liberal appropriations for the next 2 or 3 years for this work than there would be at the end of 5 or 6 or 10 years; and I was really compromising with myself in practically, as I stated yesterday, agreeing that I would give my support to his amendment and withdraw my amendment.

The Senator says that the words "speaking relatively" appear either interpolated into the RECORD or that the reporter understood me differently from the way which the Senator understood me. I want to say to the Senator very frankly that in correcting my notes I put in the words "speaking relatively," because that was what I meant, and the whole context of my statement, both before the time when the phrase the Senator refers to was used and afterwards, shows that I was speaking about the relative importance to the farmers of a large appropriation during the next 3 or 4 years and a large appropriation at the end of

In my statement here I did not put it in that way, but that was evidently the sense in which I meant it, and the context of my whole statement shows that that was the sense. I took the liberty, as I had the right, to make my sentence express the thought I had in mind and the thought the context shows I had in mind.

Now, Mr. President, these are more pleasantries than arguments tending to enlighten the Senate or to make clear anything that is not clear. I wish to inquire, before I take my seat, if the Senator's amendment is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair).

It is.

SIMMONS. I desire to offer an amendment to the Mr. amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia for the committee. I move to strike out, in line 22, page 3, the word "four" and insert "seven," so as to read "seven years."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While I am not authorized by the committee to accept the amendment, I do feel justified in voting for it. I am sure if the Senate is willing to accept the amendment it would be gratifying to the committee. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what good reason there is for such a provision. Congress will not cease to exist, and if provision is made here for four years, at any time after this scheme is tried and it demonstrates its own usefulness, as I believe it will, Congress can, from session to session, increase the length of time over which the work shall extend. Why should we want to mortgage before-hand, beyond the very reasonable period of four years, for seven years the revenues of the Government? It may happen that at the end of four or five years we may be in some great stress and strain of trouble. It has always struck me that it is bad policy as a rule for one Congress to project itself too far into the future. As to myself, I hope the amendment will be defeated for that reason.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to address myself very briefly to the merits of this case. I shall vote for extending this sop to the American farmer. I shall vote for it because in their misery they are thinking that they will get some little solace or benefit from it, and I am willing to extend to them that little courtesy.

There was a gentleman in my State not many years ago who got into a battle with a man much bigger than he was, and after having been pounded to a jelly the stronger man went into a drug store and bought 5 cents' worth of arnica for the use of the fellow he had pommeled. This is about the condition of the other side of the Chamber toward the American farmer.

It rather seems to me that after you have just passed a bill by which, as I will show you by the figures I will give you in a short time, you have robbed the American farmer, or will have robbed him at the end of the year, of more than $3,000,-000,000, possibly you could find a better way to assist him, if this impulse of generosity is from the depth of your heart.

While I shall vote for the measure, I do not want it to be understood that I believe in the principle of knocking a man down and robbing him of his money and then offering him a penny stogy to solace his exasperated feelings.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This measure originated long before the legislation of last year, and before even the election of year before last. So I trust the Senator from North Dakota will not connect it-

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not make much difference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I trust the Senator will not advance the idea that it was intended in connection with any other

Mr. McCUMBER. The purpose of it is, if I understand it, to do some little kindness to the American farmer, who is suffering with severe aches and pains, after he got through the pommeling he received during the past summer, and if he is to get any benefit from it I will vote with the Senator to give him that meager benefit.

I agree with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] when he stated that the Senator from Georgia ought to have the very kindly approval of all the citizens of Georgia for his kindness to them in favoring this bill, and I can give instances why they should especially be very grateful to him, because I notice that under the method of distribution of these funds, while North Dakota and Georgia practically produce exactly the same value in agricultural products, Georgia gets $4 to North Dakota's $1 out of the sop that is to be handed to the American farmer. So I agree that the Senator ought to be complimented, at least, by his own citizens, if not by the citizens of my own State.

I am assuming that there is really a generous, kindly feeling on the other side of the Chamber for the American farmer; that you really want to do him some good. I am just going to show you briefly how you can do him great good, how you can do him a good a thousandfold greater than you can by the enactment of this legislation. Just give him back that which you robbed him of. That is all. You took from him the American market which by every principle of right and justice belongs to him. He is suffering because of the lack of that market. Now, just give him back the market, and you will put $3,000,000,000 in his pockets before the expiration of nine months from to-day.

You say that you are going to help him out by teaching him how to raise more. What is the use of instructing the farmer how to raise more when he has already such a surplus that he can not dispose of it at prices which will pay him the expense of raising it? If you increase by this method the farmers' produce 50 per cent, and then because of a policy which you adopt drive down the price of those products 75 per cent, by reason of a surplus which you create by your open-door policy, tell me how you are particularly helping the American farmer? Nor is that all. Mr. President, I have heard many arguments here lately which, I think, indicate that some few Senators have a wrong idea of the American farmer. He is not the ignoramus that you think he is. He can read and write; he does understand the English language; and he can take an agricultural report which tells the results of experimentation and gives him the method of securing these results. He has the intelligence to know when he is plowing 6 inches deep just as well as he would if he had somebody over him and saying, "Your plow needs to go down an inch farther in order to turn up 6 inches of soil." He does not need this constant supervision. Give him the opportunity to help himself and you need not go to the trouble of sending any agricultural expert to watch over him. He knows what his trouble is.

It was only a little while ago that the meat packers in Chicago and Kansas City got together, and they concluded that they would present the American farmer with a hundred thousand dollars to teach him how to raise steers. meat packers and the American people give the farmer a for those steers that will enable him to raise them and he will not need their hundred thousand dollars to tell him how to raise them. He knows just as well as this Government expert how to raise them. But if you turn upon his market all the steers of the Canadian Northwest, if you turn on his market all the steers that can be raised down in Argentine, if after you secure your peace in Mexico, if that will ever be, you will then open the gate and turn upon his market all the steers that can be raised in Mexico, you need not spend a great deal of time in teaching him how to raise cattle. He will let those other people raise them for him, and they will get the money expended by the American people for beef.

Now, I say, if you want to help him, you should know what his needs are. I admit that the farmer is better off in the South than in the North this year. He raises cotton, in which there is practically no competition, and raises tobacco, which is protected by a very high internal revenue as well as import duty. I will admit that your farmers are better off perhaps to-day than they have been for a good many years and that generally in the Carolinas and Georgia and in Virginia they are getting along very well, indeed. It is not so in the Northwest, where the prices of all our products have gone down from 50 to 100 per cent during the last year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are you giving some of them away? Mr. McCUMBER. Are we giving some of them away?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Those that have fallen 100 per cent suppose you are giving away.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose an article was worth $100 and it has gone down to $50, then it has gone down 50 per cent, has it not? Well, there are some of them that we can not sell at a profit at all; there are some of them we are virtually giving away when we estimate what they cost us. Some cereals have gone down 100 per cent; and if you are able to sell it for but one-half and only get one-half of what you before received, really the difference is fully the value on the present basis of 100 per cent, is it not?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCUMBER. In a moment. If you got $2 for a bushel of flax two years ago and you get but $1 for a bushel of flax now, I can see a loss of a hundred cents upon the present value. As to the value before received, of course, if you take the basis of $2, the reduction is 50 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has gone down 50 per cent. Mr. McCUMBER. Now I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to suggest to my colleague that, in his answer to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] he might his answer to the Senator from Georgia (1811). Barley is produced well have taken barley as an illustration. Barley is produced by the brewer. The price of by the farmer and is consumed by the brewer. barley during the year 1913, before the passage of the tariff bill. in the State of North Dakota, was on an average 58 cents per bushel. I myself sold several thousand bushels at that price. The price of barley now is on an average 35 cents a bushel. My colleague, therefore, has well stated that it has declined 100 per cent. Any man who has produced barley, who is a farmer and not an agriculturist, knows, and will say to the Senate, that it costs at least 60 cents a bushel to produce barley. If it costs 60 cents a bushel to produce it, and the farmer receives but 35 cents a bushel, he loses very nearly 100 per cent on his transaction.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SHIVELY. I have just entered the Chamber and I was very much impressed with the statement of the Senator's colleague that there had been a decline in the price of barley of 100 per cent. I want to know if I understood him correctly?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us suppose—we will put it in this form—that the prices of some of our products were 100 per cent more a short time ago than they are to-day. That will perhaps clear up the mathematics of the subject.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is, that the prices are 100 per cent less now than they were before?

Mr. McCUMBER. As to some of the products, the prices were a hundred per cent above what they are now.

Mr. SHIVELY. I should think that would clear it up. Mr. McCUMBER. I want to get the result of your new tariff during two months and its effect upon the American farmer. I would really like the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] upon this point, for I know he sincerely wishes to help not only the cotton grower, but the wheat grower as

Mr. KERN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, referring to the statement as to the great losses which have been sustained by the American farmer, I have in my hand an Indianapolis newspaper of yesterday, giving the market reports for that market, in which I find that the price of hogs yesterday in Indianapolis was 8.44 and 8.50; the price of cattle was 7 and 7.85; the price of wheat was 97; the price of corn, 67 and 68; the price of oats, 401; the price of hay in the wagon market, timothy $17 and $19 a ton, and of baled hay $16.50 to $18.50; and other prices in proportion. I ask if those figures indicate that the farmers have lost 100 per cent or 50 per cent during the last year or since the enactment of the tariff law? I am sure they have not so lost in that market.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, first, before we can ascertain what a farmer really is receiving when he gets a certain price for a product, we should have some sort of an idea of what it costs to produce that product. We should have to know that before we can really know whether or not he is prosperous. I know the prices in my own section of the country, which is contiguous to the great exporting country of the Northwest, and I know the influence that the tariff bill has had upon that section. I purpose to give some of the figures upon the importations alone, and then the Senator from Indiana can draw his own conclusion as to whether or not those importations were in any way responsible for the difference.

My colleague [Mr. GRONNA] has given the difference in price of a year ago of barley on the market and what the price on the market is to-day. I might also state that in his own section he was then receiving some fifty-odd cents a bushel for oats, and I think the same oats will now sell for about 23 cents, or only about one-half of what they sold for a short

There are a great many things that affect the value of agricultural products. I am going to discuss those that are affected directly by importations and indicate in that way how the Senator from Indiana and his party can grant a great boon to certain sections of the country, even though the influence will be less felt in Indiana, in Iowa, and in Ohio than it would be in my own section of the country.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. KERN. In view of the startling declaration made by the Senator from North Dakota, I simply want to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that the market quotations I have given show that the prices of all these articles of live stock and of grain which we raise in Indiana are substantially the same or greater than those prices were a year ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. How is it as to barley? Are the prices for barley given? Will the Senator follow the quotations down and give the price of barley, so that we may compare it with the price of last year and see who is correct?

Mr. KERN. I find no quotations as to barley here at all. Mr. McCUMBER. Barley is one of the things that we raise. and one of the things as to which we are compelled to keep a little tab upon the quotations in our section of the country. While it may not be so material to the sections of the country that make beer as it is to the section of the country that makes the barley that goes into the beer, it is quite serious to us.

Mr. President, I want now to take the statistics for two months. I tried to get those for December, but I was only able to get the statistics for October and November of this year. I want to compare them with the importations and the value of those imports with the corresponding two months of last year. Let us take October, 1912. This is from the summary of the Commerce and Labor report. In October, 1912, we imported but 27,662 head of cattle; in October, 1913, we imported 130,639 head of cattle. In the first instance, the value was but $575,000, in round numbers, and in the last instance it was $3,398,000.

Now, let us compare November of 1912 with November of 1913. In November, 1913, we imported 123,118 head of cattle, valued at $3,306,723. All of this money in a single month—$3,306,723 went out of the United States, out of the hands of the farmers of this country, and into the hands of the farmers of other coun-

In 1912 we imported 3,465 head of sheep; in October, 1913, we imported 26,035 head of sheep; in November of 1912 we imported 5,075; in November, 1913, we imported 46,955 sheep, an increase of nearly ten times the amount in a single month. some instances it runs all the way from five times as many up to one hundredfold. In October, 1912, we imported, what before we had scarcely ever imported into this country, 226,000 bushels of corn; in 1913 we doubled that, we imported 473,000 bushels; in November, 1912, we imported 25,819 bushels of corn; in In November, 1912, we imported 25,519 bushels of corn; in November, 1913, we imported 1,632,643 bushels of corn, valued at $1,182,673. That is one month of the balance sheet of the corn producer in the United States. That many bushels of corn took the place of an equal number of bushels that were raised by the American farmer and shut him out of that much of a demand.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GRONNA. Does my colleague believe that had any effect upon the price of corn in this country?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator, if he will state the prices in the two years, which he perhaps remembers better than I do, can show the Senate just what effect it has.

Mr. GRONNA. I am simply asking that question, because it was contended on the floor of the Senate during the tariff debate even by Republicans that it could not affect the price of corn, but in a single instance, when a million bushels of corn from the Argentine Republic were imported, corn dropped 6 cents a bushel.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course that does not make any difference to our friends on the other side; it is only the farmer who has to suffer.

Not only that, Mr. President, but since the tariff law went into effect we have imported more than 300,000,000 bushels of corn into the United States. You need not tell me that it will not have any effect upon the price of corn in the United States and will have no effect upon the American farmer. If supply and demand still affect or govern values, then these enormous importations must necessarily reduce the farmer's price, and, with a short crop, he is entitled to a higher price. deprive him of that right by allowing other countries to make up the deficiency, and thereby deprive him of his right to the higher price.

The importations for December, 1913, have not yet been filed with the department, but from press dispatches we learn that during the month of December importations of corn were exceedingly heavy and increasing all the time. It has been stated that on January 8 of this year more than 300,000 bushels of Argentine corn were received in New York City alone, and it is stated in the press reports that more than 3,000,000 bushels from Argentine alone have been received in New York since the enactment of the present tariff law.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. McCUMBER, I yield, with pleasure. Mr. GRONNA. Of course the reduction in price applies not only to the corn imported but to every bushel raised in this ocountry.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator. In October, 1912, we imported 52,213 bushels of wheat; in October, 1913, that 52.213 bushels jumped to 233,000 bushels. In November, 1912, we imported 2,187 bushels of wheat; in November, 1913, we imported 127,033 bushels of wheat. In October, 1912, there was not a single egg imported into the United States; in October, 1913, there were imported 21,594 dozen eggs.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before my colleague leaves the subject of wheat, if he does not object, I should like to read a short extract from the Winnipeg Telegram.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will be glad to have the Senator read it. We are trying to get information as to how we can best benefit the American farmer, and any information that will show the cause of our broken markets will be useful.

Mr. GRONNA. Our friends on the other side evidently be-lieve that they have made warm friendships with the people of Canada. The Canadians do not look at it in that way, as I will show by reading this short extract from the Winnipeg Telegram under date of January 13, 1914. The Legislature of the Province of Manitoba had under consideration the question whether or not they should admit our flour free. Of course, if we admit their wheat free, they will have to admit our flour free; and we in the Northwest feel that we are under obligations to the chairman of the subcommittee who handled the agricultural schedule of the tariff bill, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], because he coupled the question of free wheat and free flour, so that the Canadians can not send their wheat free into this country unless they also admit our flour We are under obligations to the Senator from Mississippi free: for that much.

But what I wanted to read, Mr. President, is a paragraph from the Winnipeg Telegram. They were discussing whether or not it would be for the best interests of Canada to have free wheat, and Mr. Norris, a member of Parliament, is quoted in part as follows:

As for Mr. Norris, he claimed to be of the same opinion now as he was then. He was in favor of a free interchange of all kinds of farm products. He suggested that the resolution under consideration should have taken the form of a memorial to the Dominion Government instead of being a mere expression of opinion, and suggested that it should have made mention of free oats, barley, flax, and agricultural implements. Free agricultural implements, he held, were next in importance to free wheat. Charging that some government members, including the premier, would not be able consistently to vote for the resolution, Mr. Norris proposed to read from a speech by Sir Rodmond Roblin on reciprocity, when the premier interposed to remark that it would not be necessary to convert him.

"Mr. Norbis. Of course, if my honorable friend is going to assure me that he is going to vote for the resolution, I won't read the speech. "Sir RODMOND. I am." Notwithstanding this declaration, Mr. Norris contined to read extracts from the speech and to make observations on it.

SUBJECT OF RECIPROCITY.

Turning again to the subject of reciprocity, Mr. Norris argued that under the Taft-Fielding agreement Canada would have had the markets of the North American Continent to themselves—

You see, they are not quite satisfied because we have given free trade to the entire world; they wanted it for themselves whereas under the existing United States tariff Canada would be in competition with the world in the United States market. He favored the admission of Canadian wheat free into the United States because the farmer would get better prices for his grain. Both producer and consumer, he held, would benefit.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, I want to take up additional statistics as to eggs. In November, 1912, there was not a single egg imported into the United States; in November, 1913, there were imported 165,236 dozen eggs into the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the fact that we are now paying from 40 to 50 cents a dozen for eggs which are eaten by the consumer, how much higher in price does the Senator think eggs should go before any could be imported?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am very glad to have the Senator ask that question. Although the importation of eggs into the United States has been increased, what difference has it made to the ultimate consumer? He is the man you have been looking after We insisted every day of the tariff debate that the free introduction of any of these articles would make no difference in the price to the ultimate consumer, but that it would make a difference in the price to the producer; and in every instance our prediction has been verified.

Mr. POMERENE. Which position is about as inconsistent as anything that could come from the same lips.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment? Hearing this egg discussion—

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment before the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] leaves his seat. I did not quite catch the import of his last statement. He says the two statements are inconsistent. The fact is that in the month of November, 1912, there were no eggs imported, while in the month of November, 1913, there were imported into the United States the considerable amount of 165,236 dozen eggs; and the Senator himself has now stated that, notwithstanding this importation, eggs are higher in price, and that we are paying from 40 to 50 cents a Wherein are we inconsistent, and who is dozen for them. inconsistent?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it does not yet appear from anything the Senator has said what the price of eggs might have been had these importations not been permitted. fess that I am not quite able to understand the humanitarian principles which actuate some men, when, as we know, in this country during the last four or five years the number of cattle has greatly decreased, the number of sheep has greatly decreased, the number of swine has greatly decreased, notwithstanding the beneficence of the great protective-tariff principle; and during all this time, when there are men, women, and children in this country by the hundreds of thousands who do not, because of the high prices, know what beef and pork taste like, yet, actuated purely by humanitarian principles, we want to increase these prices so that they can not get them in the future, as they have been deprived of them in the past.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there are two errors in the hypothesis of the Senator. In the first place, for many reasons, which the Senator himself fully understands, there has been and probably will be no reduction whatever to the ultimate consumer because of increased importations. He understands the manner of fixing prices at the retail places, but the fact stares him in the face that in spite of increased importations there has been no decrease in cost to the ultimate con-

Now I will consider the case of the poor man who never tastes meat. I recall-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But the Senator is getting away from eggs

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I will come back to eggs in just a moment. I recall a little verse in the school reader when I was a child. I can only remember a small portion of it. It made a reference to the poor family which I could not quite understand. It ran something like this: "They ate their bread and drank their wine, but never tasted meat." Inasmuch as we had no wine, but plenty of meat, and were considered anything but rich, we could not quite understand what a punishment that was; and it is very much the same with the poor individual referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I tell you, Senators, there is not a laborer in the United States, although he may receive the lowest amount that is paid for labor, who can not get more meat for a given hour of his labor than the farmer gets of the money that is expended in raising that meat. The agricultural reports for 1912, taking the average of five adult workers upon a farm, show that the average daily net wages of the adult worker-that is, the farmer, his wife, and the children who do a day's work—is 20 cents a day. That is his net. That is all he gets a day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And that was during the régime of Republican protection?

Mr. President, the egg question, which I heard the Senator discussing so earnestly, calls to mind an instance in my community. I knew an old fellow—a German, John Mulner by name—who used to say: "I have 18 hens and I control the egg market of the city of Plainfield. When my hens lay, eggs go down; and when my hens stop laying, eggs go up." It was largely a question of supply. The tariff unquestionably has something to do with the price, but it has not stimulated the production of the hen, the Republican theory to the contrary production of the hen, the Republican theory to the contrary notwithstanding.

My friend talked earnestly about the wage of the average farmer and the wage of the American workingman. I ask him and other Senators to let memory run back to a few months ago when an investigation disclosed the fact that in Lawrence, Mass, the workers were paid hardly enough to buy eggshells, let alone eggs. All of this came under the régime of the Republican policy of protection.

The tariff has been reduced and we believe we are going to relieve the general conditions of the community; at least, a Republican tariff will never make things cheaper to the con-We have believed in and have brought about a reduction of the tariff. The public have believed in and have ratified that action, and, in my judgment, will ratify it again in the near future. If our friends can get any comfort out of eternally thrashing this subject over and over again, in God's name, let them proceed. Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will agree with the Senator that, in anticipation of a Democratic administration, the hens have not added to their supply as perhaps they ought to have done. I will also admit that, with the free importation of products, while you have hurt the producer, you have not benefited the consumer in any way of which I know; at least, I have not heard of anything being any cheaper to the ultimate consumer. I will follow this argument right down by stating another proposition, in which perhaps the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MAR-

TINE] may find an inconsistency. Take meats. Are meats any cheaper to-day than they were a year ago to the ultimate consumer in the city of Washington? If they are, I have not found it out. Let us see what the importations are. In October, 1912, we imported no fresh meats; in October, 1913, we imported 5,752,207 pounds of fresh meats, valued at $474,657. Did the importation of nearly 6,000,000 pounds of beef in a month reduce the price to the ultimate con-It did reduce the price which the farmer was receiving all along the northern boundary for the stock he sold. My colleague [Mr. Gronna], a short time ago, told the Senate of a farmer who started with several carloads of cattle to market. It was a rather small market for stock, but it was at a time when the price seemed fair to him. When he got to St. Paul, as I understand, he found about 40 carloads of Canadian cattle in competition with his, and his price went down 2 points, but the beef did not go down in cost to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. President, in November, 1912, we imported no fresh meats; in November, 1913, we imported 10,998,733 pounds of fresh meats—not cattle, but fresh meats. We imported in that single month nearly 11,000,000 pounds of beef, but the price did not go down one cent to the ultimate consumer, although the importation did mean a great many dollars loss to the farmers of the entire Northwest in the value of their stock.

I know that stock is higher than it was years ago. know that there is a decrease in our production. Why? Because our ranges have been taken up for agricultural lands; because our ranges have been taken up for agricultural rands; because it takes labor to produce cattle and care for them where land is worth $40 and $50 an acre, and you can not range them; and because the labor price, running from $3 to $5 a day, has been so high during the last few years that it was impossible for the western farmer to hire the labor to take care of his stock; so that with the big prices he was getting there was but little profit on account of the excessive labor price of producing.

in October, 1912, we imported the small amount of 9,881 bushels of potatoes. In October of 1913 we increased that 9,881 bushels to 80,000 bushels. In November of 1913 we imported free of duty—now, this is not from Canada, but from other countries-401,063 bushels of potatoes. There were other importations, but owing to the countervailing clause of the tariff act a duty was paid on them.

Now, I want to get down to the oats question. That is quite

In October of 1912 we imported 379 bushels of oatsvery big amount; about one wagonload. In October of 1913, with a duty of 6 per cent, we imported 2,524,793 bushels. That is to say, in a single month there was that increase from one wagonload to nearly 3,000,000 bushels.

Oats have gone down. They have decreased from fifty-odd cents a bushel to only twenty-odd cents a bushel up in my State, and you can not raise them for twenty-odd cents or 30 cents a bushel and pay expenses.

One of the products made of these oats is Quaker Oats. down to one of the department stores, or any store here in the city, and see if you get a package of Quaker Oats any cheaper to-day, with oats at twenty-odd cents a bushel, than you got them when oats were fifty-odd cents a bushel. It is but another them when eats were fifty-odd cents a busner. It is but another illustration of the fact that while you may kill the producer, while you may destroy his prosperity by your reductions, you not beloing the ultimate consumer. What the producer are not helping the ultimate consumer. What the producer loses is gathered up either in the pocket of the foreigners or in the pocket of the intermediate man between the producer and the consumer.

You can benefit the farmer of the Northwest a hundredfold as much as you will by the bill you now seek to introduce if you will just give him the American market for his oats. He has earned the American market. He paid pretty good prices for everything he purchased for a good many years, in order that he might build up your great manufacturing industries of the East. He did build your mighty cities. He did give you the wonderful commercial and manufacturing prosperity you have had in this country, and he did it at the cost of some suffering to himself. He did it in the hope that by building up your industries, while he got an indirect benefit in finding a better home market, when he had reached a point where he could get a direct benefit, when he had reached a point where the production and consumption equalized each other, you would then be equally generous with him, and say: "Inasmuch as you have builded up these great populous centers, and have given work to millions upon millions of people through your protective system, the time has now arrived when you can be put upon a plane of exact equality, and when you can receive as much for your work as we receive for ours." Yet, instead of doing that, you immediately threw open the doors to the entire world and said: "Come in and crush down the prices of farm products. living higher than formerly and we must recoup by keeping down food prices.'

Mr. President and Senators and you people who live here in the great cities, if you will just start your economy at the right end you will not need to complain about the prices you pay for your beef, your potatoes, and so forth. Let the good lady who pays forty or fifty dollars for a hat that has not $3 worth of material and work in it just pay what it is worth and she will have forty or fifty dollars with which to buy potatoes that will last her for two or three years. She need not complain of the few cents a bushel she is paying.

Let the American people of the cities, who are paying twice as much for their liquor as they are paying for their meat, just cut down their liquor bill one-half and they will get their meat free. It will not cost them a cent.

Why, the young ladies here in the cities pay more in a year for chewing gum than is paid for all the potatoes that are consumed by them in a single year.

Let us begin our economy at the right place and cut out the You people of the cities who are complaining because you pay 30 cents a pound at retail for some splendid beef just cut down your theater bills when you pay $5 a seat to hear Madame Bodjugowisky sing, when in the old country she sings the same songs for 25 and 50 cents a seat. Just pay the prices that are paid in the other country and you will have enough money saved to buy all the flour you consume. Are you aware of the fact that you pay more for your amusements and for your travel than you do for all the cereal food products in the United States?

Mr. President, the farmer is not receiving any too much for his products. If he were receiving an honest price for them, you would get an equal benefit, because, if he gets a fair and honest price, he will spend his money; he will buy your things. It will pay you better in the long run to make your consumer prosperous than it will to make him poverty stricken and then depend upon your export trade for your surplus manufactures.

I have not finished my quotations. In November of 1912 we imported 4,266 bushels of oats, valued at $2,000. In November of 1913, when the duty had been brought down to 6 per cent, we imported 5,132,308 bushels. That is one single month. You can multiply that by 12. Take the 12 months in the year and you will readily see why the farmer is not receiving a living price for his oats; but do you get your Quaker Oats any cheaper? Are they not selling at the same old price that they have been for 5 or 10 years? If we are injuring the American farmer for the benefit of somebody else, if there really is a benefit, we who have suffered more than any other people are willing to suffer more if it is going to benefit you. But it benefits no one.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am always glad to yield.

MARTINE of New Jersey, I will ask the Senator whether he realizes the fact that the establishment or concern or corporation that manufactures the so-called Quaker Oats is a giant trust? Now, we have fixed the tariff, we think, fairly well. The next chapter in the history of this land, and the next step the Democratic Party will take, will be to deal with the trusts. After we have gotten through with the trusts we will be able to feed our Senator and his babes on cheaper Quaker Oats. Just let us round it out.

Why, great heavens, you tried your policy here for years, and the price of 10 cents a package for Quaker Oats was established under the iniquitous rule of your high-tariff policy. When we get through with the trusts you will have no fault at all to find.

I think

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we would rather have the iniquitous policy by which we paid 10 cents a package for our Quaker Oats and got 50 cents a bushel for our oats than to pay 10 cents a package for our Quaker Oats and get 20 cents a bushel for our oats.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; but the people have decreed otherwise. To-day the Democratic Party is in the saddle, pledged to lighten the burden as far as it can by legislation. That pledge we will carry out, as surely as there is a God in heaven.

Mr. McCUMBER. The groans of the farmers in the Northwest will show that they realize that the Democratic Party is in the saddle.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield. Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey to pass entirely unchallenged. sume that he agrees with me that oatmeal is the same edible product that Quaker Oats is?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is all of the same char-

Mr. McCUMBER. And every little mill in the country manufactures oatmeal.

Mr. CUMMINS. In our State we have the largest mill of the so-called trust that there is in the country; but we also have, I think, three large independent mills, turning out the same product every day. While I have no word of excuse for the so-called Oatmeal or Quaker Oats Trust, the fact is that there is in my part of the country, anyhow, substantial competition that will not permit the trust to raise its price above a reasonable point. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey whether there are now pending any proceedings intended to punish the officers of the Oatmeal Trust?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not speak directly as to the Oatmeal Trust. I am willing to admit that there may be an independent mill or two manufacturing oatmeal, if you choose. Doubtless it is true; but the Senator will agree with me that the large majority of the millions of pounds of oatmeal that are turned out in various shapes, Quaker Oats or otherwise, are manufactured by great organizations like the Oatmeal Trust, and not by the two or three independent mills in the Senator's State.

Whether or not any immediate steps are being taken to prosecute the Oatmeal Trust I can not say, but I do know that part of the plan and policy of the Democratic Party is to go for trusts, and we will go for them, dealing with them fairly, honestly, and justly, but not tenderly nor timidly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope it is the plan of the Democratic Party to destroy monopoly in this country. I must confess, however, that the plan is being carried out with a deliberateness that sometimes discourages me.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It has only been six or seven months.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the Senator from New Jersey to know, however, that there is a good deal of competition in that particular field, although I think it is true that the concern which he calls the trust, and which I think is a trust in every proper sense of the word, does manufacture probably more than one-half of the entire product of the country. I say to the Senator from New Jersey that I hope we shall speedily reach a time when it can be dealt with, and when, if the American people are suffering from its exactions, they may be relieved from them. We are going very, very slowly, however; and I have no great confidence in the effort to readjust industrial conditions in the administrative offices of the country. There is but one way to punish a man for having violated the law, and that is to bring him to the bar of some court and, finding him guilty, to punish him. I have not much faith in these preliminary negotiations and these quiet adjustments that seem to have been favored, not only in a former administration but in this one as well.

I will say that they are not Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. quite as rapid as I myself should like. I can not recall just now how the last tariff bill carries oatmeal, but I do know that I was one of those in our party who were in favor of putting oatmeal on the free list. I believe, however, that the Senator's heart and my own beat very nearly in unison in respect to the wish to relieve the necessities of the people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I appreciate all the Senator says about his party going after the trusts. Of course he can speak for his party and I can not. I can only get the vague rumors we get in the headlines of the press, which say that the Democratic Party is going after the trusts, but add below: "We are going very gently, so please do not get scared and bring on a panic." I do not know how gently you will be able to handle them.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am very glad the Senator thinks we are pursuing a slow and conservative policy. A month or two ago he was complaining that we were rushing blindly on with the tariff agitation and the so-called regulation of trade and that we were going to bring about ruin and chaos and bring the structure tumbling down on our heads.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; it is the gentle policy of which I complain-not that the Senator's party is going too slowly, but that it is dealing so gently with the matter, going very quietly and telling the trusts that they need have no fear of being hurt.

Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. President— Mr. McCUMBER, I want to say one word further about the oats question, and then I will yield to the Senator from

The Senator from New Jersey always speaks from his heart, and it is always full of generosity for the public. Of course he would give them free oatmeal; but as a matter of fact, while he practically takes the tariff off oats, reducing it to 6 cents a bushel, which is a mere bagatelle, he leaves a tariff of about 333 per cent upon the oatmeal that is to be consumed by the dear ultimate consumer.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That can not be charged up to me. As I tell the Senator, I was in favor of free oatmeal; and, so far as the farmer is concerned, the pittance of 6 cents a bushel is folly and nonsense.

The Senator talks very glibly about the farmer. I think I can give him spades and aces and everything else and beat him as a farmer to-day. We do not want any of your trash and cheap-gruel tariff reforms. We have starved to death under that infernal policy. We hope to bring it to a broader and a freer basis.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will admit that with cards and spades the Senator can get the best of me, but on the tariff I am willing to take my chances with him. I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota, for his information, that while this gentle process of dealing with the trusts is being inaugurated their stock is continually rising in price under the beneficent sunshine of the present trust policy.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly I should call attention to one or two more importations that are alleged to be for the benefit of the dear public through which the farmer suffers, but from which I can not find that the public has yet received any henefit.

I notice that in October of 1912 we imported 84,000 gallons of cream. In 1913, when cream was free of duty, we raised that importation to 136,000 gallons. In November of 1912 we imported 65,000 gallons; in November of 1913 we imported 161,000 gallons of cream.

I could follow up these things at considerable length. where you will find a general reduction of the farmer's price for all of these articles, except close to the great cities, where he can haul his product into the city and can reach up to the price of the retail merchant.

I will admit that the farmer who can drive into Washington, and can get 60 cents a dozen for his eggs, will not cut them to a lower price when the merchant is selling fresh eggs for 60 or 70 cents a dozen. He may not suffer materially; but where the eggs are bought out in the country, 1,500 or 3,000 miles away from the great consuming section to which they must be shipped, the price has been very materially reduced, and the producer as suffered accordingly.
Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure, always

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me suggest to the Senator that when the farmer has an abundance of eggs for sale, when the commodity is being produced, the price is down; the competition materially reduces the price to him; but when the price goes up and the consuming public is paying these extravagant prices, the farmer does not have the eggs for sale, but they have passed into the hands of the dealer. So the present tariff is used by the cold-storage men to reduce the farmer's price, and then they put the price up to what the market will stand when they go to sell the eggs.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course some of the farmers have a few eggs to sell, but the Senator is absolutely correct in the general statement.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] quotes the prices of beef and hogs in Indiana. When he considers the ravages of hog cholera and about how many hogs and beeves are left in the country, he will see that naturally they get a fair price when they have but a few to sell; but the farmer, especially in the cereal-raising section of the country, is entitled to have a decent price when he is raising a fair quantity. When he has but a very small quantity, indeed, the prices ought to be just so much better.

Does the Senator realize that our 1911 crop of wheat, which was a rather small crop, brought us in very much more money than the 1912 crop, which has been sold along in 1913, and more than the 1913 crop, which is much bigger, will sell for? The reason was that at that time we had the American market for American produce, and that was of considerable benefit.

Now, however, when in some sections of our country our wheat crop was almost wholly destroyed and when the production is a great deal less, and under natural conditions, in which the farmer would have the American market for his produce, he would receive a compensation that would partially repay him for his loss, he can not receive it because of the importations that come in to fill the deficiency.

Our 1912 crop, as I have stated before, was so enormously above the consumptive demand of the country with reference to our northern wheat that the protection of 1912 gave us practically no benefit. Then, by reason of this great oversup-ply, amounting to more than 100,000,000 bushels of surplus in three States, we were forced upon an export basis, and we suddenly had to find our market across the ocean for crops which we had not exported for 15 years.

Of course whenever we are forced down to that our prices will not be benefited at all by the protection; but that is only in the case of a phenomenal crop that may come once in 15 or 20 years. When we are producing the normal crop the consumptive demand is so great that we can not export any of the product. To-day we are on an export basis. We are bound to remain on an export basis until this law has been repealed.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to quote a little from some of the exchanges, which will explain this matter better than I can.

Here is something from a Minneapolis paper:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., December 9.

Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce firms to-day bought a half million bushels of Canadian oats that will come to Minneapolis and pay the 6 per cent import under the new tariff, thereby recording the largest business of the kind since the first Canadian oats began to trickle across the boundary after the Underwood bill went into effect.

A movement that the Great Northern, "Soo," and Northern Pacific roads have handled, wherein a car or two of Canadian oats have appeared on nearly every incoming grain train from the boundary line, has brought about 1,000,000 bushels into Minneapolis so far—but trains arriving over the "Soo" and Great Northern in the last few days have had from 10 to 20 cars of Canadian oats. That the total importation by Minneapolis will have reached 2,000,000 bushels before the year ends was the prediction heard on exchange to-day. OFFSET OF 2 POUNDS.

Thirty-four pounds is a legal bushel in western Canada and 32 pounds is the legal bushel in Minnesota, and therein the west Canadian producer of oats finds an offset in part for the 6 cents a bushel duty that he has to stand.

Mr. President, there is an assertion that I am somewhat surprised to read. If I remember our tariff law correctly, it provides that a bushel of oats shall be 32 pounds; and, if an American bushel of oats shall be 32 pounds, I can not understand how they are importing 34 pounds of Canadian oats for a bushel and levying a duty on that basis. I am confirmed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow], so I imagine that there must be an error in this statement, although it may be that in the change of administration we are getting a little different rule as applied to the number of pounds in a bushel of oats.

as applied to the number of pounds in a bushel of oats.

What the increasing movement will do to the Minnesota oats producer was of speculation on exchange to-day. The recent bringing in of a car of west Canadian wheat, which sold at Minneapolis prices after paying 10 cents a bushel import duty and freight from a Manitoba point, was interesting, grain-trade men said, not so much for its own importance as in the showing of what might happen if the Canadian Government takes off the countervailing duty in January, as some in the trade expect. But the Canadian Government may not do that, and no great inrush of Canadian wheat is expected while the 10-cent import duty remains in effect.

The oats, sold at 40 cents, or practically the same price as the Minneapolis figure for the corresponding quality, are coming in, with payment of freight and duty as a part of the calculation.

This was only in December. I will follow this proposition.

This was only in December. I will follow this proposition up a little closer. I take from the Fargo Forum, in my State, a dispatch from New York of January 8. The heading is:

Millions of bushels of Argentine corn are coming to the United States.

The dispatch is as follows:

New York, January 8.

Nearly 300,000 bushels of Argentine corn was unloaded to-day at this port, and millions more from South America are under contract. The importations are a direct result of the removal of the duty on corn under the recent tariff act. More than 1,000,000 bushels have been received in the United States since the tariff went into effect, the first from Argentina ever brought here.

Already competition with American corn has forced a decline in cash values. Thirteen ships are either en route here or loading with corn from Argentina.

One American manufacturing concern which uses corn sirups and kindred products has 5,000,000 bushels of the Argentine product under contract for delivery in the near future.

When the new Argentine corn crop is harvested importations will increase, according to trade authorities. The corn already here has found the raliroads unprepared to handle it, the port being without adequate docking facilities. These deficiencies are being remedied rapidly.

Lord grant that they may be delayed just as long as received.

Lord grant that they may be delayed just as long as possible for the benefit of the American farmer. Providence sometimes comes to our rescue a little when the Democratic Party forgets us, and we have it here in the lack of facilities in New York to handle the corn that is coming in, and that they must increase those facilities before we can get all the importations inland.

This is but an indication of what is coming, and that we may be prepared in some way to meet the condition. You need not tell me that this does not affect our price. It has affected our price. But you say that we are already getting a good price in the United States. Why? We are getting a good price because the farmers have not the produce to sell or have only so much to sell. We ought to have a very much better price when we have a half or two-thirds of a crop, but we will never get it so long as we open up our doors to the free importation of all the agricultural products of the world.

I will take another article from the Modern Miller, two days later, January 10, 1914:

Those who have been on the bull side of the corn market the past few weeks—those who overstayed the limit in order (as they believed) to be enabled to secure the last penny out of the shorts, have suffered no little. At least ole of them has been disposing of his cash corn to shippers and others that was taken in on December contracts. Argentine corn will continue to cut a big swath in the corn prices of the United States, and they are certain to prove quite bearish in character. That country will have a crop of corn of over 380,000,000 bushels, and the merchants there have already commenced to force their new grain on the markets for the Old World. During the past few days 1,000,000 bushels of Argentine corn arrived in ports of the United States, and there have already been 3,000,000 bushels imported since the duty was removed. According to most recent advices there are now 15 vessels en route to the United States either loaded with corn or loading. All advices from that far-away country are of most excellent crop prospects. One of the local elevator concerns bought a cargo of corn from Argentina c. 1. f. Galveston, Tex., at 3 cents under the Kansas City May price. It will be a difficult matter for the United States farmers to cope with the cheaply raised corn of Argentine Republic, as farmers wages down there, as well as the price of land, is greatly below that in the United States. There is already some talk among the grain men of the United States of rescinding the law which permits corn from the Southern Hemisphere coming in free of duty. This grain was admitted free because of the high cost of living and as well as the partial loss by drought of the corn crop in the United States.

I have here another article on the Argentine trade generally which is from the Modern Miller of January 24, only a few days ago. I will read it, Mr. President:

THE EFFECT OF ARGENTINE CORN.

As a corn producer Argentina is forging rapidly to the front and in 1912 was credited with a crop of 296,000,000 bushels. The great bulk of this goes for export, and home consumption is relatively very small, as compared with domestic consumption in the United States. Argentina is essentially a cattle and sheep country, and the 1912 census shows 29,000,000 cattle and 80,000,000 sheep. As a hog raiser it has scarcely begun, and while packers are stimulating the production of hogs, the census of 1912 shows only 3,000,000 head of swine. For this reason Argentina has jumped into first place as an exporter of corn, and having recently found a highly profitable market in the States there is every reason to believe that corn growing will be increased.

As to the effect of exportations to this market, Finley, Barrell & Co., of Chicago, recently said:

"Attracted by the high prices prevailing, Argentina will have shipped and sold in this country some 10,000,000 bushels of her old corn crop, and is planning on marketing her exportable surplus from the new crop, now rapidly approaching maturity, in amount 250,000,000 bushels. Some of this corn has even now been contracted for, and it is being freely offered at prices 8 cents to 10 cents a bushel under ours."

And ours is low enough, considering the small crop, consider-

And ours is low enough, considering the small crop, considering the price the American farmer has to pay for his labor and the value that he must invest in lands and other property.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BRADY. From what paper is the Senator reading? Mr. McCUMBER. From the Modern Miller. I believe published in St. Louis. I continue the quotation from Finley, Barrell & Co., of Chicago:

Even should our market decline, Argentina would still be a strong competitor in eastern and southern territory.

Only about 20 per cent of our corn crop ever moves from the farm and the Argentina surplus is sufficiently large to menace the domestic markets, as it figures 40 per cent of our total movement from farms, Since November 1 through this cause we have lost a market for fully 15,000,000 bushels of our corn.

The size of the Argentine corn and the Argentine and Canadian oat crop will have great bearing on the future trend of values in our markets. We are facing the fact that our prices in this country are subject to world conditions as they never were before in the history of the grain trade.

The Modern Miller adds:

Had anyone suggested a few years ago that Argentina would be a national factor in our domestic corn trade the statement would have appeared substantially foolish.

It was said it was foolish even last summer. Not only that, but it was declared that it was foolish to presume that the farmer got any benefit from any tariff on any of his products, and that he ought not to be longer deluded with that folly. I think he is getting a little "undeluded," at least in my section of the country, now. The Modern Miller proceeds:

It would not now be safe to predict that Argentina in the course of a few years to come will not invade our markets with wheat, to the extent of making wheat prices on our coast very strong rivals of prices at the most remote interlor points. Millers may have some interesting developments from Argentine free wheat that will prove as surprising as the corn importations.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that Argentina has removed the duty on her wheat so as to get the benefit of the countervailing provision in our own law, and that now Argentine wheat can come into our markets free of duty. It was about 10 days or two weeks ago that the Argentine Congress adopted it and it is now the law

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to give but one more statement here. In November, 1912, we imported 43,726 head of cattle, valued at $826,000; in November, 1913, we imported 123,118 head of cattle, valued at $3,306,723; and they will be coming in much more rapidly in the near future.

Mr. President, I again appeal to the other side of the Chamber to give us the relief that we are entitled to as the farmers and producers of the country. It will not be charged up to the consumer whatever. Let us remember that the farmers in this country pay the taxes of the country. They are our own citizens. They have to live upon our American farms. They furnish us the best, the safest, the most patriotic of our American citizenship. We ought to increase and not decrease the number.

I do not care a continental what it costs to produce a bushel of wheat, a bushel of potatoes or corn, or a dozen eggs in Canada or in Argentina. What I want is that the American farmer shall have the American market until his condition is raised to an extent that it will square with the condition of other like intelligent labor in other lines of business in the United States, until a day or a month of labor upon the American farm will bring back in comforts and luxuries and the necessities of life just as much as the same amount of equally intelligent labor will bring anywhere else in the United States. That is all the farmer is asking for, nothing more and nothing less, and that is what he is entitled to receive. With the inexhaustible fields of Mexico and of South America that have scarcely yet been touched with the plow, with the great surplus that lies to the north of us and must be there for years to come, we are at the mercy of all the cereal-producing countries of the world, and you will soon drive us down to a condition in which we will just be able to live.

Of course we will live. Of course as long as the farmer can raise wheat he is not going to starve. As long as he raises a sheep or a cow he will at least be able to dress himself in the skins of those animals. So he will probably continue to exist; but he is entitled to live just the same as you and I. He is entitled for the same number of hours to the same results. You have raised the wages of the trainmen so that they are getting from $4 to $5 per day for eight hours of labor, as compared with the farmer and his wife and his adult boy and girl, who are receiving a net of 20 cents a day. After you have raised these prices until the railways may not make enough to pay their dividends, then you will fall back and say "Now we will raise your freight, and give you a chance to get back." At whom? Get back at this man who has a net earning capacity of 20 cents a day. He will pay this higher freight.

We will not grumble if you will just modify your ideas a little and give him the American market. He will not ask you for any bigger protection than you give to the manufacturer. If the manufacturer is entitled to 33 per cent protection, with the price he pays for his labor, give your farmer your 33 per cent protection. He is entitled to every cent of it, and a little more of it than is the manufacturer.

Mr. President, I have suggested a way in which the Senator from Georgia can save the American farmer $3,000,000,000 dollars in the next nine months, and it will give him more happiness, a thousand times over, than a hundred of these bills that will pat him on the back and tell him how deep to spade his garden in order to raise turnips or cabbages. Just give him an opportunity to have a market for the things that he sells and I think he will be able to take care of himself.

I am willing to help disseminate this knowledge; I have no doubt but that it is a good thing, but what I insist is that the other thing is worth so enormously much more to him that you ought to give him the benefit of that which he needs to-day rather than the superior knowledge that you are going to give him some time from to-day.

Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Georgia another question, so as to get a little information about another feature of his bill. For instance, if you will take volume 26 of the Statutes at Large you will find the conditions of the grant to the agriculture schools. On page 418 of the law referred to in both the Lever bill and the bill introduced by the Senator from Georgia I find this provision:

Georgia I find this provision:

Provided, That in any State in which there has been one college established in pursuance of the act of July 2, 1862, and also in which an educational institution of like character has been established, or may be hereafter established and is now aided by such State from its own revenue, for the education of colored students in agriculture and the mechanic arts, however named or styled, or whether or not it has received money heretofore under the act to which this act is an amendment, the legislature of such State may propose and report to the Secretary of the Interior a just and equitable division of the fund to be received under this act between one college for white students and one institution for colored students established as aforesaid, which shall be divided into two parts and paid accordingly, and thereupon such institution for colored students shall be entitled to the benefits of this act and subject to its provisions as much as it would have been if it had been included under the act of 1862, and the fulfillment of the foregoing provisions shall be taken as a compliance with the provision in reference to separate colleges for white and colored students.

Now turning to the hill itself it will first he settled that the

Now, turning to the bill itself, it will first be noticed that the purpose of the grant to the agricultural colleges, which is specifically directed to the proposition that where any State has an agricultural college for colored as well as for white people which would receive the benefit under that act-that is, receive the funds that were derived from the sale of those lands. I would naturally assume that when the Senator's bill refers to the same act and assumes to add to it and carry out the beneficent intendment of the old law by extending the powers and benefits that might be derived under it, the provisions of the old law should be safeguarded. But I notice also a provision on page 2, a portion of which I will read:

The benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts" (12 Stat. L., p. 503), and of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 417), agricultural extension work which shall be carried on in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture—

Then comes the provision-

Provided, That in any State in which two or more such colleges have been or hereafter may be established the appropriations hereinafter made to such State shall be administered by such college or colleges as the legislature of such State may direct.

I would say from what I know of conditions generally that the purpose of this exception was that as a natural result the State would, of course, provide, where there are two colleges-one for white and one for colored—that this appropriation should go to the white school only and that the colored school would be cut off from the added appropriation.

Now, if the original grant, which was equally for the colored schools, has been beneficial, if the intendment of Congress at that time has proved to be for the best interests of the people of the State where they have those two colleges, it would naturally seem to me that the same rule ought to be continued.

I know that the Senator would naturally answer that the State can take care of that and use its own judgment; but I am assuming, which I think perhaps I am justified in doing, that if the State is allowed only a given quantity, in all probability the legislature of that State will deem that it is wise that the full sum should be expended by or for the college having only

I think that would be the natural result. It may be correct; but if it is correct, I should like to have some reasons or statistics or something given to me that will justify me in believing that it ought to be left with the State, believing, as I do, that the State will make that discrimination.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is an amendement on that subject which will be presented later. I shall then undertake to show reasons why the amendment is unsound, and I think I can satisfy the Senator from North Dakota that the way to do the greatest benefit to negroes engaged in agriculture is to follow the provision of the bill as it is written. I will not at this time discuss it, because I think perhaps it will be better to wait until the Senator from Washington presents his amendment. He has an amendment to offer carrying out the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, and when he presents it I will show from the standpoint of one thoroughly familiar with the negro farmers of the State containing more negroes than any other State in the United States that our plan for handling this matter is the one which will benefit them most.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right on that point, if I may press the matter a little further to the Senator, I notice that he uses this negro population as a basis by which he is to secure a given sum of money; but it would rather look as though he would exclude them when it comes to the basis of the spending of the money. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. On the contrary, we appropriate now in the State of Georgia about $50,000 a year for demonstration work, and no class of our citizens receive a greater benefit from it than our negro population. We do the work fully and thoroughly, and we are doing all we possibly can with it, without discrimination, to make them better farmers. When I call attention to that a little more fully I think the Senator will agree with me.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator right now if they are being advanced as farmers?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are; but it is a difficult task. I believe that this demonstration work is the only way by which we can advance them-by having the work done in their presence, bringing them to see the demonstration work when it is tried on white men's farms, gathering them together and show-ing them just what is being done. That is now the policy that is being pursued by our farm demonstrators under our State appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is it being used upon the black man's farm as well as upon the white man's farm? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know to what extent the colored population are owners of farms in Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are conducting farm work largely by what is known as the system of cropping.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are merely renters? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not exactly renters. are owners, they are given an opportunity to cultivate land under the direction of a demonstrator. Where they are croppers, the cropper is on his leased land. We have negro croppers who have been on the same land for many years. Under that system the landlord furnishes them, when they need it, their supplies to help carry them through the season. they can be induced to do so, they take an acre of their land and work it under rules given by a demonstrator. Wherever the demostration is conducted, they are brought to see it and taught, to the extent they can learn, just as much as any other class of farmers. I believe that we are doing more to help them in my State by this work than by anything we have ever done for them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I confess I believe the Senator from Georgia is better able to determine, and the legislature of his State can probably better determine, what is for the interest of both the colored population and the white population of Georgia than I, who have never been in that State. I am willing to concede a great deal. I confess, however, that at the present time Congress, having intimated its purpose that a portion of the funds which arise from the sale of public lands in Georgia should be for the benefit of a colored agricultural college

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The negro school-agricultural and industrial; and I will say to the Senator that the president of the colored agricultural industrial school has found it extremely difficult to induce the negro boys at his college to take up agri-I was very much disposed, when I was governor of the State, to urge legislation forcing agriculture upon them to a greater extent than they were choosing it.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I desire to know. I wish to whether it has been a success with those colored boys?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not much in the line of agriculture, unless they are almost compelled to select it. They take the industrial side of the school; they take the varied lines of work—shoemaking, saddle making, handling leather, brick-making, and carpentering. They all, or nearly all of them, insist upon taking a trade instead of taking agriculture in the schools, to such an extent that I almost felt that we ought to force agriculture upon them. I was inclined to believe that we ought to force agriculture upon them and prepare them for teachers in the negro schools, where their knowledge of agriculture would make them more proficient in their work in the rural schools. I only yielded at the insistence of those connected with the school. Scarcely any of the students, or almost a negligible per cent of them, take the agricultural course.

The way in which we find we have to improve the negro farmer is through our farm demonstrations. We are doing a good deal of work. It is slow-to change any system of farming is slow-but one of the benefits that I hope is to come, and which is now coming, to the State in which I live from our farm demonstration work is through improving the negro farmer, and I think we are doing it slowly. We invite them to our agricultural trains; we especially make an effort to explain to them what is being done. We invite them to the demonstration fields; we encourage them to take an acre and try these experiments themselves. And in this demonstration work the negro farmer is getting benefit, though it is conducted exclusively from the State College of Agriculture, where there are many very able and very scientific students of agriculture.

Much of our land in Georgia is farmed by negroes and owned by white men, who own large tracts. They seek to obtain a class of negroes who will take a tract and stay on it perma-There are large farms in the State on which there are negroes who have been on the same land for a number of years. Men in control of these farms, whenever there is anything in the line of advanced agriculture in their neighborhood, almost require their negro croppers to go and see and study, so that they may improve in the work. The white landlord furnishes the live stock, he furnishes the supplies, and receives a percentage of the net returns of the farm. He is almost as much interested as is the negro himself that the negro may become a good farmer. Every effort is being made to stimulate the negro to a higher degree of proficiency upon the farm and to keep him from rushing to town.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, if the Senator's views agree, as I suppose they do, with the views of the people of his State, that the agricultural feature of the colored institution is scarcely a success, and that better results would obtain if that school were made an industrial one, then why does not the State of Georgia itself make that change and take all of the funds that would come from the sale of public lands under the old law for the benefit of the white agricultural college?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We do not think so. We are hoping to stimulate a larger number who will take a course of agriculture in the schools. We think that they make a mistake not to give more attention to agriculture, but it is difficult to force the proposition on them. The opportunity is given. We have an experimental farm in connection with our negro agricultural school, and we encourage the students all we can to take a course in agriculture, and we find the predisposition with the large majority who go to school to take a trade in preference. I

We do not want to stop it, for we continue to hope that the number will increase who will learn more of the farm.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had hoped that the spirit of the law which I have quoted could be carried out in the State of Georgia and be carried out with our agricultural population, because, with the negro as well as with the white race, I think society is always benefited by getting as many of them as possible into the rural districts; and if the action of the legislature, under this proposed law, should deprive the negro college of the benefits that otherwise would accrue to it if the fund were divided between the colleges, and thereby keep more of their students within the city and send fewer of them out into the country, I should be greatly disappointed to see the bill pass in that form.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No benefit accrues to either college from this fund. None of this fund is spent at either of the The responsibility of the college is to select the colleges. trained demonstrators who, throughout the State, will in the counties do this work. Not a dollar of the money is to be spent to benefit the college itself. All the fund is to be spent on the men in their work alongside of the homes of the farmers.

Mr. McCUMBER. It certainly is in connection with the college.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Only in this way, that the faculty of the college will select the demonstrators and select their work, as they now do in the State of Georgia. The faculty of the agricultural college select demonstrators and assign them to work in different parts of the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; that is a part of the work of that college, and the payment for those demonstrators will be borne by this fund.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As it is now borne by the State appropriation, but those demonstrators conduct demonstrations in the counties and give instruction both to blacks and whites.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield merely for

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one word further. It would be utterly impossible to obtain from the negro college suitable men to do that work.

Mr. McCUMBER. Because of the incapability, lack of learning, or disinclination to adopt that line?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For two reasons: In the first place, a negro teacher could not successfully conduct the demonstrations in the counties. His own race would not accept his instruction nearly so quickly as they would the instruction of a trained white man.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the white race certainly would not. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And, in the next place, there are not graduated from the negro college men prepared for the work. Among our negroes, whenever they take an advanced course, they always seek the classical colleges. There are several excellent colleges in our State, supported from outside our State largely, but wherever a negro advances the tendency is to seek that line of instruction.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will wait for a few moments, I should like to call attention to the fact that there are committee amendments pending. If we could dispose of them, then the bill would be open to amendment from the floor.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that I was not aware of that fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated.

The Secretary. The amendments reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are, in section 3, page 3, line 20, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$300,000" and to insert "$600,000"; in line 22, before the word "years," to strike out "nine" and to insert "four"; and in line 23, after the words "exceeding by," to strike out "$300,000" and insert $600,000," so as to read:

Provided further, That there is also appropriated an additional sum of $600,000 for the fiscal year following that in which the foregoing appropriation first becomes available, and for each year thereafter for four years a sum exceeding by $600,000 the sum appropriated for each preceding year.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In section 3, page 4, line 2, after the words "sum of," I move to strike out "$3,000,000" and to insert "$4,800,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by Mr. Sterling, and read to the end of section 1.

Mr. STERLING. If I may make the suggestion, I think there is hardly necessity for reading the remainder of the proposed substitute for House bill 7951, for the reason that the remaining sections follow the House bill, except as to the last committee amendments suggested by the Senator from Georgia, so that the remainder of the amendment is understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the further reading of this proposed substitute will be dispensed with and the entire amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The entire amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following:

The entire amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following:

That in order to ald the college or colleges in each State now receiving or which may hereafter receive the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts (12 Stat. L., p. 593), and of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890 (28 Stat. L., p. 417), in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same in inaugurating and carrying on college agricultural extension work, appropriations are made as hereinafter specified: Provided, That such college agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not attending or residents in said colleges in the several communities, and imparting to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, lectures, publications, and otherwise: Provided further, That in any State in which two or more such colleges have been or hereafter may be established the appropriations hereinafter made to such State shall be apportioned to and administered by such colleges, respectively, as the legislature of such State may direct.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of said college agricultural extension work and the necessary printing and distributing of information in connection with the same, there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such as a such as a legislature of such State, or provided by State, county, college, or local authority for the maintenance of such college agricultural extension work.

SEC. 3. That the sums hereby appropriated for extension work shall be annually paid in equal semiannual payments on the 1st day of January and July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the Treasury upon the United States, to the treasurer or other officer of the State duly authorized by the laws of the State to receive the same; and such officer shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of September of each year a detailed statement of the amount so received during the previous fiscal year and of its disbursement on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 4. That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officer of any State for the support and maintenance of college agricultural extension work, as provided in this act, shall by any action or contingency be diminished or lost or be misapplied it shall be replaced by said State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to said State, and no portion of said moneys shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings, or the purchase or rental of land or in college-course teaching, lectures in colleges, promoting agricultural trains, or any other purpose not specified in this act, and not more than 5 per cent of each annual appropriation shall be applied to the printing and distribution of publications. It shall be the duty of each of said colleges annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations in the direction of extension work as defined in this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures from all sources for this purpose, a copy volved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the expiration of the Congress next succeeding a session of the legislature of any State from which a certificate has been withheld, in order that the State may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of Agriculture. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make an annual report to Congress of the receipts, expenditures, and results of the college agricultural extension work in all of the States receiving the benefits of this act and also whether the appropriation of any State has been withheld, and if so, the reasons therefor.

SEC. 7. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course, I do not desire to interrupt the discussion of the proposed substitute. I only want to say that before the substitute is voted upon I desire an opportunity to offer an amendment to the house bill, and I think, under our rules, either the bill we are now considering or the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota may be perfected. If I am in error about that, I would be glad to be advised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota is a substitute for the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair has uniformly been that amendments should be offered to the original bill before a substitute is in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I remember a former ruling of the Chair to that effect. I have an amendment to offer at the proper time to the original bill, and I want it voted upon before the vote is taken on the proposed substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are other amendments to the original bill, they will be considered before the substitute is acted upon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, has the Senator from South Dakota offered his amendment as a substitute for the bill?

Mr. STERLING. As an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand the committee amendments have all been offered, and I wish to offer an amendment to the House bill now pending, which has been substituted for the Senate bill. I move that, on page 3, line 2, after the word "manner," there be inserted the words "and by such agents," so that it will read:

And this work shall be carried on in such manner and by such agents as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I did not hear the

Mr. WILLIAMS. Line 2, on page 3, after the word "manner." I will read it again. If the amendment I have proposed is inserted, then the provision, beginning in line 1, page 3, will read

And this work shall be carried on in such manner and by such

The language I propose to insert is "and by such agents"as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this

My object in that is, if the State agricultural colleges and their faculties at times should, in a thoroughly unjustifiable way, become the victims of political agitation, so that men should be put in or put out because of political reasons, changes of party, or changes of control by factions within a party, that there might not be built up a political machine in the State. I believe that if the Secretary of Agriculture and the colleges must agree upon the agents, there will then be no danger at all of its taking place, but there might be some danger of it if the naming of the agents were left entirely to the State agricultural colleges. Not in many States, I am glad to say—in very few, and perhaps in not any—is it true, but there have been some complaints made in some States that with a changing administration there would happen to be a changing faculty now and then. I think, upon general principles, it would be better, as this is a cooperative bill, anyhow, if the State authority and the Federal authority should agree upon the agents to do the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask to have the amendment read at the desk? I did not hear it as stated by the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 3, line 2, after the word "manner," it is proposed to insert "and by such agents," so as to read:

And this work shall be carried on in such manner and by such agents as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can understand why the Senator from Mississippi offers that amendment. I sympathize very cordially with his earnest desire to keep politics out of this work. The committee were confronted with three lines of thought. One was the line represented by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who urgently opposed even the requirement that the plans for the work should be submitted by the colleges of agriculture to the Department of Agriculture for approval before any part of the fund could be obtained by the State. I understand that the amendment which he has just offered makes such a change in this bill, and is intended to take away from the Department of Agriculture even the power to approve the plan of the work in each of the States before a State can receive the appropriation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken in that respect; it does not take away the power of the Department of Agriculture to approve the plans or to pass upon the work proposed by the agricultural college or experiment station; it simply strikes out the word "cooperative," and in effect, I think, gives to the agricultural college the initiative in all this work. That is the plan and object of the proposed substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It at least intends to lessen the connection of the Agricultural Department with the work. It is in the line of enlarging the power of the State college and lessening the power of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me now

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to address myself to the Senate for a little while on the proposed substitute, which I shall offer at the proper time, but after amendments to the House bill have been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think perhaps I had best proceed a little further in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

In the discussion a few days ago the Senator from South Dakota read from Dean Davenport a criticism upon the line of objection, even to the power given to the Department of Agriculture by the bill as we had presented it. We were confronted with some of the professors, some of the men connected with the colleges, who preferred that unrestrained power should be given to the colleges of agriculture. On the other hand, there were those who agreed with the view of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that it would be best even that the agents employed should be subject to the approval of the Department of Agriculture. The final result of the conferences and study was the adoption of a middle course providing cooperation, with the power to supervise and approve the line of work by the Department of Agriculture, and leaving to the colleges the selection of the agents.

It was thought that the faculty of a college in a particular State, familiar with the men who had graduated from the college, familiar with the men in the State who had shown especial knowledge and especial skill in applying advanced methods on the farm, would be more capable of selecting the best men to do the demonstration work than the man whose vision must rest upon 48 States rather than upon one.

I would certainly be distressed if I thought it possible that the faculty of one of these colleges would be moved in the selection of a demonstrator except by the desire to procure the services of the man who could do the best work.

We finally framed the bill as it is, as the result of a concensus of opinion that we could rely upon the faculties of the colleges to make the selections free from any political influence, free from any influence except the spirit of an educational leader earnestly desirous of carrying the best information to those who are to be its recipients. We concluded that if the department here were to pass upon these men, then the idea would perhaps exist in the State that Senators and Representatives could be called on to confer with the department about it and to exercise some political influence over the selection, and, as we were seeking to take these selections entirely out of politics and to make them purely educational, we shaped the bill

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened with attention to what the Senator from Georgia has said. I think that the fairest way to select these agents, considering the fact that the State colleges of agriculture and the Agricultural Department are to cooperate in the work, is that the agents should be named by cooperation. It may be true that a faculty in no State would ever be controlled by political or factional reasons remaining instructors of the college.

in the selection of these men; I am not willing to admit that it is true; but suppose it were true; then I say it is equally true that the Department of Agriculture could hardly be expected to be controlled by any motive except that of getting the best men. If you put the two together, and the agent must be indorsed by both, then you have undoubtedly, as to both sides of the equation, prevented all possibility of any other motive controlling than that of getting the best man; one counteracts

The whole spirit of the bill is one of cooperation, and, therefore, the instrument of the work created by the bill ought to be an agent selected by cooperation. I hope the Senate will take that view of it and adopt the amendment. If my amendment were adopted, the Federal Agricultural Department being upon the one side and the State agricultural college upon the other, it would be impossible that they should ever come to any common agreement to select an agent for political reasons.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I fear that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi would have the very effect he desires to avoid. These farm demonstrators are, in fact, professors of the agricultural college, carrying on a course of instruction, not within the college walls, but throughout the State. The character of their work, however, is not essentially different from that done in the college itself. I should be very sorry if the faculty of the college of agriculture in my State

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me for just a second?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly. Mr. WILLIAMS. What part of the bill requires that they shall be professors in the agricultural college? If that is a part of the bill, I missed it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I say the demonstrators that are provided for here are in fact professors of the agricultural college.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember any provision of the bill that requires that they shall be. The present demonstrators, in very many cases, are not.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi must allow me my own terminology, at least. When the agricultural college employs a man or a woman to go about the State teaching to the people of the State the science of agriculture or the science of home economy, and, indeed, when it establishes a chair of applied science in agriculture, the man or woman so employed becomes in fact a professor of that educational institution, carrying on the work, as I said before, in the homes of the people or on the farms of the people instead of carrying it on within the college campus.

If, in order to appoint one of the persons who is to carry on this work of education, the faculty of the college in my State were compelled to consult the Secretary of Agriculture, and could not appoint anyone to expend the joint money of the General Government and of the State without the sanction of the Secretary of Agriculture, immediately the Secretary of Agriculture would be surrounded with just those influences that now gather about his office whenever he seeks to appoint an employee who is not controlled by the rules of the civil service, and I am not suggesting that these demonstrators should be classified civil-service employees. It is a matter with which the agricultural colleges of the States ought to deal. If we can not trust them to appoint fit, competent people to give this instruction, then we ought not to make the appropriation at all; and if the agricultural college in Iowa were put under the Secretary of Agriculture to the extent of requiring its instructors to be appointed by the mutual authority of both the State and the General Government, I should have great doubt about the practical outcome of the bill. While I know the motive of the Senator from Mississippi is to exclude all improper influence, I fear the effect would be to excite it, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Georgia if there is anything in the bill providing how these demonstrators shall be selected, and by whom?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill leaves it to the agricultural colleges to make the selection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they are to become professors in the colleges, how are the professors now appointed in the Senator's

Mr. CUMMINS. They are all appointed by the faculty in the college that is doing the work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean by the trustees of the college?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. Of course I do not know how it may be elsewhere, but in our State the faculty of the college appoints the instructors. The trustees appoint some of the chief professors who constitute the faculty. The faculty selects the Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing here which says that these demonstrating agents shall be selected by the faculty of these colleges

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; I did not say so.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I am saying that there is not. The bill is silent concerning the question. It is indefinite as to who shall appoint. Then I should take it for granted that if the Senator's theory be true, and if upon their appointment they would become professors of the college, they would be appointed as the present professors are appointed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose they would be appointed according to the rules which governed the particular college.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am talking about.
Mr. CUMMINS. If the rules of the college in Mississippi provided that all the employees of the agricultural college should be appointed by the board of trustees, then these demonstrators would be so appointed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not all the employees; all the professors.

Mr. CUMMINS. If, on the contrary, the rules provided that the faculty should appoint these men engaged in agricultural extension work, then they would be appointed by the faculty. In our State these particular people are appointed by the faculty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When there is a vacancy in the professorships in the faculty of the agricultural and mechanical college in Iowa, how is it filled?

Mr. CUMMINS. A vacancy among the professors in the faculty of our agricultural college is filled by the board of trustees. Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought. That is the case, too, I think, in Mississippi. Now, who appoints the board of Mr. CUMMINS. In our State the board of trustees was formerly elected by the members of the general assembly. is the way it was when I used to have anything to do with it. Since that time we have established a board of educational control, whose members are appointed by the governor and their appointments confirmed by the senate; and this board now appoints or selects the professors and all the other officers of the institution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that board itself is appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the State senate?
Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Yes.
That is just what I was coming to. Mr. WILLIAMS.

In some of the States, whenever one party succeeds another, or whenever one faction within a party succeeds another, com-plaint is made that there is a change in the personnel of these colleges-and in some of the States even in the State universities-to please the faction or the party which has gone into power. In other words, it is complained that this board, which is substantially a board which may be political, and frequently is, makes use of these institutions of learning for the purpose of advancing the interests of the party or the faction in power.

Now, suppose this man is to become a professsor in the col-There is nothing in the bill that says he is. Of course, I have no right to quarrel with the terminology of the Senator from Iowa, but I think I did have a right to ask him what it was in the bill that led him to that inference. As I first understood him, I misunderstood him. I thought he meant that these people who were to be demonstrators were already professors, and I thought clearly there was nothing of that sort in the bill. I find nothing in the bill that makes them professors. They are mere agents of the agricultural college to do certain work. They might, I suppose, appoint an existing professor if they thought he would be fit for the work, and if they were going to have the work done at a time of the year when the college was not in session, or they might select somebody else. In any event, I think my point is well taken, that if he is appointed in the manner I suggest you cut off all possibilities of either political or factional influence behind him. In order to have any, you would have to have a conspiracy existing between the appointing power at the State agricultural col-lege and the Secretary of Agriculture here. That, I take it, could not in the wildest imagination be conceivable as ever happening.

The Federal Government is furnishing the money. The State is furnishing a part of the plant and is doing its part of the work. The work is cooperative. The agent should be responsible to both parties in his appointment, at any rate, even if not in his continuance in office later on.

If I do not make my point clear, or, rather, if I do not convince your judgment that my amendment ought to be adopted, I think it is clear that the bill ought to indicate somewhere how these agents are to be appointed. I should have no objection if it said that the agents were to be selected by the existing faculty or by the faculty of the agricultural and mechanical college, because they are so remote from the original political body that constituted them that, although they may themselves be moved by political influences, it is hardly possible or hardly probable that they would exert political influence in the selec-tion of the agents; but I think it would be better to have them selected by both the State agricultural college and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. When the bill recites that college extension work may be inaugurated in connection with certain colleges, does not the Senator believe that extension work becomes a part of the college work just as much as the work in the classroom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly what the bill says; and this is a college extension work through and through, under the direction of the college.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does not the Senator believe the college should have the appointment of the people or the agents, the teachers or the instructors, to carry on the college extension

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I had the view expressed by the Senator from Iowa, it would make me doubt it, because he says they become professors of the college. If so, then they ought to be selected as other professors are selected.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is a contortion of language.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I say is that they are the agents to do this work; they are the employees to do this work, and that is as far as I say I can go. They are the employees of whom? Or, rather, of whom ought they be the employees? They ought to be the employees of the two cooperating forces that create the work.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator a question. We are already giving to these colleges in the various States certain amounts of public moneys to carry on certain work in the colleges. If the Government of the United States should be a party to the appointment of these agents or instructors or teachers, by the same reasoning, why should not the Government also have the oversight of the instructors of the agricultural colleges as they now exist and under the appropriations which we from time to time give them? I can see no difference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is not quite the same question as this.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want the Senator from Mississippi to remember that I said that these people became, in fact, professors because they became instructors for the college in carrying on its work. Of course the Senator from Mississippi did not understand me to say that by their appointment they became entitled to the rank of professors and thereby became members of the faculty of the particular institution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator says I ought not to have so understood him, of course that is another thing; perhaps not; but I did so understand him, and I merely expressed my understanding of what I understood him to want me to understand. At any rate, he used the language that they were or became professors of these colleges.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi is simply turning away from the real point he desires to make in order to criticize what he regards as a verbal mistake.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no, I am not. If I misunderstood the Senator, it was because the Senator said what made me misunderstand him. If the Senator does not mean that, and merely means that these people became the agents of the college for doing certain work of instruction, there would have been no question about that, of course. They do demonstration instruction work, and they are doing it not only for the college but for the Federal Government, and it seems to me they ought to be appointed by the cooperative voice of the two.

Of course there could have been no dispute between us upon the question that the character of their work is instructive, and that therefore they are instructors; but I misunderstood the Senator if that was what he meant. Having misunderstood him, and having confessed that I misunderstood him, and it being now confessed upon all sides that they will not become professors in the college, they are what I said they were—the agents to do this work. Being the agents to do this work, which is work of instruction and of college extension, as the Senator from Wyoming says, it seems to me that you ought either to provide that they shall be appointed by both of these parties, or else you ought clearly to provide that they shall be selected by the faculty of the agricultural college; one or the

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the difference between a professor and an instructor of a college may be a little difficult That will depend entirely upon the rules of the to define. particular institution. We usually speak of a professor as being a little higher in grade, as he is usually higher in pay, than an instructor. In some colleges all the professors are members of the faculty. In other colleges but a few of the professors are members of the faculty or governing board.

The point I was attempting to make was that these people became instructors for the college, and in so becoming they bore the same relation to the college that professors bear to the college, namely, it was their business to carry forward the instruction of the college. Now, whether or not they would have the rank of members of the faculty is entirely immaterial. One of these instructors might be a professor and might be a member of the faculty; another of them might not be a member of the faculty. That would depend entirely upon the choice of the college itself as to the person who should do the particular work.

In our State a great deal of this work is done by professors of the college who have been and who are members of the faculty of the college. That might continue to be true under The college could employ whomsoever it pleased, this bill. and it could give that person whatever rank it desired to give him, whether professor or instructor or tutor or any other appellation or name the college might see fit to bestow

Mr. WILLIAMS. But does not the Senator see that these agents-call them by whatever name you please, instructors or anything else-are not either professors or instructors in the college nor engaged in college work? They are engaged in extension work; and it is provided in the bill that they shall not be engaged in work at the college for the students in the college. They are, therefore, agents to carry on an outside work for the benefit of the farmers of the country. They may be instructors for the college, but they are not instructors in the college nor at the college

It may be that one who is already a professor at the college and in the college may be selected to do the demonstration instruction outside of the college in the extension work, but the probability is that, with the amount of money to be expended for this purpose, it is going to be found utterly impossible to do the work with the faculty and the instructors of the colleges, and they are going outside to get other men. They must do it. They can not do this work effectively in any other way.

So the question suggested itself to my mind, How are those men going to be selected? The faculty of the college will be an excellent judge of their fitness, their competency, their scientific attainments. So will the Secretary of Agriculture. It struck me, therefore, that the best way to select them would be by the mutual indorsement of the two bodies; but if that does not meet with the approval of the Senate I do submit that you ought to define here, somehow, the way in which they are to be selected, and not merely infer from the purposes of the bill that the faculty is to select them, because the faculty does not even select itself or fill vacancies in its own board.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly. Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Mississippi suggest that these men should be appointed by the faculty or by the trustees of the agricultural college?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My suggestion is that the work shall be carried on by such agents as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college. "The State agricultural college" means the faculty, of course; but if there is thought to be any trouble about that I will make it read "and the faculty of the State agricultural college.

Mr. GRONNA. I should prefer that those words be put in. Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want the board of trustees to select them. I do not want the legislature to select them. I do not want a governor appointing them by and with the consent of a State senate.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me further, I be lieve there is a great deal of force in the argument made by the Senator from Mississippi. I am free to admit that I have known of political influences in agricultural colleges, and they were not Democratic institutions either; that is, the persons in authority did not belong to the Democratic Party. It perhaps might be better to have cooperation-to have the Secretary of Agriculture cooperate with the faculty of the college in making the selections-because the men should be employed for that particular work as demonstrators. In my part of the country they are not known as professors; they are known as demonstrators. I know some of those men who have been in the employ of the college for four or five years. None of them are professors, nor are they known by the title of professor.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether he thinks the agricultural college authorities are not able themselves to select those who are to be demonstrators?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean the faculty of the agricultural college?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; the faculty of the agricultural college

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am rather inclined to think they are. I know they are fully competent to judge, and I am rather inclined to think they would do it fairly; but this bill does not leave them to select them. The bill is silent as to how they shall be selected; and the bill at least ought to say who shall select them, if it says nothing else,

Mr. STERLING. Does not the Senator from Mississippl think it would be safe and proper to leave the selection of the demonstrators to the agricultural college authorities, who are acquainted with the conditions in the State in which the agricultural college is situated?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just a moment ago said that if my view of having these demonstrators selected mutually by the Secretary of Agriculture and the faculties of the colleges themselves was not adopted, then I thought we ought to adopt an amendment to permit them to be selected by the faculties of the agricultural colleges, so as to shut off all possibility of their being appointed by a governor by and with the advice and consent of the State senate, or selected by a legislature animated by factional or political motives,

I asked the Senator in charge of the bill, and he agrees with me that the bill is silent as to how they shall be selected. It ought to be made definite and specific. I would a good deal rather have the amendment I have offered adopted than to have them selected solely by the faculty; but if that amend-ment should not be adopted, I think an amendment ought to be adopted to let them be selected by the faculty. I think,

however, that my plan is better

Mr. STERLING. I call the Senator's attention to a statement made by Dr. Galloway, who, I think, is First Assistant Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, in the hearings lately had before the House committee.

Dr. Galloway was asked this question:

The men who go out to do this farm-demonstration work—will they continue to do that work under the appointment and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, as now?

That is the question. Dr. Galloway answered:

Yes; that is the plan. It is thought, however, that that work can be made more effective if it is coordinated fully with the work now being carried on in the States or the demonstration work to be inaugurated by the States.

So it would seem that for a large part of this work the Secretary of Agriculture would select the demonstrator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be true, the bill already provides for what I want; but the Senator is mistaken. Dr. Galloway. either did not understand the bill or the Senator has not understood the purport of the question and the answer.

I think what Dr. Galloway meant was that he thought, as a matter of fact, the men who are now out in the field, doing demonstration work, who are frequently detailed for that purpose from the Agricultural Department, would be employed to do so much of the work as they could do. Of course it would take two or three times the present force to do the work provided for under this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think that is what Dr. Galloway meant.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What does the Senator think he meant? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think he meant that this bill would not supplant the present activities of the department in that respect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He may have meant that-that this bill. would be additional to the work already done by the department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear his testimony, and I do not know what it was, except by hearing what was read a moment ago; but clearly under this bill there is no provision that the Secretary of Agriculture shall select these demonstrators, and the object of my amendment is that he shall have a say in selecting them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill. I will say that this simply includes the Territory of Hawaii in the operation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill,

That the word "State" wherever the same occurs herein shall be held to apply to and include any organized Territory of the United States which is now included under or is now receiving the benefit of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts" (12 Stat. L., 503), and of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, being chapter 841, 26 Statutes at Large, page 417.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have no objection to this amendment, but I think perhaps it needs an additional sentence, and it ought to read that $10,000 additional shall be appropriated for each Territory. We have $480,000 appropriated to the States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, this would necessitate a further amendment changing $480,000 to $490,000.

My purpose, Mr. President, was to have this extension work apply to all the work that is now being carried on under these That includes the Territory of Hawaii, which is now two acts. receiving the aid under the Morrill Act and the Hatch Act, and it was my purpose to have that included in the same general plan: in other words, that the plan should not be cut in two. Anything that will reach that end, of course, fills the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not objecting at all to what the Senator desires to accomplish. If we regard the Territorial problem as one now settled, there being but one Territory, a change of the figures from $480,000 to $490,000 would cover it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will read the amendment, I think he will see that that is provided for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have now but one Territory receiving the benefit of the land-grant fund.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is all.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose we should have another?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then if this amendment were the law we would have to provide an additional appropriation. This is the language:

That the word "State," wherever the same occurs herein, shall be held to apply to and include any organized Territory of the United States which is now included or is now receiving the benefit of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled, etc., and of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, etc.

It seems to me that language is sufficient, but if the Senator thinks it is not-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I merely wanted to be sure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. At any rate, this will be a Senate amendment, and the principle being that which it is necessary to put in, the conferees can adjust it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not myself object to the amendment. It seems to me to be wise to extend the benefit of the bill to Hawaii.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to another amendment, and I do it in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Had we not better dispose of the Senator's amendment first?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I thought it had been disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the The VICE PRESIDENT. amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer the following amend-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, section 8 ought to be changed to section 9, and the figures "$480,000," where they appear in the bill, should be changed to "$490,000."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that those changes be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer an amendment, and I offer it now, although I understand it is the purpose to adjourn immediately, in order that it may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 3, on page 4, line 12, strike out the words "rural population" and insert in lieu thereof the words "acres of improved land in farms," and in line 13 strike out the words "rural population" and insert the words "acres of improved land in farms," so as to read:

Such additional sums shall be used only for the purpose hereinbefore stated, and shall be allotted annually to each State by the Secretary of Agriculture and paid in the manner hereinbefore provided, in the proportion which the acres of improved land in farms of each State bears to the total acres of improved land in farms of all the States as determined by the next preceding Federal census.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 30, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-living God, our Father, look down from the heights of purity with compassion; bear with our infirmities, our weaknesses, our shortcomings, and impart unto us more of that quality of soul which lifts a man out of himself in times of stress and danger, that we may become heroes in the daily duties of life, sympathizing with each other's infirmities, and lend a hand. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself lest thou be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." In His sublime spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not press that.

Mr. MANN. I will not press it; I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order of no quorum.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12235, the fortifications appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R.

12235, the fortifications bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, general debate on this bill is limited to four hours. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12235, a bill to provide for fortifications and national defense. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, your Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the fortifications bill, have attempted to have accompany it a report that would show you in detail a financial statement touching not only this bill, but touching all previous fortifications bills from the inception of the original plan, known as the Endicott Board plan, for seacoast defense. I shall not now take the time of the committee by restating what is there printed touching the details of previous appropriations. It is sufficient at the present time to call attention to the fact that Of this the estimates in this bill amounted to $9,124,399.49. amount there has been recommended the sum of $5,175,200. In addition to that there is a contract authorization of $600,000 and a reappropriation of $265,000. Exclusive of the amount authorized for contract and reappropriation, the bill is slightly under the bill that was presented to the Congress last year. The fortifications bill in size is not a great bill; it is one of the small appropriation bills, and yet in the magnitude of the subjects with which it deals, with the influence that it has upon the military policy of this Government, it is second to no bill considered by the Congress. It not only carries provision for all the seacoast fortifications for the United States and its insular possessions, but it carries in addition provision for the mobile artillery and the ammunition therefor, for the Regular Army and Volunteer forces; and in the consideration of those questions, questions of fortifications for the United States and its insular possessions, in the consideration of questions touching the amount of field artillery for the Army, you have necessarily involved a consideration of the entire military policy of the United States.

Nearly every year we have a recurrence of war talk and what might be designated as war scares, usually coincident with the consideration of the Army and Navy bills.

Now, I have very little patience with that confidence that has been well described as the "valor of ignorance." one of those who believe that this country can any more disregard the lessons of history than any other country. I am not one who believes you can rest secure in the assumption that there will never be war in which the United States of America will be involved. Neither am I one who is willing to accept in its entirety the dire prophecies that are constantly made by the Army and Navy touching the danger that the country is in and its lack of preparation for war. Between those two extremes, the extreme of the man who rests confident in his ignorance of his own country's condition and of other countries' intentions, and the unusual zeal of a man working out the technical viewpoint of a life profession, is the position that I think Congress and the people of America ought to take. that I should say to you that, in the judgment of the committee that has considered this fortification bill, continental United States is not only well fortified, but is perhaps better fortified than any country in the world; certainly better fortified when you consider the area and territory which has to be considered. We have practically completed the fortification of continental United States, with the exception of certain work that is now being done at San Pedro, Cal., certain work that is contemplated being done to fortify the lower Chesapeake, and perhaps the addition of slight armament at one or two other points. In point of fact, there are many places in the United States proper that are overfortified, due to the fact of the increased draft of vessels, which no longer permits warships of the first class to approach near these fortifications, and due also to the greater range of guns and the greater efficiency and rapidity of fire in using the guns.

As to the insular possessions, the situation is not quite as it is in the United States, but it is sufficient to put at rest the fears that are constantly given expression to each year in consideration of these various bills. I do not know how accurate the statement in the paper yesterday afternoon was touching the testimony that was given before the Naval Affairs Committee. But if the statement therein contained was accurate, and I am inclined to think it was not, it is far from presenting to the people of America the true picture touching the condition of our insular possessions. It is not true, and it is nowhere near to being true, that the Philippines or the Hawaiian Islands could be taken by any enemy without practically serious effort. The condition of the Hawaiian Islands touching seacoast fortification is this: There is now completed in its entirety and turned over to the Artillery all of the seacoast fortifications that have been contemplated for the Hawaiian Islands, with the exception, as I now recall, of two 6-inch guns. In other words, if the Hawaiian Islands are not now adequately defended from sea attack, then the fault lies in the scheme of fortification for those islands, because this Congress, following the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations, has recommended every dollar that has been asked for, has provided for every gun has been stated would be required for the Hawaiian

Islands

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. GARNER. And this scheme, as I understand it, was worked out by the Army and Navy boards combined?

Mr. SHERLEY. The scheme was primarily the result of the Taft Board report, but has been modified from time to time, and has been modified with a complete knowledge of the view-point of the Navy and needs of the situation as voiced by both

Mr. GARNER. What I wanted to bring out was this point:
If the Hawaiian Islands are not now properly fortified, it is not the fault of Congress, but the fault of their advisers in the Navy and in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may anticipate the gentleman, but I believe his report indicates that you have added a supplementary protection to the Hawaiian Islands in so far as land protection is concerned.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I propose coming to that statement.

I have expressly stated that, touching the seacoast fortifications—the defense against sea attack—the Hawaiian Islands defense is practically complete, and when I say I mean in the sense that the guns are mounted, the ammunition is on hand, and the troops have charge of those fortifications. and are in a position to properly repel an attack from the sea.

There has, however, been presented to this committee, and there is recommended in this bill, provision looking to the land defense of the Hawaiian Islands. It was represented to the committee that we had expended something over $12,000,000 in the fortification of the Hawaiian Islands and in the creation of a naval base at Pearl Harbor; that the idea that it would be impossible to land troops upon the island of Oahu except in a few stated places was a mistaken idea; that it was possible that there might arise conditions under which there would be found a hostile force now on those islands and capable of being turned into an efficient fighting force in the event of a loss of control by sea; and that therefore it was desirable to defend Honolulu, Pearl Harbor, and the seacoast defenses by certain land de-We have accordingly carried in this bill not only the ratification of the transfer of certain guns that were taken from continental United States, from forts that no longer needed the armament, and placed in the Hawaiian Islands, together with the ammunition for those guns, but we also recommend an appropriation of some $457,000 for the purpose of constructing certain emplacements for guns in connection with this land defense. It is believed that the topography of that island is such as to permit of an inner line of defense in the form of what might be called a crescent that would embrace within its two points Honolulu, Pearl Harbor, and all of the seacoast defenses, and the project was one that appealed to the judgment of the committee and we have recommended all of the moneys that are asked in that regard.

But even without regard to the expenditure of this money there are now certain defenses, land defenses. improvised there that would make the taking of the Hawaiian Islands, even after the destruction of our fleet, a matter of considerable difficulty, and not the easy matter that is represented in various tales that are printed from time to time in the newspapers

Now, as to the Philippine Islands, we have completed the defense of Corregidor. Corregidor is one of the large islands that lie in Manila Bay, and which it is contemplated shall be made practically the Gibraltar of the East. The work on Corregidor is finished. The batteries there are in the hands of the Artillery, and all of the essentials that go to make those batteries efficient have been supplied, and there is practically nothing more to be done at Corregidor.

This is also true as to the fortification at Fort Wint, Grande Island, Subig Bay, which is a minor fortification, but which, to the extent that fortification was asked, has been granted and is completed in its entirety.

As to El Fraile, which is a little island about the size of a battleship, the top of which has been cut off, with the idea of putting thereon fortifications heavily protected by concrete and steel armament, the work is progressing rapidly; and it is only fair to say on behalf of the Congress that every dollar that has been asked in the past six years for the fortification of these islands in the Pacific has been given in its entirety, and the moneys have been supplied as fast as the physical work could go forward.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly indicate what is the program as to spending the $10,500,000 unexpended of the original plan for the fortification of our insular possessions?

Mr. SHERLEY. Briefly-because I do not desire to be diverted into that channel right now-it applies not only to the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands, but also to the fortification of Guam, Guantanamo, and Alaska, as I now recall.

The work at Fort Frank, Carabao Island, is very nearly completed, and at Fort Hughes, Caballo, it is being advanced as rapidly as may be.

Now, it is not true to-day, taking the physical condition of the fortifications in the Philippines as they exist now, that it would be a matter of but little trouble for any enemy to capture them. Of course, it is perfectly manifest that with the troops that we now have in the Philippines the islands as a whole could not be successfully held against any large invading army. Assuming that there was a destruction of our fleet, and that it was possible to put on those islands a hundred thousand men, or even a less number, of course it is manifest that we could not hope to hold those islands, and the defenses of the Philippines do not contemplate the defense of the entire archipelago; but they do contemplate a protection to Manila, and if that should be captured they do contemplate such a defense of Corregidor as would enable the Army there to hold out and to keep the flag flying from six months to a year, irrespective of any aid that might come from the Navy.

I make this statement—and I make it with emphasis—because I do not feel that it is fair either to the Army or to the Navy, or fair to the Congress of the United States, that an impression should go abroad that we are totally unprepared for war and for any contingency, no matter how slight, that might arise.

If it were true that the condition was as deplorable as is sometimes represented, it would be a tremendous indictment not only of Congress but of the Army and of the Navy, for in the 10 years that I have been in Congress we have expended for the Army over a thousand million dollars and for the Navy a sum in excess of that. In other words, we have expended over $2,000,000,000 for the Army and the Navy in the past 10 years; and if now at the end of that time we are in as deplorable a condition as is sometimes represented, then certainly an indictment lies at the door both of the Army and of the Navy, as well as of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CLINE. I want to inquire whether the gentleman understood from the testimony given in the Naval Committee yes-terday by Admiral Vreeland, that he based our unpreparedness in any way upon our insufficiency of fortifications, and if it did not go to another point in our military and naval defenses?

Mr. SHERLEY. I expressly declined to hold Admiral Vreeland responsible for what I saw in the paper, because I very greatly suspect that it did not accurately state the testimony of Admiral Vreeland. But this I do desire to repeat, irrespective of the testimony that may have been given, that the fortifications of the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines are in such a state as not to cause anyone to have any undue alarm touching those fortifications. I do not pretend to say, and no man would say, that conditions might not arise under which those fortifications would be taken; but it is one of the curious facts in connection with modern warfare that there has been no recent instance of the taking of a fortification by sea attack. Port Arthur was never reduced except as the result of a land attack upon it, and not a sea attack.

Now, I repeat that we have made these tremendous expenditures of money in support of the Army and of the Navy. I do not believe that the expenditures in many instances have been I am forced to the conviction that we have expended a great deal more money upon the Army than our condition of preparedness for war seems to now justify. I think that we have been somewhat backward in the matter of field artillery and the ammunition therefor, and I shall now deal with that subject. And in connection with that I desire to say again if blame lies anywhere, it can not be placed entirely upon the shoulders of the Congress of the United States. The fortifications bill carries the amounts for the field artillery for the regular and the volunteer forces. The Army bill carries the moneys necessary for the field artillery for the militia and the ammunition therefor, as well as the harness for this material for the Regular and Volunteer Armies and militia. Now, he estimates that have been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations touching field-artillery material have until recent years been very much less than those that are now asked or than the need of the Army would have indicated as proper if the position now taken by the Army officers is sound. Their position is predicated upon an army of 500,000 men and upon a percentage of 3.16 guns to every 1,000 rifles and sahers. It is very difficult, if not impossible, for a lay mind to contemplate the need of an army of 500,000 men in continental United States. And yet it is fair to state that there is not an Army officer who appears before our committee but what is both sincere and pronounced in his opinion that we should be prepared to properly equip an army of that size. It will require approximately $40,000,000 to supply the remaining amount of guns, ammunition trains, and ammunition for the Field Artillery on the assumption of supplying an army of 500,000 men. That contemplates 1,292 guns of various calibers.

Now, of those guns we have about 60 per cent, as I now recall. As to the ammunition, we are in a very much worse condition. For the guns now in the hands of the Regulars and the militia we have 48 per cent of the ammunition required; mark you, I say of the guns in the hands of the Regular Army and of the militia; because the number of guns that have been built or are building is considerably in excess of the number of guns in the hands of the Regulars and of the militia. We have, as I recall, some 14 per cent of the ammunition that is required for the ultimate number of guns desired.

There was submitted to the committee an estimate of $3,000,000 for ammunition for the Field Artillery. A similar estimate of $3,000,000 was submitted to the Military Affairs Committee for ammunition for field artillery for the militia.

The Committee on Appropriations has recommended the sum of $900,000. That is the same amount that was recommended and carried in the bill of last year. This $900,000 represents the largest amount of money that has ever been appropriated in a single year for ammunition for the Field Artillery, with the exception of one year during the Spanish War. Three years ago the fortification bill carried an appropriation of $300,000 for this ammunition. The next year it carried an appropriation of $600,000, and last year we carried an appropriation of $900,000. This year, although the estimates were nearly three times what they were a year ago, the committee have not felt warranted in proceeding at a faster rate than last year, and again recommend the sum of $900,000.

Mr. MANN. Are the appropriations for these purposes continuing appropriations until used, or are they covered back into the Treasury?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are continuing appropriations, and in point of fact are expended practically during the fiscal year. Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, have they been expended?

Mr. SHERLEY. Practically all, except when the maturity of certain contract obligations have gone over. In other words, we are doing that amount of work by manufacture or purchase, but the appropriations are continuing appropriations.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood. My recollection is that several years ago when this matter was up complaint was made about the amount Congress was then appropriating, and I received the impression at that time that there was a large amount of unexpended appropriations from previous years.

Mr. SHERLEY. At that time I am inclined to think that the gentleman's impression was correct. It might not be amiss in this connection to call attention to the estimates for ammunition submitted for many years past. In 1902 the estimates were $400,000; for 1903, nothing; for 1904, nothing; for 1905, In 1902 the estimates they were $873,600; for 1906 the estimates were $318,398; for 1907, $250,000; for 1908, $250,000; for 1909, $250,000; for 1910, $300,000; for 1911, $150,000.

In that connection it is interesting to note that the testimony before our committee as to that particular estimate was that it was cut as low as it was on account of the desire of the then administration to make a showing of economy in the estimate submitted. I submit that if the situation is as bad as represented, that was a particularly poor item on which to make a show of economy.

The estimates for 1912 were $500,000, and for 1913, $1,500,000; for 1914, $1,250,000, and now for this year $3,000,000 is esti-

No matter that has been presented to the committee has had more serious thought or deserved more serious thought than this very item of ammunition for the mobile artillery. If we are to have war within the next year or two with a great power and are to need an army of 500,000 men, we ought not to appropriate $900,000, but we ought to appropriate many millions for ammunition. If, on the other hand, we are not to have a war in the next 10 or 20 years, then the rate at which we are going on is not only adequate, but might be thought to be generous. In other words, on the basis of appropriations that will be carried in this bill and will be carried in the Army bill we will have supplied the entire ammunition estimated as required for 1,292 guns, the number of these guns being based on an army of 500,000 men, in about 10 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. STAFFORD. A pertinent query arises in my mind, in the eventuality of war and we should need the $7,000,000 worth of ammunition, what would be the maximum capacity of the Government and the private plants to supply the needed ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not immediately available those figures, but if the gentleman will make his inquiry later in the consideration of the bill I will give him the exact information. It would take a number of months-six months or more-to begin turning out in very great quantities guns and ammuni-tion. It is perfectly manifest, of course that the appropriations carried in this bill can have no bearing upon any immediate fear of war that may exist. I desire to present the situation in another way:

We have ninety-six 3-inch guns in the hands of troops in the United States and forty-four 3-inch guns in the insular possessions. Figuring on the Army's estimate of the number of rounds required for these guns in the United States, and then adding 50 per cent more—in other words, 150 per cent—for the guns that are in the insular possessions, you would require in rounds of ammunition for the one hundred and forty 3-inch guns 300,000 rounds of ammunition.

There is on hand 186,508 rounds. We lack, therefore, for these guns 114,864 rounds. Assuming the cost price of $10 a round, you would have an expenditure of $1,148,000 necessary to supply the entire amount of ammunition needed for the one hundred and forty 3-inch guns. Assuming the Army bill will carry an amount approximately the same as this bill, you will have enough money not only to supply these guns with all the ammunition they need, but to leave a surplus of more than half a million for ammunition for other guns.

For twelve 3.8-inch howitzers we have practically 71 per cent of the ammunition required. For the 24 mountain guns we have approximately 75 per cent of the ammunition required. For twelve 4.7-inch guns we have something like 60 per cent of ammunition. For twenty 4.7-inch howitzers we lack 29 per cent of the ammunition, or, in other words, we have 71 per cent of ammunition. For eight 6-inch howitzers we have the ammunition required. That number of guns would be the number practically requested for an army in the United States at war strength of 73,000 men, and for an army in the insular possessions of something like 20,000. Of course, I am speaking in round numbers, and without any intention of being absolutely accurate. If you consider not simply the picture that the Army officers present of a need of 500,000 men, but simply consider the needs of your Regular Army, the appropriations carried in this bill and in the Army appropriation bill will be sufficient to give them the ammunition that is needed for an army of ninety-odd thousand men.

In considering the question of amounts that should be appropriated for the materiel of the Field Artillery and ammunition for it, your committee considered not only the question of how rapidly we should supply the needed materiel and ammunition, but we considered another question of high importance, and that was the question of the cost in arsenals and by private manufacture, and in the consideration of that we met with the question of capacity of arsenals to turn out this matériel and this ammunition.

The committee found that there was a saving in arsenal costs over manufacturing costs of anywhere from 17 per cent to over 50 per cent in many instances, and with that saving being maintained over the entire amount of money that would have to be expended to complete the project for field guns and ammunition therefor, together with the practice ammunition that is used from year to year, there will be a saving of over $4,500,000, a sum in no sense inconsiderable. Of course it is manifest that we would not be justified in doing the work exclusively in the arsenals, no matter how cheaply we could do it, if by limiting our output to the capacity of the arsenals we gave an output so small as to imperil the safety of the country. Manifestly, if we need to supply the guns and ammunition as fast as the Army says we do, then we ought not to consider simply arsenal manufacture, but we ought to go forward and put part of our work in outside manufactories.

The Ordnance Department presented in detail the cost of making guns, carriages, ammunition trains, and ammunition. There will be found in the hearings complete tables showing these costs, and showing the purchase price from private manufacturers, and I want to take occasion now to say that the unusual showing as to lessened cost of Government manufacture as against purchase price is a splendid tribute to the Chief of Ordnance, Gen. Crozier, and the men who are under him. He brings to the committee a detailed knowledge and a nicety of statement as to the entire matters under him that is not excelled by any person who comes before that committee in connection with any subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that connection can the gentleman inform the committee whether in estimating the cost of manufacture of these Government implements and ammunition at Government works any estimate was taken as to depreciation of plants, insurance, and those elements that a business concern takes into consideration?

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to say, and would have said in a moment, that in considering arsenal costs there was taken into consideration not only the cost of labor and of material, but every proper overhead charge that applies not only to the Government but many that apply to private manufacturers and from which the Government is free, and in giving you the statement of percentages we give you as to the manufacture of this material, just as we gave you last year as to the manufacture of powder, a statement of cost that carries in it every proper charge that should be made against the arsenal, and in the judgment of the committee, if error has been made it has been made upon the side of charging too much instead of too little in arriving at these arsenal costs.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman has very well answered the question about cost, but what I wish to know is the capacity of the powder plants controlled and run by the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think I will reach all those matters if my time holds out. If the committee will take the report, they will find on page 8 a recommendation made by the committee in the form of a limitation, which is as follows:

Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, after deducting any amounts required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts to be entered into by contract, not more than 10 per cent may be used to purchase not exceeding 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material herein appropriated for that can be manufactured at the arsenals of the Ordnance Department, except when contract costs are less than arsenal manufacturing costs.

Now, the purpose and effect of that limitation is to require the entire manufacture of everything which the arsenals make in the arsenals and the purchase of none of them. It is true that the limitation gives a 10 per cent leeway, and that 10 per cent leeway was given in order not to unduly tie the department in the execution of its orders. If it was found impractical to do certain work or undesirable to do it in a small amount, then that leeway is given of 10 per cent of any amount carried in any item, with the further limitation of 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material. The testimony of Gen. Crozier shows that the capacity of the arsenals now is sufficient to enable them to take care of all appropriations that are car-ried in this bill and the amounts that I am informed will be carried in the Army bill for similar work.

In other words, we have not appropriated more money than the arsenals could take care of. It is only fair to say that we did not determine the amount that we have recommended by the capacity of the arsenals; but having determined the amount that we thought ought to be appropriated, we then inquired into the question of capacity of the arsenals; and finding that it was sufficient to take care of those appropriations, we have proposed to this House the limitation that I have indicated. Now, we have for the last year been making all the powder that the Army needs. When I first began inquiring into the cost of powder the Government was paying 67 cents a pound for the small-arms powder, and a limitation was put on it reducing the price to 64 cents, and the debates on this floor show that man after man charged that the limitation for that amount would prevent the procurement of powder by the Government by purchase. and yet the fact remains to-day that the Army is making its powder at a cost of a little over 39 cents, including all overhead charges. [Applause.] And the further fact remains that the Navy is to-day buying the powder that it does not manufacture at 53 cents a pound, although the statement was made that this limitation of 64 cents a pound would deny the Government any powder supply from private sources. Now, in view of these tremendous savings your committee did not feel warranted in continuing the policy of part manufacturing and part purchasing. The Ordnance Department presented, and properly presented, several reasons why, in their judgment, it might be thought desirable to purchase as well as manufacture. One of those reasons was they desired to have a method of comparison by which they could determine whether the Government was actually manufacturing economically or not, because, as well stated, they were conscious that there would never be any such investigation of methods in the arsenals as would determine primarily that question, and that the only basis of determination must be a comparison between the manufacturing cost and the purchase-price cost. They also presented the desirability of having a proper expansibility of output in case of need of a great supply owing to a war or threatened war, and they presented the fact that it could not be expected that private plants will keep idle part of their plants in order to have a surplus expansibility, and if we were to have such expansibility that it must be by using the Government arsenals only at a certain per cent of their total capacity, holding the rest in

Now, these arguments are not without weight, and it was proper that the ordnance people should present them. They occupied a dual position. By their skill, by their energy, they have made possible the splendid showing of cheapened cost of arsenal manufacture as against purchase from private manufacture, and to that extent they were properly interested in urging the continued and enlarged use of the arsenal.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Not just at this moment.

But they felt that they ought to present these additional rea-Now, the committee recognizes the weight of those arguments, but they do not believe, not sharing the Army's viewpoint as to the tremendous need of a hurried supply of this matériel and ammunition, that the expansibility was sufficiently to be desired to offset the concrete economies and savings shown in the difference in the two prices. They, further, were more concerned with the fact than the demonstration of the fact of cheapened arsenal manufacture as against purchase price.

They have accordingly brought to the House for its consideration this recommendation, which is the unanimous recommendation on the part of the committee, and which they hope will be acquiesced in by the House.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Does the gentleman know whether any of the foreign nations with which we might possibly come in conflict are prepared fully to equip an army in every respect immediately?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no personal knowledge, but it is understood and generally believed, and of course it is manifestly true as to certain of the great nations, that they not only are prepared to equip but have actually equipped standing armies of considerable size. It is believed by those who ought to know that all of the first-class powers are so supplied with guns and ammunition as to enable them to put into the field armies of considerable size.

Mr. LINDBERGH. One more question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. LINDBERGH. It has been reported in the public press that there is a considerable foreign population in the Hawaiian Islands, and that an army might be created right there in opposition to our own. Does the gentleman know whether that is a fact or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a fact that there are a number of Japanese in the Hawaiian Islands, employed there in connection with the sugar and other industries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman, in a word, state the policy of foreign Governments toward the manufacture of their guns, gun carriages, and ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, the policy, generally speaking, is to buy the major portion of their material and their ammunition. France, I believe, has been in the past making some powder, which has not been altogether of a satisfactory character. I can not speak accurately about that, but I am sure this is true, generally speaking, that these Governments do buy large quantities from private manufacturers.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the Government was paying 53 cents per pound for a portion of the powder used by the Navy, and not manufactured by the Government. Can he state what proportion of the powder used by the Navy is bought and not manufactured by the Govern-

Mr. SHERLEY. I think about one-half. I will not be absolutely sure, but that is my memory now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the gentleman state a moment ago that the Army manufactured its entire quantity of powder?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does; and expects to continue to do so, except the purchase of a very small quantity for experimental

Mr. BARKLEY. One other question. About what does the purchase of the powder in the Navy over and above what it manufactures amount to for a year?

I should not like to trust my memory as Mr. SHERLEY.

to the amount. I did know, but I have forgotten.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this is true, is it not the opinion of the gentleman that it would be a wise policy for the Government to adopt some means whereby they could manufacture the entire supply of powder to be used by the Army and the Navy?

Mr. SHERLEY. In that connection it is proper to say that the naval arsenal is running now on three shifts in a 24-hour day and is manufacturing to its full capacity. Assuming that the position that has been taken by the subcommittee on fortifications is correct, it would seem to follow that it would be proper for the Navy to so increase its capacity as to make the additional powder required. But I say that the arguments that have been presented of the desirability of expansibility and of the competition of private manufacture, with the inventions and incentives of private individuals, may by some be thought to be sufficiently weighty to justify the present

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. MANN. I will not ask the gentleman to yield unless he has finished his preliminary address.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have, except as to one other statement that I desire to make.

This policy in regard to arsenal manufacture is not new. It is but a continuation and an amplification of a policy that has been pursued by the committee for some years past. have not had the data heretofore that warranted pushing it further, nor the arsenal capacity, until recently that would enable us to do it, and that is the reason why for the first time we present the proposal of complete arsenal manufacture.

A year ago, in the sundry civil bill, we carried an item of $250,000 for certain improvements to be made at the Rock Island Arsenal, by which it was expected that we would very greatly increase the output of that arsenal. The amount of small-arms manufacture is falling off. We are very near to the end of furnishing the supply requisite of small arms, and that enabled the Ordnance Department to use certain shops and machinery at Rock Island for the manufacture of mobile artillery materiel that heretofore there was no room for, and by the addition of this $250,000 they were enabled to increase, as they then stated, their output about a third, manufacturing twothirds and buying one-third, instead of manufacturing one-third and buying two-thirds as heretofore. But it developed in the and buying two-thirds as heretofore. But it developed in the hearings that that was on the basis of not running the arsenals at their full capacity, and that by dispensing with the expansibility that I have spoken of, and running on a greater number of shifts, you could take care of this addition; and we propose accordingly to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I have already taken so much time of the committee that I shall not go into this matter further now by stating the actual figures as to savings of cost, but they will be found in the report of the committee.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman's committee seems to have done well on the question of powder. I will ask the gentleman as to the pay of officers assigned to this work, receiving $2.50 additional to their salaries and the allowances that they already

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, we are setting no precedent, sir. That provision has been carried in the bill from the beginning, and if the gentleman from Georgia will call my attention to it when we reach it in the reading of the bill for amendment, I will be glad to give an explanation. I shall be glad now to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. I simply wish to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the ammunition for the Coast Artillery. That remains useful until it is used, does it? It is not used currently, is it?

Mr. SHERLEY. What happens is this, that the moneys appropriated, which amount to about $425,000 for seacoast ammunition for target practice, are used for buying from the reserve supply the oldest powder they have there, and the money is then used in the manufacture of new powder, which goes into the reserve. In other words, by this method you are constantly turning over your powder supply and using to the extent of the annual practice the oldest powder you have on hand.

Mr. MANN. The amount that we appropriate for the Coast Artillery ammunition is not supposed to be used up in practice during the year?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. We carry a special item of $425,000, as I now recall, for practice ammunition, and that is all that is nsed.

Now we are constantly adding to our reserve ammunition; and I am glad of the gentleman's inquiry, because otherwise I would have forgotten to say that in the United States we are in a position where we have over 70 per cent of the total amount estimated to be required, and that total amount is estimated on the assumption of a supply of powder sufficient for the con-tinuous firing for one hour of all the guns in the United States, or a supply for two hours for all the guns on either coast, it being assumed that the guns on both coasts will not be imperiled at the same time.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, then, we are gradually build-ing up a reserve stock of ammunition? We are increasing the amount constantly?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and we have a reserve of ammunition for the seacoast cannon in the United States and in the insular possessions that is so nearly the maximum required as to be the occasion of no alarm to anybody. As to the Philippines, we had practically reached the total amount required when they came in with a new total, having concluded that they desired a certain character of ammunition for mortars and an additional quantity; thereby the total was increased, and of course by increasing our totals our percentage fell from practically a hundred down into the seventies.

I thank the committee for its indulgence.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman any figures or estimates as to the deterioration of smokeless powder by exposure to the atmospheric conditions and by reason of age?

Mr. SHERLEY. The testimony is that there is practically no appreciable deterioration in the modern powder that we are now making and using.

Mr. MOORE. Has the gentleman made any observation in regard to the fortifications of the Panama Canal?

Mr. SHERLEY. No: I did not, as the appropriations for the fortifications of the Panama Canal are carried in the sundry civil bill. I, however, have some knowledge of those fortifications, as I inspected the emplacements a little over a month ago.

Mr. MOORE. They are carried in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. As a part of the canal estimates in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman referred to the Endicott Board, which presented a scheme for general fortifications of the country and commented upon the modifications of that scheme by the National Coast Defense Board.

Mr. SHERLEY. Known as the Taft Board?

Mr. MOORE. Yes. Is the gentleman prepared to say whether the scheme of the Endicott Board, as modified by the Taft Board, has been carried out to the full extent?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE. We are still behind, so far as some fortifications recommended are concerned?

Mr. SHERLEY. I made a statement in the beginning as to the United States proper. As to that, we are practically complete, except in some details of substitution of permanent system of fire control in place of what they designate as a temporary system, and additional searchlights, mine material, and cable in connection with the mines, and so forth, and the fortifications at the mouth of the Chesapeake and San Pedro; and we may have in the future to increase the armament at San

Mr. MOORE. The department estimated for about $4,000,000 more than the committee has allowed. Were the department's estimates made in accordance with the recommendations of the Taft Board.

Mr. SHERLEY. As modified, yes. Mr. MOORE. To that extent, so far as this bill goes, we would be $4,000,000 behind the scheme for the current year?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; because a good many items are maintenance items which have nothing to do with the program for defense and which we cut where we thought they ought to be cut—where we thought they could get along with less money we made those cuts. We made large cuts relating to mobile artillery which has nothing to do with the Endicott or the Taft Board report.

Mr. MOORE. There has been an effort to economize? Mr. SHERLEY. I hope not only an effort but an indication and evidence of successful economy.

Mr. MOORE. The committee recommends appropriations slightly in excess of that of last year and for 1912 and 1911; but prior to that time the appropriations were heavier. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SHERLEY. The appropriations have been heavier at different times. Of course, it is perfectly manifest that you can make a bill three or four times what this is, depending upon the rapidity with which you want to do the work. As for the seacoast fortifications, the gentleman from Pennsylvania can possess his soul in patience, with the assurance that we are not only fortified but exceedingly well fortified.

Mr. MOORE. I am glad the gentleman feels that way.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not simply the gentleman's feeling; it is based on the statements of those who know; and the gentleman will find in the hearings of this year and previous years that that is the actual state of facts.

Mr. MOORE. I notice by the testimony of Gen. Crozier that he would like to have had more money.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is confusing the project for the mobile army with the project for a seacoast defense; they are entirely distinct.

Mr. MOORE. To a certain extent that is true; but the gentleman replied to my inquiry that we are not quite up to the recommendations of the National Coast Defense Board.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman means that we have not given the estimates asked for, the gentleman is right. I do not think we ought to give the estimates asked for. The effort in the inquiry is to try to ascertain whether we can dispense with some of the amounts asked for or not.

Mr. MOORE. And the gentleman answers that we have appropriated $4,000,000 less than was asked for by the War Department as necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not answer the gentleman that way. I do not say that we have appropriated $4,000,000 less is necessary for the defense of the country, but it is $4,000,000 less than the estimates. A large part of that is by reduction in the amount asked for ammunicion for field guns.

Quite a bit of it is in connection with maintenance items. Quite a bit of it is in connection with reserve supplies that did not appeal to the judgment of the committee as being urgently needed at this time. In the consideration of a bill of this character the committee must not only consider the value of a particular thing recommended, but if it is to perform its duty to the country and to Congress it must consider the relative value of things recommended, not only in the bill as to each other, but as to other requirements of the Government, and with the expenditure of $1,100,000,000 annually I for one am not willing to press forward unduly matters that I think can wait.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Where are our small arms manufactured principally; at what arsenal?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not within my jurisdiction, but I can give the gentleman the information in a moment. Our small-arm ammunition is manufactured at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia. Small arms are manufactured at the Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. MOORE. For what purpose was the appropriation of $250,000 for Rock Island in the last sundry civil bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. To enable them to manufacture field artillery matériel.

Mr. MOORE. To what extent are they manufacturing that matériel now as compared with our supplies acquired from private manufacturers?

Mr. SHERLEY. Under the provisions of this bill they will manufacture 100 per cent of the amount that they have money

Mr. MOORE. Then you have equipped the Rock Island Arsenal to do nearly all the work the Government requires in that particular?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; there is a lot of work besides. For instance, the guns are not made there, and there is a good deal of other material. At Rock Island they manufacture gun carriages and artillery vehicles, as well as harness, saddles, bridles, personal equipment for enlisted men, such as meat cans, tin cups, and so forth. There is a small-arms plant there that is not being operated.

Mr. MOORE. Has the gentleman made any reference to the economies perfected by the Frankford Arsenal in manufacturing small-arms ammunition?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; because that had nothing to do with the funds carried in this bill; but we have certain statements as to manufacturing costs at the Frankford Arsenal compared with purchase price.

Mr. MOORE. They have shown a material profit to the Government, have they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I so stated.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is giving the committee some very valuable information. What per cent of the leather goods used by the Army, such as saddles, bridles, and harness, has heretofore been manufactured by the Army?

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not answer the gentleman. We have nothing to do with that. That is carried in the Army bill.

Can the gentleman state what tests, if any, have been made as to the powder made by the United States in resisting length of storage and climatic changes?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know what recent investigations have been made, but the testimony is that there has been no appreciable deterioration due to age.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman know whether that has been the experience of foreign countries?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; and I would not think that information particularly valuable one way or the other. Our powder is different from that made in other countries, and according to the testimony is probably the best powder in the world.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman refer to that which is made at the Government powder factory?

Mr. SHERLEY. I refer to that made by the Government and that bought from the du Pont people. Both are exactly the same; that manufactured by the du Pont people being manufactured under the supervision of Government officials, it comes up to the same standards as that manufactured at the Government factory.

Mr. ESCH. Is it true that small-arms ammunition deteriorates to any appreciable degree from length of storage?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say not, although my committee does not deal with small-arms ammunition.

I beg to thank the committee for their attention, and in the consideration of the bill will be glad to give any detailed in-formation as to any items concerning which I may be able to give it. [Applause.]

The following is the report of the committee on the bill:

I beg to thank the committee for their attention, and in the consideration of the bill will be glad to give any detailed information as to any items concerning which I may be able to give it. [Applause.]

The following is the report of the committee on the bill:

Mr. Suranz, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12235:

The Committee on Appropriations, in paradiother works of defense, and for the armanent thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submitted the following in control of the surangent thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submitted for Estimates on which the bill is based will be found in the Book of Estimates of the fiscal year 1015, pages 429–440, inclusive, and aggregate $81,24,309.49, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying and the summary of $43,050 less than was appropriated for the same purposes at the last session of Congress, and $5,340,199.49 less than the estimates submitted. In addition to the specific appropriations, amount and accompanying the summary of $60,000 is provided and reappropriations amounting to the further sum of $600,000 is provided and reappropriations amounting to the further summary of the summary of $60,000 is provided and reappropriations amounting to the proper summary of $60,000 is provided and reappropriations amounting to the proper summary of $60,000 is provided and reappropriations amounting to appropriations were made on account of fortifications, their maintenance and armament, and for the 2 fiscal years 1875 to 1880, inclusive, the appropriations were made on account of fortifications, in continuance and armament, and for the 2 fiscal years 1875 to 1880, including the proper summary of the support of the Accounting the proper summary of the summary of the summary of the summary of the summary of the tory at Picatinny, N. J., the Ordnance and Fortification Board, the manufacture of mountain, field, and siege guns, and ammunition therefor, and for sundry other objects incident to providing and maintaining a system of seacoast defenses, and the amount returned to Treasury. In addition to the foregoing general statement as to the history of and appropriations for the scheme of seacoast fortifications adopted by Congress in 1888 and prosecuted by annual appropriations since that year, it is deemed pertinent at this time to discuss somewhat more in detail the subject of these very considerable expenditures.

By the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, the President was directed to appoint a board to formulate plans for seacoast defenses. This board later became known under the name of the Endicott Board, and its report, transmitted to Congress on January 23, 1886, formed for many years the guide from which the Secretary of War determined the ports that should be fortified and the amount and type of armament required for each. It will be understood that these plans required many modifications of detail in accordance with the development of commercial and strategic importance of the different ports and emplacements and changes in modern armament. In addition, no provision was made for reserve ammunition, probably due to the fact that the development of satisfactory powder was at that time in an experimental stage. On March 5, 1906, the President of the United States transmitted a message to the Congress in which he finclosed a report of the National Coast Defense Board, which had been appointed by him on January 31, 1905. This report modified and brought up to date the report of the Endicott Board and added a scheme for the fortifications of the insular possessions of the United States, and is usually referred to as the Taft Board report. In pursuance of the plans and projects recommended in that report estimates are submitted annually by the Secretary of War of the sum needed to carry on the work, and the item

Under these three subdivisions of the first general division there has been heretofore appropriated for continental United States, including practice ammunition used in the insular possessions, $124,024,137.86. Of this amount, under subdivision a, items pertaining to new armament and installation, there has been appropriated $87,740,124.95; items relating to reserve ammunition, $15,112,885.98. Under subdivision b—that is, the item for maintenance, repair, and alteration—there has been appropriated $14,745,070.12. Under subdivision c, seacoast target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated the sum of $5,264,058. There has been covered into the Treasury unexpended $1,043,99.81. Under subdivisions a and b there has been appropriated for the insular possessions $19,656,386.88. This total includes under subdivision a items pertaining to new armament and installation, $16,879,165; items for reserve seacoast ammunition, $2,400,000. Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $377,221.88. So that the total of appropriations for both continental United States and the insular possessions, under heading No. 1, amounts to $143,680,524.74.

The second general classification, to wit, supply of field artillery

The second general classification, to wit, supply of field artillery material, including ammunition, can also be subdivided into three classifications similar to that of item No. 1. In other words, (a) those pertaining to new material, including reserve ammunition; (b) those pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alteration; and (c) those pertaining to maintenance, repair, and alteration; and (c) those pertaining to maintenance ammunition.

The total appropriated has been $9,880,800. The total of the above that is included under subdivision a, new material, including reserve ammunition, is $8,563,800, of which $3,001,600 was for such reserve ammunition, leaving $5,562,200 as the amount that has been appropriated for new material. Of this latter sum $830,000 is counted as being for new material, though it is literally for the purpose of making new batteries out of old ones.

Under subdivision b, for maintenance, repair, and alteration, there has been appropriated $396,000. Under subdivision c, for target-practice ammunition, there has been appropriated $21,000.

The third general classification, to wit, miscellaneous items related to the preceding but not strictly forming parts thereof, consists of the following items, totaling appropriations of $16,599,999.63:

Board of Ordnance and Fortification————$2,570,000,00

It is estimated that no appropriations will be required under sub-division b for alteration or under subdivision c for target practice. Under the second general classification, first noted, it is estimated that items coming under subdivision a will be as follows: For new materiel, including funds for the alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $5,612,102; for reserve ammunition, $20,235,682.04, making a total of $25,847,784.04.

$5.612.102: for reserve ammunition, $20,235,682.04, making a total of $25,847.784.04.

In addition to the above, it is estimated that there will be required annually $55,000 for alteration, maintenance, and repair, and $140,000 for target practice.

It should be stated in connection with the foregoing items for Field Artillery matériel and ammunition that it is also estimated by the War Department that for such matériel and ammunition for the use of the militia there will be required a total of $16,005,371.50, for which latter sum, however, it is expected that estimates will be submitted and appropriations carried in the Army bill.

In the present estimates there is asked, under the first general division for continental United States, subdivision a, new matériel, etc., $1,576,800, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill $1,006,800, with an authorization of $300,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $993,000, of which amount the bill carries $558,000, and in addition reappropriations amounting to $265,000; and under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $425,000, all of which is recommended in the bill, making a total estimate of $2,994,800, of which the bill carries $1,898,800, with an authorization of $300,000, as above, and reappropriations of $255,000, all of which is recommended in the bill, and under subdivision b, maintenance, repair, etc., $231,469, of which the sum of $58,500 is recommended, making total estimates of $1,543,469, of which $1,370,500, as above stated, is recommended, making a grand total of estimates of $4,538,269 for both continental United States and the insular possessions under the first general division, of which there is recommended $3,360,300, with an authorization of $300,000.

Under the second general classification there is asked, under subdivision a, new materiel, etc., including alteration of 3.2-inch batteries, $4,150,000, of which there is recommended $1,525,000, with an authorization of $300,000; under subdivision b, maintenance, repairs, etc., $55,000, of which $45,000 is given; under subdivision c, target-practice ammunition, $140,000, of which $130,000 is given; making total estimates of $4,345,000, of which the bill carries $1,700,000, with authorization of $300,000 as above.

Under the third general division there are asked the following items:

Current expenses, ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, $56, 200, 00 N. J. $56, 200.00

Expenses of officers at the proving ground and compensation of draftsmen 18, 700.00

Board of Ordnance and Fortification 25, 000.00

Of the estimates under the third general division $89,900 is recommended, and in addition thereto a new item of $25,000 for Coast Artillery war instruction.

The funds appropriated under the fortification acts are expended by or under the supervision of the Chief of Ordnance, the Chief Signal Officer, and the Chief of Engineers. In general terms the Chief of Ordnance has charge of those items pertaining to seacoast cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; montain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments; ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for seacoast artillery practice; ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mountain, field, and siege artillery practice; alteration and maintenance of seacoast artillery; alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery; current expenses of the ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J.; necessary expenses of officers at the proving ground, and compensation of draftsmen. In addition he has charge of the accounts, although not of the disbursements, pertaining to submarine mines, and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, and expends the funds allotted him by the Secretary of War for fire-control instruments.

The Chief Signal Officer has charge of the operation and maintenance of fire-control installation at seacoast defenses and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War for the procurement of wiring and instruments for communication service from the appropriations for fire control.

The Chief of Engineers has charge of the construction, maintenance, repair, and modernization of emplacements for seacoast armament; installation and replacement of electric light and power plants and searchlights at seacoast fortifications; procurement or reclamation of land for sites for fortifications; preparation of plans for fortifications; tools, electrical, and engine supplies for operating electric light and power plants in seacoast batteries, and reserve lights therefor; construction, maintenance, and repair of sea walls and embankments; construction, preservation, and repair of structures for torpedo defense; land defenses of seacoast fortifications, exclusive of electrical communications and armament; and the expenditure of such funds as may be allotted him by the Secretary of War from fire-control appropriations for construction of fire-control stations and accessories and purchase of lands and rights of way.

LIMITATION ON PURCHASES.

The following limitation not heretofore imposed on appropriations is recommended, namely:

On page 9:

"Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, after deducting any amounts required to meet foligations authorized in previous acts to be entered into by contract, not more than 10 per cent may be used to purchase not exceeding 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material herein appropriated for that can be manufactured at the manufacturing costs."

The purpose of this limitation is to require practically the entire materiel for seacoast defense and for the Field Artillery, together with the ammunition for the same, to be manufactured at the assensity of the arsenals and the facts touching costs of manufacture and purchase seemed to warrant. In the sundry civil act of a year ago provision was made for the expenditure of $250,000 for alterations of buildings and equipment at the Rock Island Arsenal so as to enable that arsenal to very greatly increase its output of field-artillery materiel. As a result of a limitation upon the fortification act of last small arms powder, required by the Army. Due to the enlarged capacity of the Rock Island Arsenal and a lessening of the work at other arsenals in the manufacture or small arms, the Government is now in a position to manufacture practically all of the materiel and ammunition for seacoast camon and Field Artillery, and at a saving in cost ranging from 17 per cent to 50 per cent of the price asked by private minimum and the proposition of the materiel for the Field Artillery, and at a saving in cost ranging from 17 per cent to 50 per cent of the price asked by private price of the price asked by private and the proposition of the materiel for the Field Artillery, and at a saving in cost ranging from 17 per cent to 50 per cent of the price asked by private price of the price asked by private and the proposition of tions in the sundry civil act for Panama Canal fortifications; a saving of 25 per cent on 52 per cent of this sum would amount to $45,400 additional to the above.

The estimated cost of completing the mobile artillery ammunition supply for the guns already provided is approximately $13,000,000, and for the guns provided and needed to complete the contemplated scheme is approximately $19,700,000; 39 per cent saving on one-half of the first-named sum is $2,535,000 and a similar percentage of saving on one-half the second-named sum is $2,841,500.

The foregoing amounts include the ammunition and guns carried in the Army and fortification bills. The policy, therefore, of practically complete arsenal manufacture of mobile artillery ammunition in place of divided arsenal manufacture and purchase means an ultimate saving of nearly $3,000,000.

The total estimated cost of armor plerging projectiles needed to complete the contemplate of the cost of the same projectiles needed to complete the cost of armor plerging projectiles needed to complete the cost of armor plerging projectiles needed to complete the cost of the cost

The total estimated cost of armor-piercing projectiles needed to complete the prescribed allowance for the guns in continental United States and the insular possessions is approximately $5,000,000. If 52 per cent of this value was expended with private manufacturers, it would amount to $2,600,000, and if this much work was done at the ordnance establishment at a saving of 25 per cent the corresponding saving would be $625,000.

The corresponding values for ammunition for the fortification of the Panama Canal are $866,000 to complete the armor-piercing projectile supply and a possible saving of $112,580 through 25 per cent saving on 52 per cent of the supply.

These figures need only to be stated to warrant, in the opinion of the committee, the policy herein set forth—the policy of complete arsenal manufacture—and while it is possible that the price of manufacture in this material might become less there is an equal probability of additional economies in the manufacturing costs at the arsenals, and your committee did not feel that the desirability of expansibility in time of need that might result from using the arsenals now only to a limited amount of their capacity and add to the total output by private manufacture was sufficient to outweigh the very great economies referred to. It is very proper that in this statement reference should be made to the unusual skill and efficiency of the Chief of the Ordnance Department and the men under him, whereby the great saving of cost in manufacture has been made possible.

The policy of manufacturing practically all the powder needed will, as indicated, be continued. Powder for the Army, now manufactured at the Picatinny Arsenal, is costing the Government 40 cents per pound, whereas a few years ago, prior to the placing of a limitation upon the price, the Government was paying for this character of powder 67 cents a pound and is now paying for such powder for the Navy 53 cents a pound.

The only new project entered upon in this bill is that touching the land defense of the Hawaiian Islands, for which an appropriation of $457,000 is proposed to begin the engineering work in connection with such defense. The total cost of this project, it is estimated, will amount to $586,000.

Your committee felt constrained to recommend such appropriations, due to an appreciation of the tremendous importance of the Hawaiian.

Your committee felt constrained to recommend such appropriations, due to an appreciation of the tremendous importance of the Hawaiian Islands from a military and naval standpoint, coupled with the fact that we have already expended approximately $12,000,000 in seacoast defenses and for the making of a naval base at Pearl Harbor, and that not to authorize the expenditure of this additional sum in protecting from land attack these defenses seemed to be for the committee to take a position that could in no way be justified.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, war is a barbarous and inhuman way of settling international differences. It means the destruction not alone of the flower of the young manhood of a nation, but it goes home to the fireside and makes widows, it kills sons, maims sweethearts, and leaves brothers lying upon the field. It is for this reason that I protest against the consideration of annual appropriation bills for the defense of our country and for reasonable preparation for war with war imminent at every hour. I contemplate war with such fear and such horror that I have been scared stiff every year in the 10 years I have been here. Just at the time that we are taking up for consideration the Army and the Navy appropriation tills, some one is able to get into every newspaper that reaches Washington news, under glaring headlines, of impending war. contemplate appropriations for guns and ammunition that may be used in the destruction of life as I contemplate the appropriations for the maintenance of the Interior Department, the Department of Justice, or the Department of State, which after twenty centuries of Christian civilization ought to settle every international difference without resorting to the arbitrament of arms. I protest further against unjust criticism of our Army and Navy that is implied in the stories of unpreparedness for war, carried just at the time when we are preparing the Army and Navy appropriation oills. Have we in 10 years appropriated twenty thousand millions of dollars to no purpose? Is it true that all of the money that has been appropriated in the past 10 years leaves us to-day where it was said we were 10 years ago, unprepared to defend ourselves against any foe? If so, appropriations made this year and Lext and for the next 10 years to come will be alike of no avail. I protest, therefore, against the consideration of both the Army and the Navy appropriation bills under a manufactured sentiment giving rise to fear of impending war, and further I protest against the criticism that our Army and Navy have been unable to prepare to properly defend us with the money that has been appropriated in the past for this purpose. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Houston having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3625. An act to authorize the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri;

S. 3742. An act to authorize the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation to construct a bridge across the Hudson River in the State of New York; and S. 4094. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at or near Vancouver, Wash.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I shall not devote the time at my disposal to a discussion of the fortifications bill, but shall devote it to a discussion of District of Columbia affairs

It has lately been proposed by several gentlemen on this floor to repeal the act of 1878; to summarily end the payments made by the United States Government toward the maintenance of the National Capital. This proposition I earnestly and em-phatically oppose. The withdrawal of governmental funds from the District must inevitably lead to one of two results either the burden of taxation upon the District people must be doubled or the expenditures must be reduced one-half. would not only be a burden too grievous to be borne, but would be manifestly unfair. The people of the District, as I propose to show later, already do their full duty in the matter of paying taxes, and it would be unjust to compel them to maintain the National Capital at their own expense. Even if the question of equity did not enter into consideration, the people of the United States certainly have a pride in their National Capital, and I can not believe that they would willingly see its development and progress stopped by antagonistic legislation. Believing also that the plighted faith of the United States is involved in the contract which now exists under the name of the organic act, I shall take time to briefly consider two propositions:

First. The spirit in which the organic act was framed and enacted.

Second. Why the organic act should not be amended, altered, or repealed.

It must be admitted that conditions here are absolutely unique. Selected as the Capital of the Nation, the District of Columbia is under the absolute control of Congress. The people here are not only barred from any future hope of statehood, but they can never have complete management of their own affairs. Whatever they do will always be subject to the revision of Congress, and Congress will in the future pass laws affecting District interests, independent of action taken by any local legis-lature or council or influence, just as it has done in the past. We are not dealing with an ordinary municipality nor even with a city in which normal conditions exist. During its entire existence the District of Columbia has been kept free from commercial and mercantile invasion, although contiguous to the coal fields of Maryland and West Virginia, and with an adequate water front and harbor. A sense of pride has kept Washington a purely residential city-free from all the objectionable accompaniments to large manufacturing enterprises. The result has been, however, a marked lack of wealth among its citizens. There are no merchant princes or corporate barons in the District of Columbia. The handsome residences, not overnumerous, are owned and occupied by those who have been successful elsewhere. The population is, as a whole, composed of persons of moderate means, mostly Government employees, who, as every one knows, are not extravagantly paid. Washington has more homes paid for on the monthly installment plan than are purchased or built otherwise. Notwithstanding this, the area occupied by the National Capital spreads over the large area of 70 square miles, while the streets and avenues are abnormally wide, and thus unusually expensive to keep in proper condition. Its parks are very extensive and numerous and are correspondingly expensive to maintain.

Present conditions did not always obtain. For 70 years the District of Columbia existed upon its own resources. sult was lamentable. The city was an unkempt village, the laughing stock of every visitor, and a disgrace to the Nation. During these 70 years the people of the District spent over $90,000,000 on the Capital, while the Nation contributed little or nothing. After the war Washington became the mecca of thousands of free negroes, and negro suffrage became a prob-lem which Congress solved by denying everybody the right to vote. In 1871 it gave the District a Territorial form of government, with a governor and board of public works appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and with the upper house of the Territorial legislature also appointed. It was these men, agents of Congress, and in whose selection the people of the District had no voice, who, by their comprehensive system of improvements-doing for the Nation what ought to have been done by the Nation—saddled a debt of $22,000,000 upon the District, a debt still unpaid. The three commissioners whose appointment was authorized by law in 1874 were really the receivers of a bankrupt corporation.

For four years Congress gave earnest consideration to the best form of government for the District, a strange contrast to the methods of those who would to-day hastily and without consideration tear down a structure which took four years to plan, and which for nearly 40 years has been splendidly developing, without suggesting any adequate plan to take its place. During these four years the three commissioners served with such admirable efficiency that Congress concluded to make the system permanent. This brings me to the passage of the organic act, the vital principle of which is the half-and-half arrangement, by which the United States shares equally with the District taxpayers the expense of the local government. Since this arrangement went into effect Washington has been transformed from a veritable mudhole into a city which is already the pride of the American people and which bids fair, if its progress is not paralyzed by the success of the efforts which I am combating to-day, to become one of the most beautiful capitals in the

It is worth while, now that this organic act is being assailed, to glance for a moment at the spirit in which it was framed. Its inception was designedly nonpartisan and nonpolitical, "so that whatever system of government may be established, it will not be subject to the shiftings and changes of party poli-The report of the joint select committee to select a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, submitted by Senator Morrill, of Vermont, emphasized what was called "the unity of interest" between the Nation and its Capital, and then declared that-

The demand for expenditures, as indicated in the disposition of its avenues and streets and numerous squares, will necessarily be upon a scale beyond what might reasonably be imposed upon or drawn from the resources of a business or resident population.

After repeating that conditions here "necessarily impose on Congress the duty of making provision for needful expenditures," the report contains this paragraph, which I earnestly commend to the attention of the House:

The fact that it is the Nation's capital justly inspires a national pride in its welfare; will, as the years come and go, commend it to the solicitous care of the representatives of the people of all parties; will make it, it is to be hoped, that common ground where the fervor of particisms will rise above the zeal of partisanship, and the laws, appropriations, and appointments to office will be made in relation to its wants and cease to be shaped by partisan aspirations or local interests.

It was in this broad and lofty spirit that Democrats like Blackburn, of Kentucky, and Thurman, of Ohio, joined with Morrill, of Vermont, and other Republicans in devising the organic act. There never was any question whether the United States should or should not contribute to the support of the capital. The only debate was over the percentage of the ratio.

The people of the District-

Said Mr. Blackburn-

have a right to demand that we shall fix permanently their relations to the General Government. It is the Federal Government on the one side treating with the Federal city on the other side. The people of the District have a right to protest against being left subject to the whim and caprice of Congress with each recurring session.

I commend that statement of the distinguished citizen of his

State to the careful consideration of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson]. Therefore, after some discussion, during which the ratios of 40, 33, and 25 per cent were rejected, a 50 per cent, or half and half, ratio was adopted. If there is any doubt that the organic act was intended to be a permanent contract, let it be stated that the following amendment was offered to the bill:

Congress reserves the right at any time to repeal, alter, and amend any and all provisions of this act.

This amendment, although advocated upon the ground that it gave judicial notice to all residents of the District that their investments or other interests were subject to "the whim or caprice of Congress," was deliberately voted down; and if this did not show the intent of Congress in dealing with the District, the Supreme Court of the United States gave its interpretation to the statute when, in the unanimous decision ren-dered by Associate Justice Brewer in the case of Eckloff against the District of Columbia, referring to the act of 1878, it said:

The court below placed its decision on what we conceive to be the true significance of the act of 1878. As said by that court, it is to be regarded as an organic act, intended to dispose of the whole question of a government for this District. It is, as it were, a constitution for the District. It is declared by its title to be an act to provide "a permanent form of government for the District," The word "permanent" is suggestive. It implies that prior systems have been temporary and provisional. As permanent it is complete in itself. It is the system of government. The powers which are conferred are organic powers. We look to the act itself for their extent and limitations. It is not one act in a series of legislation and to be made to fit into the provisions of the prior legislation, but it is a single, complete act, the outcome of previous experiments, and the final judgment of Congress as to the system of government which should obtain. It is the constitution of the District.

Despite all this, the effort is now made to take out of the organic act its essential paragraph of Federal partnership with the District-an effort not marked by serious deliberation of all the facts and arguments upon the subject, but characterized by remarkable feeling and blindness to facts. Granting, however, for the sake of the argument, that the United States Supreme Court was wrong and that the District is to be forever menaced by the shifting fancies of a congressional majority, let me meet squarely the question whether it would be wise, equitable, or patriotic to repeal the half-and-half provision of the organic act.

I have read carefully the speeches delivered in this House recently by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY]. The principal argument of the former is that the Democratic majority in the House should stand by its party platform and economize by cutting off $6,000,000 from the District, thus keeping "our pledges to the people." I favor economy, Mr. Chairman, but I give the Democratic Party the credit of believing that its voters never intended that the first reduction should be at the expense of the beauty and growth of a National Capital which is our common pride. I do not believe that the time has come when the Nation will begrudge, out of its enormous revenues, a paltry five or six million dollars for the city where its seat of government is located. When I recall the vast sums which have been expended for public buildings, river and harbor improvements, and other public enterprises, it seems to me that the money which is devoted to the development of the National Capital is not ill spent.

The principal contention of both gentlemen is that their constituents are opposed to being taxed for the maintenance of the National Capital. With all due respect to the gentlemen, I do not believe that this opposition is either widespread or serious. If so, it has sprung up like a mushroom after a summer shower and after lying dormant for 39 years. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Proury] has submitted some figures showing the proportionate expense of the District as borne by the States. Let me take Iowa for an example. The tax upon Iowa, if it can be called a tax, is $149,912, divided among 2,224,771 people. This means a "burden" of less than 7 cents a head—and where in Iowa or anywhere else in this Union will you find anyone complaining of contributing 7 cents toward the National Capital, especially when the contribution is an indirect one? In Georgia the proportionate cost is $175,810, and as there are 12 congressional districts in Georgia the "burden" assumed by each district is approximately $14,000. It is a sum which does not come directly out of the pockets of the people, and I take the liberty of doubting whether the people of Georgia are greatly exercised over the organic act. As for California, which I have the honor, in part, to represent, I know that there is in that State a patriotic and unselfish interest in the National Capital, even though the great distance across the continent makes it impossible for any great number of Californians to make frequent visits here.

There is still another grievance. It relates to real-estate transactions. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] says:

Since the act of 1878 the city of Washington has rapidly grown, and to-day many woodland tracts, many miles remote from the city of Washington, have been by real-estate speculators laid out into beautiful residence sections. Paved streets, lights, sewers, and all other modern conveniences have been brought thereto at the public expense. Millions of dollars have been spent in laying out streets and paving them, and half the cost paid out of the funds of the United States.

That, Mr. Chairman, would be a serious charge if it were true. It is not true in any particular. What are the facts? Under an act approved March 2, 1893, to provide for a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, it is expressly directed that not one penny of the cost of establishing or improving a suburban street or highway shall come out of the Treasury of the United States. In the matter of the condemnation of property, one half of the cost is to be paid by assessments upon contiguous land and the other half is taken out of District revenues. The expense of improving the high-ways is taken entirely out of the District revenues. For the sake of accuracy I append the extract from the law, as follows:

Sec. 15. That the amount awarded by said court as damages for each highway or reservation, or part thereof, condemned and established under this act, shall be one half assessed against the land benefited thereby and the other half shall be charged up to the revenues of the District of Columbia; that one-half of the amount awarded by said court as damage for each highway or reservation, or part thereof, condemued and established under this act shall be charged upon the lands benefited by the laying out and opening of such highway or reservation, or part thereof, and the remainder of said amount shall be charged to the revenues of the District of Columbia. * * * That no expense for the improvement of any street, circle, reservation, or avenue laid out under the provisions of this act, outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown, shall be chargeable to the Treasury of the United States, but such expense shall be paid solely out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Water and sewers are put in in every case at the expense of the property owner the property owner.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr PAGE of North Carolina. Is it the gentleman's contention that the appropriations made for the upkeep of highways in the District of Columbia are paid entirely out of the revenues of the District?

Mr. HAYES. It is not. I have not so stated. The upkeep of established highways in the so-called city of Washington, leaving out the suburban sections and the city of Georgetown, is paid just as the upkeep of all streets is paid in all cities I know of out of the general revenues.

know of—out of the general revenues.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Are not the highways in the District of Columbia, outside of the city of Washington, or the old city of Georgetown, also paved out of the general appropriation, half of which is from the National Treasury and half from the District revenues?

Mr. HAYES. They are, after improvements have once been

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. And is not the construction of them?

Mr. HAYES. No; they are not, nor have they been for 20

This act was passed 20 years ago and has been scrupulously administered by the District authorities. More than this, 10 years ago, on March 3, 1903, an act was approved making appropriations for the District of Columbia, and containing this provise:

Provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be so construed as to require the United States to bear any part of the cost of street extensions and all advances heretofore or hereafter made for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

It is a common belief, but not based on facts, that the improvements made in the suburbs are at the expense of the people of the United States. The law is distinctly otherwise. As a matter of fact, most of these improvements are made by private enterprise. A notable instance of public improvement at private expense was the donation of Connecticut Avenue extended, from Rock Creek Bridge to Chevy Chase, to the District, and its grading and paving at a cost of between $300,000 and $400,000, not a cent of which was paid either by Federal or District taxpayers. The United States does not, as the gentleman from Georgia asserts, pay this bill for new streets nor any part of it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman make a distinction between the pavement of streets that are laid out and used and streets that are not laid out but are put in new?

Mr. HAYES. I make a distinction, and they do in all cities, between the first opening and improvement of a street and its repair and upkeep after it is improved.

Mr. MAPES. If any community wishes to have paved a street which is now laid out and used but not paved, how is the expense borne?

Mr. HAYES. I understand that the first opening and improvement is made out of the District revenues absolutely and entirely, and not by the United States; after that, half the expense would be borne by the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MAPES. Whether it is condemned or not?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

The claim is also made, as affording foundation for attacking the half-and-half principle, that the property owners of the District are underassessed. The main basis for this claim is a report from some members of the House District Committee, who accepted figures given to them by persons employed for the purpose. According to this report, which is quoted by the gentleman from Georgia, the total valuation of the real estate in the District of Columbia should be $744,000,000, which is said to be $414,000,000 below its true value. As a matter of fact, the total valuation of real estate made by the District assessors for the current year is $517,000,000, with a revenue of $1.50 per $100 on two-thirds valuation, or approximately $5,170,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Does that include the property owned by the Government of the United States?

Mr. HAYES. It does not,

Mr. MADDEN. Upon which, of course, there ought to be taxes paid?

Mr. HAYES. I will have reference to that later on.

It is, of course, inevitable that experts will differ as to the value of real estate. There is one way, however, to determine whether District real estate is underassessed, and that is by comparison with the figures from other cities. This comparison shows that Washington is over, rather than under, assessed. The following table gives the realty assessment basis and the realty assessments raised to the 100 per cent basis in the case of 18 cities most closely approximating Washington in size, the figures being taken from the census for 1910:

	Realt	у.

In this list there are only two cities—San Francisco and Los Angeles—where the total valuation is in excess of Washington, while Cincinnati, Buffalo, Detroit, New Orleans, and other large and flourishing cities are far below the National Capital. This would not be the case if Washington property was underassessed. As a matter of fact, Washington property is now bearing all the burden that ought in equity to be placed upon it.

Nothing could better illustrate the fact that the National Capital is the home of many people of moderate means than to state that the number of property owners who pay $5,170,000 in taxes annually is 50,000. This is an average per capita of $103.

Another indication of the comparatively small wealth in Washington and the almost entire absence of a commercial population is the fact that the Commercial Club, an institution organized especially by business men, has a modest home, with about 400 members, while the Cosmos Club, which appeals to Government officials, scientists connected with departmental bureaus and semipublic institutions, and others who are not in the highly taxed class, numbers fully 2,000 members. Illustrations to show that any increase of taxation in Washington would fall largely upon a very large number of residents who are already denying themselves in order to buy small homes could be indefinitely multiplied.

There is also another method whereby it can be determined whether the people of the District of Columbia are tax dodgers and shirkers of civic responsibility. This is the per capita tax.

With revenues from all methods of taxation aggregating about $7,000,000, and the population being approximately 350,000, it will be seen that the per capita tax in the District is about $20. The actual census figures are $19.04. The per capita tax on the basis of real-estate revenues is high, as will be seen by the following table:

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I will.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman have any figures in regard to the proportion of the colored population?

Mr. HAYES. I have—I have that here. Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to hear that.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAYES. I do.
Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman, because he has given this matter investigation, whether the rates the gentleman has given for the cities compared with Washington are for city purposes? Now, then, do not these same people in these State cities pay taxes to the State and county which is used after a fashion for strictly local purposes, and is not the Washington tax confined alone to city purposes?

Mr. HAYES. Technically the gentleman is correct as to some of the cities I have named. As to others he is not.

Mr. SIMS. Those are the facts and that is the reason why

Washington is the cheapest taxed city in the world.

Mr. HAYES. In the case of Milwaukee, for example, the figures represent substantially the total taxes, as Milwaukee County is practically coterminous with Milwaukee city, and the revenues of the State of Wisconsin are derived almost exclusively from licenses and other income from corporations, and not from direct taxes on the people. When I lived there we had no State tax to pay, as a rule. When, once in three or four years, we had one, it was very small. The same thing is largely true of other States. Even in cities where a State tax is regularly collected, the amount per capita would be quite small, and would not very materially change the figures I have given.

The per capita tax in Washington, high as it is, must be considered in relation to all the facts in order to fully appreciate the price which the taxpayers pay for the privilege of residing here. The colored population of Washington is about 95,000, about 28 per cent of the total. While there are many thrifty colored persons here who own their homes or otherwise pay taxes, the fact remains that fully 90 per cent of the colored population does not belong to the tax-paying There are fully 90,000 more white persons who, be reason of poverty on the one hand, or transient residence on the other, belong in the same category. Consequently, there is a per capita tax of $40 upon the tax-paying population, and it is proposed by the Crisp bill to raise this to $80 per capita, a figure far in excess of any other city in the country. With taxes equitably and not excessively assessed, the National Capital may be expected to steadily progress. Increase taxation to the point of extortion and confiscation and immediately the accessions to the population will cease, while thousands of residents will seek refuge in places where they are not in danger of being taxed out of existence.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I do. Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman know of any Member of this House who wants to put the tax burden of supporting this city upon the local people?

That is the purpose, I understand, of the Mr. HAYES. gentleman from Georgia, the gentleman from Kentucky, and the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that to be entirely different,

Mr. HAYES. That is the way I see it.

The abolishment of the half-and-half plan does not mean the Government of the United States will not pay its proper proportion. It might be more than half or less than half. Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I do.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I desire to ask the gentleman if he is familiar with what is known as section 8 in the District appropriation bill recently passed by the House where provision was made by which the National Government is contributing to the upkeep of the city of Washington and District of Co-

Mr. HAYES. That is the usual course.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Not at all the usual course. The principle written in that section that went to the House in the appropriation bill was to pay, out of the revenues derived taxes on property in the District of Columbia, supplemented from the Treasury of the United States, such amount as in the judgment of Congress might be necessary for the proper conduct of the District. What does the gentleman say about that section?

Mr. HAYES. I say that, after an experience with the present plan for 40 years last past, in my judgment there is no occasion for changing the present policy.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Upon what does the gentleman base the equity of the half and half or any other percentage basis of appropriation?

Mr. HAYES. I will tell the gentleman what I mean. the city of Washington, since I have been a Member of Congress, we have added quite a large extent of territory to the Capitol Park, extending to the Union Station, which will make the city very much more attractive when the visitor is landed here

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. However, that was done from national appropriation and not the District appropriation.

Mr. HAYES. In that particular instance it was, though half the cost of other parks added has been paid by the District. But that park must be improved-it has to be kept upotherwise it will be an eyesore instead of an attraction, and half of this expense is paid for, as half the expense of all parks is paid for, by the District.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It will be kept up just as the Mall is kept up-by a national appropriation.

Mr. HAYES. But half of the amount is supplied by the District taxpayers. I would like to see all the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue in the control of the Government as a part of the Mall. I would like to see it added to the park system of Washington, and all that means an added expense to the District taxpayer, who must pay one-half of the expense of the improvement, care, and upkeep of these parks. I do not wish to see a niggardly cutting off of appropriations from the Federal Treasury, but, if necessary, more money appropriated from the Treasury to build up and beautify the Capital. I would like to see more appropriations and more money spent in enlarging the park system of this city, and thereby adding new beauties to it, but that means added expense for the care and upkeep of the parks, one-half of which is borne by the It would be most inequitable to ask the people of the District to stand all the expense of these improvements.

It is remarkable that after 40 years of conditions which have resulted in great progress an endeavor should be made to overturn them without offering even a substitute. If Washington had been the victim of maladministration, if its government had been inefficient and dishonest, or if the Government funds had not been expended wisely by Congress itself, there might be some reason for seeking a change. Such, however, is not the The District has prospered greatly under the system made legal by the organic act-a system which very properly recognizes the national character of Washington, appreciates that it is not a mercantile or manufacturing center, and provides for sharing the necessarily large expenditures due to the manner in which the city was originally designed. If the halfmanner in which the city was originally designed. If the half-and-half principle is abolished, is the United States to pay nothing, even though it owns land and buildings valued at $300,000,000; even though its land holdings, the excessively wide streets, and the numerous and large parks make up onehalf of the area of the city? Is the United States to accept as a gratuity such police and fire protection as the District may be willing to afford? Are Senators, Representatives, Cabinet officers, Government officials, and the strangers who are constantly within its gates to impose upon Washington for the education now gladly accorded to their children? Are the people of the District to maintain in perfect order the wide streets and avenues, which not only cover broad areas of the city proper, but which, by act of Congress itself, are compelled to be projected upon the same generous lines to the very borders of the District, and which no people in possession of their senses would ever seriously think of imposing upon themselves, but which make the National Capital what it is and should be? These are questions which instantly arise when the suggestion is made that the half-and-half principle shall be abolished. They are questions not to be decided in a hasty discussion upon a report from a committee which has not had a hearing upon the subject. There is really no necessity for their considera-tion, because it is the part of wisdom to let well enough alone. If, however, we want substantial progress in the future, even though it be upon new lines, let us be afforded an opportunity to consider legislation which will construct and improve and not destroy what we already have. Let such legislation be considered and passed upon broad, patriotic, equitable lines and not be prompted by niggardliness or a spirit of enmity or unfriendliness toward the people of the District. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Donohoe].

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I deem this a proper and, I hope, a favorable time to bring to the attention of the House the great saving to the Government that is being effected at the Frankford Arsenal and the still greater saving that can be effected through the expenditure of a comparatively small sum in betterment of that plant.

In the short time allotted me I can not hope to touch more than the high points of this subject. I must therefore be content to speak briefly of the arsenal, its advantages, its economies, its needs. The story is an interesting one, especially to those whose duty it is to make appropriations of the public funds with a view to securing the best returns to the Nation.

Frankford Arsenal is located in northeast Philadelphia, in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. It was established in 1814 and formally opened in 1817 by President Monroe. It has an area of only 63 acres, and the value of the land, buildings, and machinery is about three and a half million dollars. It manufactures most of the small-arms ammunition used by the Army, the Navy, and the Organ-ized Militia of the United States and a large part of the artillery ammunition used by the Army.

Its location as a manufacturing plant is most favorable. This fact was recognized as far back as 1875, when a board of ordnance officers recommended that the plant be enlarged and that 75 acres of additional land be purchased for that purpose.

Being within the city of Philadelphia, it is easily accessible for 250,000 skilled workmen. It is within 275 miles of the softcoal fields of Pennsylvania, the source of its fuel supply; within 150 miles of Connecticut, from which it draws its brass for manufacturing; within 57 miles of Bethlehem, Pa., 58 miles of Reading, Pa., and 350 miles of Pittsburgh, Pa.; from which points, as well as from Philadelphia, it procures its steel; within 30 miles of Carneys Point, N. J., and 136 miles from Picatinny Arsenal, N. J., from which it gets its explosives for the manufacture of ammunition,

Its shipping facilities are unsurpassed. It has direct rail-road connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad, while the other railway lines that enter Philadelphia, the Reading and the Baltimore & Ohio, are within easy reach. In that great railroad center a supply of suitable cars for all purposes is procurable at all times on short notice. It has also a dock on the Frankford Creek, within a few hundred feet of its entrance to the Delaware River, so that shipments by water may also be made.

These advantages of location-unrivaled labor market, proximity to supplies, and adequate transportation facilities—are the main factors in the development of the remarkable economies of Frankford Arsenal. I will quote figures that have been obtained from the War Department and some of which have already appeared in the Congressional Record.

In the manufacture of artillery ammunition on orders issued between July 1, 1912, and April 25, 1913, and which will be completed by July 1, 1914, the total cost, had the contracts been placed with the outside parties who bid on the work, would have been $2,879,904.99. As made in Frankford Arsenal, the total cost will be $1,900,064.05, a saving to the Government of $979,840.94.

In the purchase of artillery ammunition on orders issued between July 1, 1912, and April 25, 1913, and to be delivered before July 1, 1914, the Government will pay the sum of $1,112,334.95, whereas if made in Frankford Arsenal the cost would be $800,120.11, showing a loss of $312,214.84 to the Government in the purchase of a part of its requirements in artillery ammunition.

In the manufacture of small-arms ammunition between July 1, 1912, and July 1, 1913, the price asked by outside contractors was $2,267,840, while the total cost of its manufacture in the Frankford Arsenal was $1,657,530, showing a saving to the Government of $610,310.

In the purchase of small-arms ammunition during the period July 1, 1912, to July 1, 1913, the Government paid the sum of $331,030, whereas if made in Frankford Arsenal the cost would have been $242,054, showing a loss to the Government of $88,976 in the purchase of small-arms ammunition.

It will be seen, therefore, that in the manufacture of both artillery and small-arms ammunition at Frankford Arsenal there has been a saving to the Government in 18 months of $1,590,150, and in the purchase of such ammunition from outside concerns in the same period a loss of $401,190, or a grand total of $1,991,-340 in favor of Frankford Arsenal.

But this large sum is not all that has been saved to the Government in the past 18 months through its operations at Frankford Arsenal. Other articles of artillery ammunition are made there which are not procured from outside manufacturers and, hence, no comparison of their cost can be made and no savings The arsenal during the last fiscal year returned to the War Department over $500,000, resulting from the utilization of surplus and scrap materials which were on hand or had been received from various sources during the year. And during the present fiscal year there has been returned to the War Department over $190,000 resulting from utilization of the same character.

In other words, within a period of 18 months the Frankford Arsenal, out of the funds allotted to it, has been able to give back to the War Department over $700,000 as a result of the skill of the management and the men in utilizing in manufacturing operations materials which in many establishments would be disposed of as mere scrap.

As to the needs of Frankford Arsenal, I have frequently visited the place, and recently I made two inspections of it in company with some Members of this House. These inspections convinced all of us that there is urgent need of increased facilities in the way of buildings and machinery. In the manufacturing shops the forces were operating in two shifts and on some work in three shifts per day. We found men working in garrets that are entirely unfit for American workmen. We were unanimous in declaring that an arsenal that must be approximately considered. two or three shifts a day in times of peace is poorly equipped to take care of orders in time of war.

We saw frame structures that were erected almost half a century ago, and in which are housed the chemical laboratory the electrical shop, and other departments. These frame buildings were condemned by the Inspector General's Department of the Army several years ago, and they should certainly be replaced with one fireproof building, which can be erected at a

To bring the plant up to date there would be required for the erection of new buildings and for the improvement of old ones the comparatively small sum of $140,000, and for additional machinery to increase the output there should be appropriated $200,000. The buildings and machinery urgently needed would therefore cost $340,000. Surely we should not hesitate to appropriate that sum when we know that the Government is losing $312,000 this year on existing contract orders for ammunition from outside manufacturers.

The acquisition of about 25 acres of adjoining land is very desirable. On that land could be erected powder magazines, which are now too close to the shop buildings and magazines for the storage of explosive ammunition, which, for want of such storage facilities, is now required to be shipped to Picatinny Arsenal at a cost of $18,000 per annum, which represents interest on $300,000. This land can now be bought for $154,000. In case it is bought by parties who may utilize it for sites for dwelling houses, it is highly probable that much of the experi-mental work now being done at the arsenal, such as test firing, will have to be abandoned.

Then there is need of increased fire protection, which would cost about $35,000; an office building to cost $75,000; a storehouse to cost $45,000; new sidewalks to take the place of those that have been condemned by the municipal authorities, the cost of which would be about $10,000; some low land to be filled in at a cost of $10,000.

The additional land, buildings, machinery, and improvements that are needed would cost little more than $750,000. The expenditure of even a smaller sum would save to the Government the $400,000 which it loses this year in being obliged to purchase a portion of its ammunition from outside manufacturers. Would any level-headed business man hesitate to make improve-ments in his plant if it were demonstrated to him that such improvements would bring him a profit of over 50 per cent per annum on his outlay? The improvements which we ask for Frankford Arsenal would net the Government more than that rate of profit. Estimating the entire plant at $3,500,000, it pays for itself, even now, in 30 months. An expenditure of $800,000 would save the Government over $400,000 a year in time of peace and would so far improve the facilities and increase the capacity of the plant that many times that sum would be saved capacity of the plant that many times that sum would be saved in time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Logue].

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, it would seem almost needless to add anything of a statistical character to the very full and complete statement given by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Donohoe].

It must necessarily strike us that we have at the Frankford Arsenal, in Philadelphia, a Government plant out of which great economies can be worked. The figures are generally stated as showing a saving of $750,000 annually on the basis of ammunition manufactured at our local arsenal and that purchased outside. At the present time the desire of those responsible for the maintenance of the arsenal and its upkeep is the extension of the plant, in the way of establishing buildings, as detailed and set forth by my colleague [Mr. Donohoe]. It appears to me as presenting a condition that warrants careful consideration. Three-quarters of a million dollars in a single year saved in any manufacturing plant certainly directs the attention to the extension of that plant so that greater economies can be obtained. This appears manifest, in view of the proviso that we have in the bill as regards the manufacture of 90 per cent by the Government as against 10 per cent purchased from out-side. The high skill furnished by our locality, its close access to the source of supplies, and all the other matters referred to by my colleague manifest good ground upon which to base any appeal for the extension of work at Frankford Arsenal.

Another thought that strikes me is the fact that this work is carried on under three shifts in order to produce the output that at present comes forth from the Frankford Arsenal, which means both the working of the night and day shifts. The new buildings that have been suggested, the extension of the plant, would relieve that and would enable this work and greater work to be done under the natural hours of work, which is the daytime instead of the night.

There is also a sanitary necessity there for the extension which is asked. I feel, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the Frankford Arsenal presents a subject that should appeal to us in our desire for the extension of economies, inasmuch as this plant, from an economical standpoint, is manifestly one of the best in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am especially gratified to see it place a provision in this bill providing that at least 90 per cent of the small arms shall be manufactured in Government arsenals. It is not my purpose to take up the time of the committee in order to go into detail as to the many opportunities for economy and the improvement of the efficiency of the service in existence at the Frankford Arsenal. On a recent visit to that institution I saw a splendid opportunity, which any business man would be glad to embrace, for the placing into execution of these proposed improvements. I am absolutely opposed to working three shifts a day in an institution of this kind during times of peace. It has been said by those who favor purchasing ammunition by contract that it is essential that these outside plants be en-couraged. I would so increase the size of this plant at the Frankford Arsenal that a full amount of supplies could be manufactured by one shift. The purchase of the proposed additional ground and an appropriation for the erection of these buildings would furnish a plant of sufficient size to meet the requirements with one shift. And then, having that improved plant ready for emergencies, in time of war, if need be, these two additional shifts could be put on.

I have a statement which I am not going to tire the committee by reading at this time, and I shall ask permission to print it in the Record. Therefore, I yield back the balance of my time, and

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the statement referred to:

FRANKFORD ARSENAL-STRIKING ECONOMIES.

PYPLANATION

EXPLANATION.

The tabulated statements which follow show the savings made at the Frankford Arsenal in the manufacture of artillery ammunition and small-arms ammunition when comparison is made with the latest contract prices for the same articles procured from outside manufacturers, and these statements also show the additional savings that would be made if the Frankford Arsenal had the capacity to manufacture the articles of artillery ammunition so ordered from outside manufacturers. It must not be overlooked that the Frankford Arsenal manufacturers in quantity other articles of artillery ammunition which are not procured from outside manufacturers, and therefore in such case comparison of cost can not be made and no savings reported.

The contract cost of finished shrapnel case forgings for the 3-inch gun and of a limited number for the 4.7-inch gun comprise the cost of the shrapnel case forgings as procured from the outside manufacturer and the additional arsenal cost of machining them so as to place the finished shrapnel case in the same condition as the corresponding shrapnel cases manufactured at the arsenal, for otherwise in these cases no comparison of cost can be made.

The total arsenal costs include 15 per cent to cover administration, depreciation, insurance, and interest charges. The contract cost includes 3 per cent which is added to the contract price to cover the cost of inspection, such as compensation of inspector, cost of conducting firing tests, etc.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Pennsylvania consume?

The CHAIRMAN. He consumed three minutes and yields

Mr. CALDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr.

BRYAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the matter I desire to refer to may be considered as somewhat remote from the bill now pending, but I think it is not entirely foreign to its subject matter. I shall not in any way criticize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. The matter I wish to refer to now has to do with court-martial proceedings and the method by which they are sometimes conducted. I think it is well worth while considering.

I picked up, the other day, a copy of The Public, which is a responsible paper, formerly edited by Mr. Post, of the Department of Labor, and in the issue of January 23, 1914, this statement is printed:

ment is printed:

POSSIBLE END OF A MILITARY CAREER.

For writing a letter to the President's private secretary, Mr. Joseph P. Tumulty, complaining that after seven years' service in the Army he had been denied a furlough, Clarence L. George, an enlisted man in the United States Army, is a convict in the Leavenworth Penitentiary serving a year's sentence. It is said that the letter never reached Mr. Tumulty, but somehow came to the knowledge of George's superior officers who ordered him court-martialed for going over their heads to make a complaint. If this were the only recent case of unjust treatment of private soldiers by officers it might not be worthy of much attention. But it is not. Not long ago a soldier named Waldo Coff-man, who, after his enlistment, had become a Socialist, was sent to the penitentiary after being court-martialed on a charge of insulting the flag. His release was ordered by the Secretary of War—after many protests had come to him—on the ground that the evidence did not justify conviction. Coffman claims that his political views were the real cause of his prosecution. There is at present at Fort Flagler an enlisted man undergoing punishment, a Roumanian by birth, named Lee Kosti Aryan. He had after enlistment become convinced of the correctness of Christian doctrine. He realized that his oath as a soldier required violation of these principles and took for granted that his constitutional right to religious liberty would enable him to secure a discharge from the service. Instead he has been imprisoned, and, it would seem, must either agree to abandon his belief or submit to punishment for the rest of his term.

Now, that is a matter which is published by a responsible paper, and I understand further references later have been made to the George case, and the statement is made that the letter spoken of not only reached Mr. Tumulty, but after the inauguration was referred to the Secretary of War. I do not know whether this be true or not.

I have had some experience, Mr. Chairman, in connection with courts-martial out at the Puget Sound Navy Yard, and I do not believe that the system by which Army officers and Navy officers are permitted to incarcerate soldiers and sailors in Federal prisons at hard labor during time of peace for terms of years is right. I think that no man ought to be incarcerated at hard labor in a penitentiary without a jury trial.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman means in times of peace? Mr. BRYAN. Yes; in times of peace. Surely no such right as that ought to be given to a board of officers.

I attended a court-martial at one time as attorney for a young man who was up before such a court, accused of some military offense; in fact, I have appeared before such boards several times. But at the particular time I refer to the man who made the charge against the accused boy was one of the judges who tried the case. That is only one irregularity that I mention now, but there are other irregularities along that line that might be discussed.

There is another point that I want to present: Since my election to Congress, in the latter part of October, 1913-

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania? Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman did not state the result of the trial in which he represented the boy.

Mr. BRYAN. The boy, I will say to the gentleman, was, in the first trial, convicted, but I had the verdict reversed by supe-They reversed it because I had challenged the right of the officer to serve as prosecuting witness and judge in the same case. There is generally no chance to save one of those boys by any exercise of legal intelligence, however. Later on they punished him just the same, and they made life miserable for him. I finally got him transferred to another vessel.

I had a talk not long ago with one of the young officers of the court, a graduate of Annapolis, and I mentioned the fact that I often met very bright young men of the Navy and marine enlisted force at meetings of the Odd Fellows and Masons. told me that he did not belong to any such organization, and he said that the reason why he did not want to join a lodge was because he was there likely to meet one or more of those boys and be thrown on an equality with them, and that it would be ruinous to discipline. Of course, this view does not prevail with all the officers. For instance, I have many times seem Col. Pendleton, who had charge of the Marine Corps at Bremerton, engage in conversation with the boys under his command at lodge meetings. He is a very splendid and efficient officer.

The other incident to which I referred a moment ago was that of a young man named Herman Fuerst, who had a record of "excellent" all along the line, who had been placed in charge of three we wiscomers do not have the placed in charge of the wearings who was presented along time. He add them of three marines who were prisoners doing time. He had them at work in a room that had a little alcove or L to it, and he was walking up and down his beat on the side of the room where these boys were at work. Two of them were at printers' cases. It was in the printing office at the Puget Sound Naval Station. On the opposite side of the room, in the entrance to the alcove, was the third prisoner, sweeping the floor, when, without warning, he went to a window and leaped out. By the way, he had been a good prisoner and was recommended for disciplinary barracks and clemency, and was the last one any guard would suppose would try to escape. When he leaped out the window Herman Fuerst, the guard, very quickly fired at him as he ran, but he got away, and they put this man Fuerst in prison for letting him escape. After Fuerst had been in prison 60 days, without trial, the matter was called to my attention and I wired the Secretary of the Navy as follows:

OCTOBER 25, 1913.

Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy:

Secretary of the Navy;

Herman Fuerst, marine, has been held prisoner at Puget Sound Naval Station for 60 days on U. S. S. Philadelphia, awaiting instructions as to whether he should be tried for permitting a prisoner to escape on August 25. The record is at Washington and upon investigation it will be found that this man was very diligent and ought not to be seriously blamed for failing to kill the prisoner when he escaped. He had charge of three men in a printing office; one of them escaped through a window. Fuerst fired two shots and used all diligence. Yet he lies in prison without trial or consideration. He has an excellent record and is a model soldier. I believe he ought to be released at once. J. W. BRYAN.

I received the following reply:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, October 28, 1913.

Hon. J. W. BRYAN, M. C., Seattle, Wash.

My Dear Mr. Bryan: The receipt is acknowledged of your telegram relative to the trial by general court-martial of Herman Fuerst, private United States Marine Corps.

In reply you are informed that the department, having directed that Fuerst be brought to trial by general court-martial, as recommended by the Bureau of Navigation, charges and specifications have been preferred against him by the department for neglect of duty in suffering a general court-martial prisoner to escape from his custody and disobedience of a lawful regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy, in losing sight of the said general court-martial prisoner, in violation of article 84 of the Rules and Regulations for Naval Prisons and Prison Ships.

Ships.

The statements contained in your telegram will be given careful consideration when the record of the trial is received in the department for review.

Sincerely, yours,

Franklin D. Roosevelt,

Acting Secretary of the Navy.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like to have just a moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Fuerst was then tried by a general court and ordered to the penitentiary at hard labor for two years, together with loss of pay and dishonorable discharge. Owing to my interest in calling the matter to the attention of the department here, as a Member of Congress, his punishment was mitigated to a year in disciplinary barracks, with restoration to honorable service at the end of the term.

Now, hard labor and dishonorable discharge is a terrific penalty on an honorable soldier. It blots his career for life. A convict and a disgraced man for life for absolutely nothing. From my careful investigation of this case of Herman Fuerst I am absolutely sure his negligence was of the very slightest degree. Every Member of this House commits as much negligence every day of the year in connection with official duty. He was not accused of any kind of collusion or moral turpitude. The officers told me he was a good soldier and they were sorry for him. He is a big brawny German, and all who know him would trust him to the limit. Yet if I had not intervened here this fine fellow would have gone to a felon's cell instead of serving, as he is now, in the disciplinary barracks at Bremer-No civil magistrate or jury in the country would have thought for a moment of punishing him. If a commissioned officer had been guilty of similar negligence and it had become of record, he would probably have been graded down two or three points on his record. These cases make me ask why young naval cadets and Army officers should be clothed with the right to order men to Federal prisons at hard labor to be disgraced for life. This should not be done in time of peace without jury trial.

I believe yet that when this matter is again called to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy, and the details of it are further presented, he will assist in procuring further consideration for this young man, in order that he may be pardoned and restored to duty. He fills the very best requirements of efficiency in all that stands for good soldiery.

I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks the following letter, which I wrote to Fuerst in the discharge of what I believed to be my duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

The letter is as follows:

Mr. Herman Fuerst,
U. S. M. C., Disciplinary Barracks, Bremerton, Wash.

Dear Fuerst: I am very sorry that the officers felt it their duty to inflict such heavy sentence upon you. The judgment was two years at hard labor and dishonorable discharge at the end of the term, together with loss of pay. The officers here, considering my pleas on your behalf, mitigated the sentence to one year at the disciplinary barracks. They assure me that this means that you will be saved from the dishonorable dismissal. Further, that at the end of six months you can apply to be put on the probation list, and if you are a good soldier you will not have to serve more than eight months at the barracks.

I felt a deep interest in your case, for I believe you to be a good man and a splendid soldier. It was too bad that this fellow was allowed to get out of your sight even for the one moment when he jumped through the window. Your past excellent record ought to be a commendation to you hereafter. I have investigated the record and I find you credited with excellent for proficiency, excellent for obedience, excellent for sobriety, and excellent for average standing. Your character is also recorded as excellent. It is true that your record shows one item of neglect, in that you were mildly disciplined for minor neglect while on sentinel duty on the Nipsic on one occasion.

Since your explanation of this incident, I do not believe you were really gullty of much of a breach on this occasion.

I talked with the officers who knew you, and from all I could gather they generally have confidence in you, and it was generally hoped about the ship that leniency would be shown you.

The record also shows that your man, Sowers, who escaped, was the last man any diligent officer would have supposed to have had any such intention, since he had been recommended with the disciplinary barracks and was about to be practically liberated. The record further shows that you were under a heavy burden in guarding these three men and k man.

Hoping that I may hear from you again, and that you will render good account of yourself by being obedient to orders and discharging with care all duties devolving upon you, I remain,

Yery truly, yours,

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] has kindly agreed to give me 30 minutes of his time. According to my figures I had 35½ minutes remaining. I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners]

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills pending before the committees of this House touching certain phases of the general economic problems of agriculture. Congress will doubtless give consideration to some of them. In order to deal properly with this proposed legislation it is essential, of course, that Members of Congress understand the magnitude and scope of its importance. From the remarks which I have heard from time to time since I have been a member of this body it has become apparent that many Members consider agricultural problems as of concern only to those who No doubt this is due largely to the fact that these produce. matters have generally been discussed only from the stand-point of the farmer and the Government's obligation to him. Because I believe it not possible to deal properly with the situation while so restricted a notion is held as to the scope of concern involved, I shall endeavor to show the consumer's interest in this matter and to indicate the Government's duty to the whole people.

The thought and energy of the Nation has been so completely absorbed in city building, and agriculture has been so universally regarded as an inexhaustible commissary, useful only to feed business, that the importance to the whole people of its relative decline has not been appreciated. No general alarm has been felt, and no general understanding of the responsible causes is evidenced. I make no claim toward being an authority on this subject, but I hope to make some contribution toward an understanding of the situation, its causes, our duty in the premises, and at last to suggest some practical things which the Government should do. I shall not urge the just claims of the agricultural classes for economic justice. The time has come when the present vital need of all the people can be met only by giving to them that justice.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that the world is consuming its surplus of agricultural products, and that the country is losing its producers, is of infinitely more concern to the millions in the cities who must eat to live than it is to those remaining on the farm who produce primarily to sell. The number of producers has become relatively so small, the current volume of production so small, the number of consumers so large, and the imperative demand so large that if we were to slip a cog in the machinery of production the problem would not be one of high cost of living merely, but this: Where at any price can we obtain the elements necessary to sustain life? When that time comes, as it must, unless we deal effectively with this situation, the people on the farms through whose hands these elements must pass can hold back enough for themselves and theirs, but what of the people in the cities with only a few days' supply?

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the world is eating its surplus. In the United States there were 9,840,239 less cattle, aside from dairy cows, in 1910 than in 1900, and in the three years from 1910 to 1913 there was a further loss of 10,249,000. In 1913, therefore, we had 20,000,000 less beef cattle than in 1900. During the three years last mentioned we also suffered a loss of 7,734,000 sheep; from 1911 to 1913 we lost 4,442,000 hogs. So much for the meat stuffs. Now, what of the grains? In 1898 we exported 41 per cent of the wheat grown in the United States. Since that time our exportation has constantly decreased. In 1912 it was only 12.83. In that year our importation of wheat was greater than ever before. As for corn, our exportation of that staple for that year was 1.65. Now, the production of wheat throughout the world seems to have kept pace with the increase of population. But when the world's total of wheat, barley, rye, and corn is considered, I am certain it will be found that this total has not kept pace with the increase of population.

The estimate of these crops for last year, as made by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, was 9,965,000,000 bushels, a total increase in bushels over the preceding year's crops of 51,000,000—in other words, a gain of only one-half of 1 per cent. In this connection the constant loss of food animals should be borne in mind. A few years ago it was not unusual for the South American packing houses to receive steers 7 years old; now the limit is about 4 years. The agent of this Government who recently conducted an investigation in that country says that the herds are decreasing. According to good authority the sheep holdings of the world have in recent years also decreased 100,000,000. Another feature which adds to the gravity of the situation is that the world's population is becoming removed from the basis of supply. In the event of failure of the principal crops the opportunities of each family to resort to some substitute are being lessened.

Here are some figures with reference to the decrease in the agricultural populations of other nations: From 1895 to 1907 Germany lost almost one-fifth of its percentage of agricultural population. From 1890 to 1911 Denmark lost one-thirteenth; from 1890 to 1900, Norway, one-thirteenth; from 1800 to 1900, Sweden, one-twelfth; from 1888 to 1900, Switzerland, one-sev-

I do not know the loss in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, but in 1907 I heard the statement made in the course of a debate in the House of Lords that during the preceding 25 years the number of rural laborers in England had decreased 25 per cent. Between 1900 and 1910 our urban population increased 34.8 per cent, our rural population only 11.2 per cent. In this estimate of residence of population towns of less than 2,500 inhabitants are classed as rural territory.

It is not my purpose to go further into the agricultural conditions of other nations. I merely want to make clear that we can not trust to any other country for a dependable supply for our people. It ought to be evident from what we know of our own condition that something must be done which has not heretofore been done. The poet, the orator, the publicists, and the efforts of the Government have all falled to turn back the tide sweeping in from the country upon the great centers of population. It is true that each individual who goes to your cities from the country adds one more name to some city directory; it is also true that he adds to the keenness of the struggle of those who live there, reduces the output of what they must have to sustain life, and adds his tax upon the diminishing production.

I grant, Mr. Speaker, that there was a time when the economic condition surrounding the business of agriculture did not greatly concern those who lived in the cities. Until comparatively recent times the children of those who farmed were as a general proposition likewise compelled to farm when they grew to maturity, because they did not know how to earn a living except by doing that which their parents had taught them as they assisted in the farm work. But the extension of educational advantages to the rural districts is liberating the farmers' children from an ancestral vocation, while the spread of democratic notions has opened to them every door of opportunity, and the modern cities are bidding for them. Those who do not farm should recognize that men are no longer compelled to farm through lack of opportunity to choose among the vocations of the country. Let us clearly understand now that they can be induced to farm only by the payment of as much net profit as a like investment of time, capital, and ability in any other business would bring. There is another phase which concerns the nonfarming classes. There can be no hope of reducing the cost of living by reducing the profits of the farmers, for the very evident reason that they are quitting at the present profit.

The only place where we can hope to make a reduction is in the charges upon production and distribution. The movement from the country to the town is not the cause with which we must deal; it is not a primary cause; it is a result. We must deal with the cause which is responsible for that movement. We read a good deal about the superior advantages offered by the country. Most of these articles are written by people who live in the cities or by people who have recently gone to the country, and who celebrated their change of residence by getting into the public prints. I have watched a number of such people, and almost without exception it takes only a few years for them to absorb all of the joys of the country, and, needless to say, they willingly go back to the hardships of the city. The scenes of the countryside and the lights of the silvery moon have mighty strong competitors in the moving-picture shows and the arc lights of the city, especially among people who have once been accustomed to them. But I recognize that these are not the sort of things which control the movements of the masses of the people, unless their civilization be in process of decay. Individuals make mistakes with reference to the change of residence, but the mass of population moves under the operation of irresistible economic law toward the centers of best opportunity. This law has controlled the migration of all ages, and will control it until the end of time. It is absurd to rely on this back-to-the-country sentiment or on any other sentiment to establish and maintain balance of population as between the country and city. We had as well face the true situation and deal with it as it is. This matter is controlled by unyielding economic laws-laws as unyielding as the law of The movement of the mass of population shows gravitation. where the best opportunities are as unerringly as the current of a stream shows the direction in which the lower level is to be found. Agriculture and the vocations of the city have been bidding against each other for the capital, the brawn, and the brains of the Nation, and the vocations of the city have been outbidding agriculture.

If we would turn back the tide, we must help agriculture to raise the bid. That is all there is to it. We must ourselves pay more for what we consume, or we must help our farmers to get a larger part of what we pay. That is our only choice. The burden of high rates of interest, the loss of the thousands of carloads of food which rots in the fields and in the railroad yards while seeking a market, the robbery of the unscrupulous commission men, the amount of loss resulting from dumping crops upon an oversupplied market, are being shifted to consumers, and we are feeling this weight. We will feel it more. The time is at hand when we will pay every cent of these The relative abandonment of agriculture and the corresponding decrease of the volume of production, and with the resultant increase in prices, will not cease until farming yields as much net profit as any other business would yield. To pay the net profit, insure the farmer this net profit, would, of course, necessitate the payment of all losses and charges connected with the business. In the price of the things we eat, therefore, we must pay for the food products which rot after production; we must pay the high interest charged to the farmers; we must pay the profit of the speculator who purchases from the farmers; we must pay for the wasted energy resulting from the unscientific, chaotic method of sale and distribution of farm products. If we want to reduce the cost of the table, here is the place to do some effective work.

This is a new condition which never before existed on the earth. While population has always moved toward the centers of best opportunity, it has before this time moved slowly and with great difficulty. The lack of opportunity to equip for any other business bound the members of each succeeding generation to the business of their respective ancestors. The bonds are being broken rapidly now, and if we will take the trouble to investigate, we will find the rule to be that when education liberates the country boy he goes to the city. Read the story of your last census report. Notice in the examination of your jury panels how many men now living in your towns and cities were born in the country and how few now living in the country were born in the cities. This is one of the far-reaching problems of modern society. It is of interest, Mr. Speaker, and should be profitable to examine somewhat into the development of this problem.

In the first half of the last century—notably between 1830 and 1840—the utilization of steam and of electricity brought about an industrial revolution upon the earth. The business of the country began to adjust itself to the changed conditions resulting from the application of these forces to the activities of men.

But agriculture was not able to move forward with the pro-The reason is clear, and does not reflect discredit upon the country. The industrial cities took many of its educated, ambitious young men. Those engaged in agriculture were widely scattered. Their duties confined them to their respective farms. The consumers of their products came to be strangers, living far away. Effective business organization of agriculture was impossible under these conditions, and it came to occupy the position of a commissary in the economic relations of the country. Its products are not now sold in the sense that the minds of the producers and consumers meet in agreement are not now and consumers meet in agreement. ment upon the price. Agriculture is at an economic disadvantage; other businesses feed upon it. That we may clearly understand the situation with which we must deal, it is well to recall that before the application of steam and electricity to transportation and to manufacturing and other industries there existed throughout the world a condition of relative independence in so far as the several communities as entities were con-Each community produced from necessity most of what it used and used most of what it produced. The wool, cotton, and flax raised in the several communities became, through the process of home manufacturing, the finished garments. The hides from the carcasses of home-grown animals went to the local tanner, then to the local leather workers, who were largely paid in barter. The local blacksmith and woodwork man made most of the farming implements. The miller ground the grain into meal and flour and took his pay in grain, and so on through the whole list of the simple requirements of that It is also worthy of notice that because of lack of transportation facilities each family carried a large surplus. Practically all of the people lived in the country. New York City two centuries old, then had only 200,000 people; Boston had 60,000. Now over one-half of our families live in the cities and towns. They carry no surplus and no one is carrying any and towns. They carry no surplus and no one is carrying any for them. The surplus accumulated during those times is being consumed. The food level of the world is being lowered, and this can not be stopped under the economic conditions which now surround agriculture; the system of marketing agricultural products will not tolerate a surplus.

With the application of steam and electricity the manufacturing energy formerly distributed throughout the country became concentrated in the cities. The shoe cobbler, no longer able to compete with the equipped factory, with its cheapened modes of transportation, moved to such places as Boston. The spinning wheel and family loom became relics of a bygone industrial age and their operatives went to centers like Fall River. The ox-team driver, unable to compete with the railroads, left the country and became an engineer. Agriculture, unorganized, deserted by many of those equipped for leadership, was hurled into the vortex of an industrial revolution, one of the chief results of which was the organization of every other business, the producing end and the selling end as well not only deserted, but despised by public opinion, with the youth of the land taught that it was to be followed only as a last resort, when no other means of making a living could be found. When it goes to the market to buy it pays whatever price the other businesses ask, and when it takes its products to market to sell it accepts whatever price other businesses offer. It is compelled, by reason of its economic disadvantage, to do If anyone wants to unravel the mystery of the drift of wealth and of population from the country to the towns, let him swap horses a few times with the other fellow fixing the price of both horses. After a few trades he will be carrying his saddle home on his back, and the mystery will be solved.

This condition has had twofold influence upon the movement of population.

Before this revolution no employer had many employees, because the slowness and expense of transportation held him to a restricted market. With the opportunities for broader markets not only did the centers become successful bidders against agriculture for the labor to operate the industries of the cities, but the opportunity to trade with the country at such an enormous advantage turned the drift of the Nation's wealth to the centers. The cities could bid more to have their churches and schools erected and operated than the country could. They could bid more to have their streets constructed than the country could bid for the construction of its highways. Thus the cities' better advantages attracted many who might not have been attracted by their superior money-making opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I am not unmindful of the fact that the improvements of agricultural machinery released a part of the farming population that was natural—a natural and beneficial re-We are not dealing with the result of that improve-That improvement is not now giving motion to the stream of population from the fields of production which is flowing into the cities with increasing volume and momentum. We people of the cities must know that it is as necessary to have a surplus of grain in the Nation's granary, as it is to have a surplus of gold in the Treasury, and we should know that there is no way under existing conditions to build up or maintain such a surplus. It is not humanly possible under existing conditions to preserve equilibrium of population as between the country and the cities. There must be equality of advantage if there is to be a balance of population. When the products of the cities go to market they have marked upon them a price which incorporates the cost of the material, the cost of production maintenance of plant, and all other expenses, plus a profit. The farmer's products are sold at whatever price they will bring, regardless of cost of production, profit, or anything else. hear a great deal about the law of supply and demand controlling prices. No such law exercises control over bargainers who are not equally advantageously situated. Would this law control the labor market as between organized railroad operators and disorganized railroad operatives? Under modern conditions this law has but a limited determining influence upon current sales. It can not be depended upon to insure justice. If two men were upon an island and one had all of the water and the other all of the food, and if the necessity of one to have water in order to live was a present necessity, while the other's necessity for food was not a present necessity, this law would not insure a just bargain between them. How can farmers hope to be protected in the sale of their current products when they are forced by unavoidable circumstances to dump their crops upon the market in quantities in excess of the demand of the consuming market?

In this method of sale they can not hope to receive the protection of that law; they violate its provisions and must receive its penalty. I do not deny that that law is coming into control, but when it does the consumer will pay the price which the law would now decree were it in control, and the law of retribution will force society to pay with interest the penalties which the farmer's economic disadvantage now compels him to bear. The scramble of a hungry world for what he produces will soon take care of his profit, but will not improve any feature of the present situation. The present increase of prices does not indicate improved economic conditions surrounding agriculture. It is the herald of coming hunger widespread. If we will not divide the benefits of a bountiful harvest with the producer, we are going to the cupboard one of these mornings and there will be nothing for breakfast. We are working toward a lower food-supply level, because a small crop brings more money to the producer than a big one, and just a little surplus knocks the bottom out of prices. In 1910 the southern farmers produced 12,000,000 bales of cotton. The world said that was not enough. The next year they produced 16,000,000 bales. They had to get up early and work late to raise and gather it. It cost them millions of dollars more to respond to this demand. The world's appreciation was shown by penalizing them $125,000,000. Is it any wonder that the country boy quits in disgust when a 16,000,000-bale crop brings $125,000,000 less than a 12,000,000-bale crop. The corn crop of 1912 was considerably larger than that of the preceding year, yet it brought $50,000,000 less money. It is all right to reduce the price per unit when the number of units is larger, but to make the total price for the larger number of units less than the price for a smaller number of units is to bid for the smaller number of units, for a shortage of supply in the country. The thing which augments the danger of this situation is the uncertainty of the volume of any year's production. The insects or the drought may come and the brightest prospects be blighted. No one can guess when they will come. We must make it economically possible as it is physically possible to create and carry a surplus as a protection against the hazards of seasons and insects. This is the problem of all of the people. All of the people must eat to live, while the farmer's greatest profit is when the people are hungry. If we will remove the penalty now imposed for a bountiful harvest, the productive energy of the country, undiscouraged, will go on with its work, and when the years of low production come we can eat the surplus carried over from the more fruitful years. It is said that the man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew is a public benefactor, but we are offering mighty poor encouragement for the two-blade production, if the two blades bring less money than the one would have brought. Farmers do not now produce primarily to feed their families, as they once did. They produce to sell for money.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes. Mr. PLATT. Is the gentleman familiar with the economic theory that people have not quit the job in the country because of low prices so much as because they were driven out by improved farm machinery? Do you think there is anything in that theory?

Mr. SUMNERS. I mentioned that a little while ago. do think there is something in it, but not anything which affects the question which I am discussing. The gentleman was not in the House a while ago when I undertook to show, and I believe I did show, that the world's surplus, accumulated during those days when each family had to provide itself against the hazards of season and insects because of lack of transportation facilities-those days when each community had to be selfsufficient because it could not import from another section-is now being eaten by the world, and still the movement from the country to the town goes on. It is not the movement from the country to the town produced by improved agricultural machinery which is producing an acute danger. That is a patural movement and is in response to the demands of economic laws, but it is the movement of population from the country to the town because the citizens of the country and town can not trade with each other on a basis of equal advantage which I am discussing. That is the vice of the situation.

Mr. PLATT. I quite largely agree with the gentleman on that point. Does not the gentleman think it might reverse itself, and if the cost of living is high enough it might drive the people out of the cities and make them produce something for themselves?

Mr. SUMNERS. Here is what I think of it: I think if we do not now remove the injustice that creates an abnormal differential in favor of the city as against the country, if we wait until this movement from the city back to the country begins, we will have widespread hunger in America before the tide is turned back. This tide from the country to the town is moving with tremendous velocity; and just as the tide that comes in from the ocean sweeps high on the shore before it begins to recede, that thing will happen. There will be people hungry in this country before it turns back.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. SUMNERS. I do.
Mr. GARNER. Lest the remarks of the gentleman might create the impression that he would have the Government fix the prices at which the farmer should sell his products, I want to ask him if he wishes to convey that idea?

Mr. SUMNERS. Certainly I do not.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman another question in relation to his marketing proposition, as to which he has not gotten down to details: The gentleman would have that, I presume, under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture? Is the gentleman familiar with the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, in which he recommends the abolition of the present bureaus and the giving to him of the opportunity to reorganize his department without any bureaus whatever, but retaining heads of different departments? Would it not be just as well to have his marketing division placed under the head of another department, as it ought to be, rather than in a bureau, as it now exists?

Mr. SUMNERS. In reply to that inquiry I will say to the gentleman that at this time my effort has been to show the general interest in this sort of remedial legislation rather than to discuss the details of legislation, because I realize that in the brief time allotted to me that would be impossible. It has occurred to me that in view of the fact that the National Government must deal with this question, it would be well for the Members of the American Congress to understand the general scope of the interests involved.

Mr. GARNER. Now, may I interrupt the gentleman once more?

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I know the gentleman's intense interest in this subject and his splendid capacity to illuminate it. The Department of Agriculture, as I understand it, a year ago started out to investigate this identical question, and it has been forecast that the Agricultural appropriation bill would carry about $200,000 this year to continue that work. Does the gentleman know of any better method by which Congress could go about ascertaining the best remedy to apply to that state of affairs which he has just outlined?

Mr. SUMNERS. No, sir; except that in addition to their investigation they would do well to listen to and accept these views with reference to the matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. I assume that the gentlemen having charge of this work will undoubtedly take cognizance of what the gen-

[Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, if we want to avoid the possibility of a bad harvest or a succession of bad harvests confronting us with an acute shortage of the elements necessary to sustain life, we must devise a system by which the farmer will be paid more upon the basis of value than now, and will not have to depend for a profit upon the nonexistence of a reasonable surplus and upon current production being so small as to result in sharp competition among consumers apprehensive that there is not enough for all. I want to call especial attention to the situation with reference to the sale and distribution of perishable products. As a rule these products go out into the dark to seek an unknown, unlocated purchaser. They may reach a profitable market or they may reach a glutted market and rot in the railroad yards, while somewhere equally accessible, if the conditions had been known, there is a need for these same products at a remunerative price. I speak more of the producing possibilities of the country, though the statement is true as to actual efforts to market, except in limited sections of the country, where the ability to specialize and other favorable features make it practical to form effective marketing agencies.

Frequently the intervening charges are so great that the producer can not get a price which would justify harvesting his product, while the prices charged the consumer prohibits the general use of that same product. Year before last, when I was in east Texas, I saw thousands of bushels of vegetables rotting in the fields; fields of cantaloupes ungathered, because a price could not be had sufficient to pay for marketing. I bought them retailed at the stores at 10 cents a dozen. Thirtysix hours away by fast freight they were selling at 10 cents apiece. This price charged to the consumer denied this luxury to the average man. Under anything like a proper method of distribution these melons could have gone to the table of the average family at a price which would have given the farmer some reward for his labor. Another instance which is typical: In the lower Rio Grande section of my State a man produced nine carloads of head lettuce; he was careful to bleach it; there was none better. He shipped two cars, and on one car he had to pay $9 freight above the price the lettuce brought, and for the other car the commission man drew on him for $13 above the price the car brought. The other seven cars rotted in the field. This was a loss to the farmer-a food and an economic loss to the country. Somebody wanted that lettuce, but the man down there on the Rio Grande did not know who wanted it. That man may have quit the country. He may not have been able to incorporate the value of the lettuce in the price of his products which reached the consumer, but as a general proposition these products which rot are being paid for in part at least in the price of products which are consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has

Mr. CALDER. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes, in order that he may answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more

Mr. CALDER. I represent in part the great city of New York in this House. The subject that the gentleman is discussing is one of the most important things affecting our people that any man could discuss in any place.

Mr. SUMNERS. I thank the gentleman for his appreciation. Mr. CALDER. Two years ago our governor appointed a commission to investigate market and transportation conditions in our State, and one of the things they reported particularly, startled me. It appears that in one of our Long Island villages a farmer sent 25 bushels of string beans to market. At the end of two weeks he received back the large sum of 93 cents for those string beans. An analysis of what string beans were selling for by the quart or peck measure in Brooklyn at that time showed that they brought about $2.25 a bushel by the quart measure. I hope when the gentleman concludes his remarks he will discuss that phase of the situation.

Mr. SUMNERS. How much time have I remaining?

Mr. CALDER. The gentleman has two minutes and a half.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes addi-

Mr. CALDER. The gentleman has seven minutes more.

Mr. DIES. When the gentleman answers that question I hope he will also state whether he knows anyone engaged in the string-bean business who is making much money at it.

Mr. SUMNERS. With regard to the particular question asked by my colleague from New York [Mr. Calder], that being a purely intrastate matter, I imagine the people of New York will have to grapple with it. The most casual student of these matters knows that the time is at hand when consumers must pay it all. It is inevitable that society shall pay the farmer as much net profit as he could get in any other business.

Our fathers have given us no precedents with reference to this problem. The elimination of this waste, the maintenance of the balance of population as between the country and the city, and the creation of the ability to carry the surplus from the years of bountiful harvest to supplement the yield of the years of low production constitute a new problem which has come to challenge the genius of this generation, and we must deal with it upon the responsibility of our own judgment. None among the many problems which have come to us out of the evolution of matters is more difficult or more far-reaching in the extent to which it touches the yital interest of all of the people.

Gentlemen may hesitate to commit the National Government to new activities, and it is well to hesitate, to the extent of extreme caution. But we have no choice here. We are dealing with a problem as vital as life itself. To a large extent no generation can choose its activities. All of the generations of men who have lived before us have been shaping our task. Inversely, pressity drives us to its performance.

exorable necessity drives us to its performance.

Government had its genesis in necessity. It exists for no other purpose than to afford the individuals who constitute it, the machinery by which to promote the common good. When the necessities of a people change, the activities of their government must correspondingly change. When the individuals acting as such are not able to deal with a situation affecting the body of citizenship, the dealing with that situation becomes : solemn governmental duty. It is perfectly apparent that individuals acting as such can not deal with this situation. agricultural organization has been strong enough to do so. Were it possible to obtain it, the possession of such strength would give a power which the absolute monarchs of old never dreamed of having. Society will rue the day, if that day ever comes, when it drives the agricultural producer into such an organization as that. The several States are not equipped to deal with this situation because the movement of these products from producer to consumer is largely interstate, and the problem is national in its scope. Texas could not effectively aid its own truck growers in the distribution of their products, because products from other States could demoralize any market into which its shipments might be directed.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. With pleasure.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I presume the gentleman is approaching the question of the remedy. Will not the remedy we have just begun to embark upon of obtaining a better market for the agricultural division of our Government result in a better market system, so that the farmers may get reasonable prices for their products as a result of their work?

Mr. SUMNERS. I thank my colleague for that question. I do believe it.

Mr. Speaker, this is what the National Government should do. It should create that which for the purpose of designation we will call a sales department, perhaps a part of the Agricultural Department, but having close working relations with the Department of Commerce, the Consular Service, and the Treasury Department. Its duty should be to bring into coordination the Agricultural Department, and agricultural colleges of the several States, the cooperative organizations in the country and in the cities and towns, and all other agencies which might be utilized in bringing system into the sale and distribution of farm products. Practically all the parts of the necessary machinery now exist. The remaining parts should be supplied, the machine assembled and put in motion without delay. It should be a clearing house of information available to the seller and to the buyer. It should afford a facility in making sales similar to that which a real produce exchange could afford. Through its agency these products could be standardized. Sales could then be effected at the point of origin, and the congestion of some markets, while others are unsupplied, could be avoided. It is indispensable to success that the facilities afforded be so valuable as to attract general patronage. The service, therefore, of this department should be free, just as the activities of the Agricultural Department in helping to improve cultural methods are free. If generally patronized, it could direct the distribution of farm products in compliance with the consuming demand. This would insure a dependable supply of fresh products during the shipping season, minimize fluctuations in prices, and avoid waste from decay in glutted markets.

With such a department in operation, in touch with and exercising great influence over every feature of crop movements and thoroughly advised as to production and demand, a safe plan could be devised and put into successful operation by which, during the marketing period of our staple crops, money could be loaned on them at a low rate of interest, and upon the surplus when the yield exceeds the necessities of the current year. I am not talking about any "corn-tassel" currency. I am not making any bid for the farmers' votes or having a wild dream. I know that with such an organization as I have partially outlined, working with an organization controlling rural credits, money could be advanced upon the staple crops while they are in process of being marketed without danger of loss, without violating any principle of economics, and in conformity with proven business principles. The advancing of this money during the marketing period would largely prevent the present dumping methods in the sales of these crops. By a more gradual system of marketing a larger part of what the consumer must pay would go to those who produce. The consumer therefore would not have to pay as high a price as under present and prospective conditions he must pay in order to induce the producer to continue his work. European speculators, who purchase two-thirds of our cotton crop now rushed upon the market, the bulk of it in three months, take from the American balance of trade between forty and eighty million dollars annually.

The movement of our crops in so limited a time is a severe tax upon our financial institutions and necessitates transportation facilities which during a large part of the year are not used. I remember in a cotton-rate hearing held in Texas a few years ago, in which I represented the proponents of reduced rates, the railroads established as against us that the movement of the cotton crop in a short time necessitated large expenditures at the various stations and at the seaboard terminals and much rolling stock which traffic did not require at any other time. This is a clear economic waste and an unnecessary strain upon the commercial aids of the country.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask the gentleman this question: In certain places he states that people do not get more than one-quarter on the farm of what the stuff is selling for in the cities. I am wondering whether there is not some fault with the farmer in the line of not adopting wide-awake methods. Yesterday I noticed near Boston in an orchard under an apple tree apples that had been allowed to lie and rot. Now, whose fault is that?

Mr. SUMNERS. I want to be entirely candid about it. I grew up on a farm.

Mr. FESS. I am a farmer, too.

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes; and let me make this suggestion to those of us who have gone to the city. The cities, when they began to bid against the farm, took many boys capable and equipped by nature for leadership. They left the boys in the forks of the creeks with whom we used to kill water moccasins, and when we have that interest on the one hand and the interest of the teeming millions in the city, who are crying to us as representatives of the National Government to protect them not only against a foe that may be coming with guns, but to protect them against hunger, we can hardly stop to say that the farmer has not done his duty.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will hear me at some later time for a more detailed discussion of what should be the Government activities. I have not attempted even a complete outline.

My purpose upon this occasion has been to make clear, if possible, that these matters are of general concern, to the end that a united effort may be made by Members representing cities, as well as those representing country constituents, toward stopping the food and economic waste resulting from the present method of sale and distribution of farm products; that we might try to establish a system under which the farmer would receive enough profit to prevent the industries of the cities attracting him from the farm, while his remaining on the farm would make certain the food supply of the millions in our cities. There is no other food supply on the earth upon which we can depend, but if there were with our vast agricultural possibilities we must not confess inability to utilize them for the Nation's support and seek among other peoples for the bread to feed our own. The last thing which any Nation can afford to yield is the ability to feed its people.

As a representative of the people we must not confess our inability to grapple with this problem which in the evolution of time has come to challenge our genius. We are proud of our cities, but as patriots concerned for the future of our Nation we must recognize that great cities, though inevitable, do not add to a nation's strength, but are a tax upon its vitality. It is a fact proven by the history of every age, other things being equal, that nation is strongest the largest per cent of whose population pursues the productive vocations of the country. the great crises of the past, when Governments and civilization have withstood the supreme test, it was largely the conservative strength of the country people which saved from chaos and destruction. It is all right to build cities, but we must not sap the strength of the country to build them. We must not dig the stones from the foundation of our civilization and build them into fragile superstruction. The highest interests of the country, and of the city as well, cry out against this. These are matters which lift us above local consideration and partisan politics and challenge the best of thought and constructive action which this Congress can give.

I hope at some later time to have the indulgence of the House for a more detailed discussion of the necessary remedial legislation, both with reference to marketing and a practical system of farm credits

Mr. CALDER Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the following clipping from the Journal of Commerce, of New York City, of January 20, 1914:

IMPORTING STRUCTURAL STEEL—HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINERS TO BRING 27,000 TONS INTO SEATTLE.

SEATTLE, WASH., January 19.

Twenty-seven thousand tons of structural steel from Europe will be shipped to this port within the next four or five months on vessels of the Hamburg-American Line, according to officers of the steamer Sithonia, which has finished discharging a 500-ton structural steel consignment. This heavy shipment of steel to United States markets is said to be due to the new tariff rates. It is to be brought in about 10 different lots.

It will be remembered that when we were discussing the metal schedule of the Underwood-Wilson tariff bill, attention was called to the fact that the result would work a great hardship on the American iron and steel mills and their employees, and in the end put them out of business on the Pacific coast. The information contained in this newspaper dispatch is a confirmation of the stand then taken by those who believe in the American protective-tariff system.

The 27,000 tons of structural steel is a large and attractive amount of business, and during the dull period now existing in the iron and steel industry it would furnish employment to a great many men now idle, simply because there is a lack of orders to keep the American mills running full time. Early in 1912 an investigation was made to ascertain the number of men employed in producing 1,000 tons of steel rails from the ore to the finished product. Although no formal statistics had ever been compiled on this feature, a careful review and study of the matter and the labor figures indicated the following:

Approximate number of employees in direct steel-making company, including allied departments, such as ore mining, coal and coke producing, and the rail-and-lake transportation of ore only:

For rails made in Pittsburgh district, per 1,000 tons of rails, 5,200 men employed for one day.

In the production of a ton of structural material I am reliably informed there is as much labor employed as there is in the production of a ton of steel rails and, on the same basis, the production of 27,000 tons of structural material would furnish direct employment to 140,400 men for one day; or, in other words, employment to 1,000 men for 4 months and 20 days. On the average basis of a family of five to each workingman, this 27,000 tons of material, if produced in this country, would support, house, feed, and clothe 5,000 people for practically half a year. In addition to the above, there are also workmen employed by interests not allied with steel manufacturers, engaged in furnishing service and material of some kind to steel companies used by the latter in connection with the production of finished steel products, but there is no means of estimating what this number might be.

When it is taken into consideration that the average wage paid to a steel worker in this country is two and one-fifth times that paid in European steel-producing countries, it will be readily seen that the diversion of such large orders to foreign manufacturers is not only a serious loss to the American manufacturer but a great blow at the prosperity and welfare of the American wage earner.

In this connection it is well to study the quarterly report of the United States Steel Corporation, published in the daily press on yesterday. During the last three months of 1913, under the present tariff law, that corporation had a deficit of $1,002,-303, compared with a surplus of $11,348,778 for the September quarter, $13,619,365 for the three months ending June 30 last, and $7,369,600 for the quarter ending March 30, 1913. The net earnings for the December quarter, 1913, showed a shrinkage of $15,414,000, compared with the three months ending September 30, 1913.

The surrender of our Pacific coast market to foreign iron and steel mills and foreign workingmen is one of the numerous socalled blessings we have had inflicted upon us under the "New

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, a little less than a year ago it was my privilege to be down in the Canal Zone, and I had an opportunity to go over the fortifications in company with Lieut. Goethals, who is superintendent of this wonderful work. wonderful as is this part of the work in the zone, it is not the most interesting feature to me. The commercial significance of this completed world task appeals to me.

I have been a student of the probable trade routes of the country for many years, and I am convinced that the Pacific trade route, to connect the Occident with the Orient, with the North American Continent as a distributing point, is the greatest trade route on earth.

Three hundred and seventy-five million dollars represents the probable cost of the Panama Canal to this Government. this, $40,000,000 was paid to France, divided as follows: $25,000,000 for usable excavations, which would have cost the United States that amount to have done it; $10,000,000 for the Panama Railroad, which has earned the Government since its purchase $7,000,000. This leaves $5,000,000 to pay for the franchise and machinery secured from France.

For this vast outlay what does the canal visitor see that has been done? A water route 50 miles in length, with a minimum width of 300 feet at bottom in the Culebra cut and a maximum width of 1,000 feet of channel in the Gatun Lake. About 6 miles at either end below the locks is salt water and on sea level, with a depth of 45 feet. About 37 miles from the Gatun Dam and Locks up the Chagres River and through the Culebra cut to Pedro Miguel Locks the fresh water is 85 feet above sea level. The water is supplied by the Chagres River. From the Pedro Locks to the Mira Flores Locks the second lake is about 55 feet above sea level.

To lift the ships from sea level to three higher levels six locks are used, each 1,000 feet long and 110 feet wide. Three are at the Atlantic end-at Gatun Dam-and three at the Pacific. However, these are not together.

The places of greatest interest are the Gatun Dam, with locks and spillway, and the famous Culebra cut. The dam is 115 feet high, 1½ miles long, and one-half mile wide at the bottom, gradually sloping to top, where it is 100 feet wide. The material to build it came from the Culebra cut as rock and silt pumped by steam dredges from the lake. It is said the excavations would make a tunnel 14 feet in diameter through the center of the earth 8,000 miles long, including that for locks. The cement used would build a wall 12 feet wide, 8 feet high, from New York to Washington.

The feats of engineering do not stop with excavations and constructions. The plan for controlling the flow of the Chagres River in the wet season, of operating the locks for the passage of ships, of guarding against possible accidents, all have challenged the admiration of the world.

The work of sanitation, without which the canal could not be built, is second only in importance to the engineering. This yellow-fever stricken country is one of the healthiest in the This situation is not confined to the American quarters, but to the native villages as well in the zone. The two cities Panama, the capital of the Republic, and Colon, once the typical town of filth and disease, are to-day, under the direction of Col. Gorgas, as clean as any city in the United States.

Much of the work being done here is not noticed at once. victory over disease is a feature, however. The hospitals, as fine as can be found anywhere, are object lessons. The commissary department, where from 35,000 to 40,000 workmen with families are provided with food and clothing, much of which must be brought 2,000 miles, and that into a tropical climate, is another mammoth work apt to escape the attention of the casual visitor.

The various departments have so attracted the attention of nations that most of them have sent experts to the zone to study the operations. I became acquainted with a visitor at the Tivoli Hetal, one of the two Government hotels in the zone, who proved to be a British subject traveling from Australia to London. He was asked by his Government to go by the zone and study the system of sanitation and to report to the home Government. His enthusiasm was unbounded. I also fell in with the premier of Saskatchewan, who was there for a similar purpose. One of Russia's most famous engineers spent some time on the canal for the same purpose. In other words, the nations of the world are paying tribute to American genius and enterprise.

But the larger aspects of the canal are seen in its effect upon the world's routes of trade. As far back as 1867 William H. Seward predicted that the Pacific was to be the world's greatest trade route. Recent developments in the Orient give new meaning to his prophecy. Japan 50 years ago was unknown in the West. In that span of time this small nation, ambitious to become the Britain in the Orient, has developed a rank in government and commerce that has become the envy of the Far East and a subject of interest and comment in the West. Students of the oriental people declare what Japan has done China can do more easily and better.

Here is a people—425,000,000—as it were, asleep, which within the last 30 years is showing signs of a wonderful awakening. As Japan was aroused by the invasion of western ideas, so is China, which is literally honeycombed by gradually taking on the western spirit of progress. In cities like Shanghai, which has an American quarter in which can be found all modern American conveniences, such as paved streets, trolley lines, automobiles, telephones, electric lights, can be found daily hosts of progressive Chinamen who are studying modern civilization, which is gradually percolating the Empire. The light of the modern world is breaking through Chinese superstition, and its people are beginning to respond to the possibility of this world Western ideas are taking deep hold upon the mind awakening. of the Celestial Empire, which, on February 12, 1912, abandoned its ancient Manchu dynasty, which has held control for 5,000 years, to give way to the National Assembly. This is following close in the steps of Japan. In the light of what Japan has done in the last 50 years, what will China do in the next 50 years? Her commercial significance can be predicted by what the Chinaman has done in the Philippines, especially since American invasion and control of the islands.

When these millions of people become the producers in the Orient they will be found the world's greatest market.

Columbus was not the first nor the last man who longed to tap this rich treasure. England has pursued a consistent policy for 150 years to secure full control of the Orient. To accomplish this she has built Gibraltar, the most heavily fortified citadel, and likewise she has control of Hongkong, the most heavily fortified citadel on the Pacific, to command the Orient. She has planted her coaling stations at convenient places, has girdled the globe with her oceanic cables, and has built a fleet of commercial vessels many of which could be speedily converted into transports if necessary, until she has a line of ships which placed side by side would reach 14 miles. To-day she has so perfectly platted the sea that no great vessel with her bunkers filled with coal could be found anywhere on the civilized sea that it would not be at its own coaling station before its coal would be exhausted. This policy has enabled England to maintain her rank of mistress of the sea. As such she carries much of the world's commerce and has thus far controlled the route connecting the Orient with the Occident.

Russia for the past 75 years has steadily approached this prize. So far back as the Crimean War the purpose was announced. The movement of this giant of the north is to satisfy an ambition to command the earth, a suggestion easily discerned by a notice of the procedure of the past 150 years. mighty glacier this giant moved from the north until Europe is Russianized from the frozen north to the Danube Provinces The movement eastward is unchecked from the Baltic to the Ural Mountains, across Siberia to Lake Baikal, thence on to Harbin, then to Vladivostok—a contiguous territory comprehending one-sixth of the globe.

For the past 75 years the dream is to become a world power upon the sea. To do this an outlet must be secured in the Far Port Arthur was the objective point. The history of the building of the famous transcontinental railroad 7,000 miles long, to be owned and operated by the Russian Government, is familiar to all. To fortify Port Arthur securely and dominate Manchuria are told in the war with Japan, which has temporarily retarded this policy.

The movement is but temporarily checked. Russia's fear is not Japan. Her competitor is her long-time commercial rival. Great Britain, with an all year open port on the Pacific. Russia | will connect the Occident with the Orient with a 7,000-mile haul; England, via Suez, must travel 13,000 miles. Russia can cover the distance overland in 17 days, while the fastest sailing vessels of England require 51 days. Time being an element in the control of the mails and the parcel post, it is evident that the latter will fall under the control of Russia.

The supreme question is, Will Russia likewise control the freight? This is the eastern question, and explains the great freight? This is the eastern question, and explains the great interest the two countries—Great Britain and Russia—have in it. For the last 70 years she has steadily encroached upon England. She has already absorbed Turkestan, Afghanistan, the Pameer region, and Baluchistan. Russia is to-day the dominant power in Persia, with a central bank of $25,000,000 capital at Teheran financing the enterprises of this Asiatic province. The last sensitive issue is that of Thibet, which has furnished for the last 10 years the sensation of the East. Here is the latest approach against England's dominancy in India, with her 300,000,000 fretful population. Whatever be the real source of this supremacy in the Far East, all will agree that commercial advantage is the basis for it.

With this in view, note the significance of the Panama Canal. Vessels loaded with the treasures of the Far East destined for western Europe can most easily turn their prows eastward across the Pacific via Panama route, touch upon North America, the world's greatest distributing center, and land in western Europe after having traveled a very little distance more than by way of Suez. Here is the most significant result to be expected from this gigantic enterprise. It will probably help solve the eastern question. In that case, it will give the United

Whether it is wise or unwise to fortify the canal there is a difference of opinion. I am inclined to favor the proposition. Whether it is wise or unwise to maintain a naval power beyond the necessity of policing the seas will continue to divide our public men, because our people are not a unit on the subject. However, it would appear that a majority of our people would indorse our embracing the opportunity afforded by the opening of the canal to tap this commerce of the Orient. people of this country, both the large and small Navy men, would favor the Government using the money required to build four modern battleships of the dreadnought type, the number recommended by the naval board, to build a line of steamships of the modern type to connect North America with South America and also the Orient.

With that outlay of money we could place a line of ships so that one could leave New York going to the Orient every 10 days and one leaving Manila for New York at the same time. This line would touch Cuba, Porto Rico, Colon, Panama, San Francisco, Honolulu, Yokohama, Shanghai, Hongkong, and Manila. Another line could touch the west coast of South America, with its growing trade. This amount of money would build enough ships of such type to be used as transports in time of war and enough to touch on each port named every 10 days, giving time to load and unload and still keep three ships in dry dock for emergencies. These ships can be built in American shipyards, where American capital is invested and where American labor is employed. It will not only begin the policy of re-viving our merchant marine by tapping this wonderful growing commerce of the Orient but it will start a campaign of sea power, from a commercial standpoint, which from the nature of the case is destined to be ours if we but embrace the opportunity.

Our past experience in our wonderful capacity for industrial organization, due to our genius in financial management and our skilled labor, the most skillful found anywhere in the world, lead me to the conclusion that we will not only build all of our own ships for this growing merchant marine but, as in other fields of world competition, we will soon enter upon the building of the ships for other nations as well. This policy of reviving our lost merchant marine would also bind our insular posses sions together by the strongest possible bonds-commercial interests.

Here seems to me rests our great opportunity to make the completion of the canal a signal success from a commercial In that case our Nation might be justified in making a gift to the nations of the earth.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the status of the time on the respective sides; how much time has been con-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York has 36 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Carr].

Mr. CARR. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to commend the work of the subcommittee on appropriations in preparing this bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] and his associates have labored long and tirelessly and have presented to this Congress a bill that is comprehensive in every detail. Those who are interested in this great work would have no trouble in finding the various items appropriated for fortification purposes, and they are analyzed in a manner that can be readily understood. I have been interested somewhat in the work this country has been doing in Panama. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] has just said that he made a trip there some time ago and visited the fortifications. That was a pleasure that I have had also within the last two or three months, and I feel that this work, considering what other nations of the earth arc doing, is a work absolutely necessary. I hope the time may come when these fortifications will be no longer necessary, but that time is not here yet.

But I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the various provisions of this bill. I wish to call the attention of the committee to some remarks that have been made here by gentlemen who are interested in the arsenal at Philadelphia. I can heartily commend what has been said with reference to the Frankford Arsenal. If the Government of the United States is going to maintain arsenals at Philadelphia and Rock Island, as evidently has been its purpose, then those arsenals should be maintained in a manner befitting a great nation such as ours. I believe it is right that the Government should embark in the manufacture of materials necessary for its defense in time of war. I believe that we should manufacture what ammunition may be necessary, without leaving it to private enterprise. It is not only right but it is necessary.

Mr. Chairman, if the figures that have been given to me are correct, and they are the figures that have been stated by the gentlemen who have discussed this question on the floor, I am satisfied that there would be an enormous saving to the Government of the United States if the Philadelphia Arsenal were given an opportunity to manufacture the ammunition now left to private enterprise, such as ammunition for the smaller guns. Upon a visit to Philadelphia I found on inspecting the arsenal that the facilities for manufacturing artillery are not adequate to the needs of the Government. Mr. Chairman, we pay out enough money to private enterprise in two years in excess of what it would cost the Government to do the same work to give to the Frankford Arsenal the money that is necessary to make the improvements there. I found that the construction of additional buildings would cost about $210,000, and that to equip such buildings with machinery would cost about $350,000 additional, making the total cost of about $560,000. Mr. Chairman, if $560,000 can be saved in a period of about two or three years by enlarging this arsenal and giving to it the contracts that are given to outside parties, is it not the part of wisdom to make these appropriations?

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARR. Certainly.

Mr. BARTON. Would the gentleman follow that further and advocate the making of armor plate by the Government?

I would, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further for the statement that ought to go in in connection with his statement, that the capacity of the arsenals now is sufficient to take care of every bit of manufacturing that there will be money appropriated for this year?

Mr. CARR. Mr. Chairman, I was about to add that statement—that the capacity of the arsenals is sufficient to take care of the appropriation in this bill. But it is not sufficient to take care of all the manufacturing required. Touching the question as to whether the Government should go into the armorplate business, stated as a general proposition, I believe this Government should take care of everything that may be necessary for its defense in time of war rather than leave it to private parties, and especially in view of the enormous saving that will result therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Carr was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it is a very great satisfaction to one coming from Philadelphia to hear the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Carr] indorsing the proposed improvements at the Frankford Arsenal. What he says with regard to the necessity for those improvements is true. They are badly needed, and they are wholly warranted by the splendid record that arsenal is making in saving the Government vast expenditures in the manufacture of small-arms ammunition. It has been pointed out here not only in the RECORD by me, on a previous occasion, but in the address made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Donohoe] a little while ago, that a saving of $1,300,000 as between the arsenal cost and the manufacturing cost had been made at that institution in one year. If that is true, and we have the figures of the War Department to justify it, then it would not take three or four years' savings to make good such improvements as are needed at Frankford, but the savings of one year would be sufficient for all material purposes. I am very glad the gentleman has referred to this situation, because during the last two or three years the appropriations at that arsenal have not been kept up to the standard that many of us believe they should have attained. They have been falling off. This may be due partly to the peace policy of the United States, about which we hear so much in recent days, but nevertheless it is true that the appropriations for the manufacture of small-arms ammunition at this arsenal have been decreasing during the last two or three years

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. What does the gentleman mean by small armsrifles?

Mr. MOORE. Small-arms ammunition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Ammunition for rifles?
Mr. MOORE. Yes; for rifles, revolvers, and so forth.
Mr. SHERLEY. We have approached very nearly a complete supply of ammunition for such arms.

Mr. MOORE. I believe the hearings set forth that the smallarms appropriation is less this year than at any time since the Spanish War—

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and the reason for that is we have approached the completion of the project.

Mr. MOORE. But evidently there is a reason for making the request for appropriations not only to continue a reserve to meet the actual needs of war, but in order to utilize the order to we have. It may be charged that I am criticizing appropriations made during the last two years. I am simply referring to the fact that the judgment of the War Department in this respect is not followed by the committee. I have some data here in regard to this question, but I shall not enter upon it at this time, because I want to speak upon another phase of the subject.

The country wants peace, peace from unnecessary legislation, peace from unnecessary and inquisitorial investigation. The country wants industrial peace, and the country also wants an assurance that we will have peace against any kind of foreign invasion. The President of the United States stands for peace, and it is altogether to his credit that he stands for peace. There is a peculiar condition of affairs prevailing along the Mexican border, in which he is exercising great forbearance in his desire to maintain peace, for there is a war on in Mexico and a war of annihilation, as it would seem to the observer. Yet the President of the United States sits calmly, demanding peace, though we hear from recent conferences that an embargo may be lifted by which those who are at war in Mexico may obthe anomalies of the present-day demand for peace in the United States.

The Secretary of State stands for peace, and it is wholly to his credit that he stands for peace. One of the most beautiful lectures delivered by mortal man was delivered by the present Secretary of State upon the subject of peace, and it interested and attracted all hearers; but the present Secretary of State is now engaged in negotiations with foreign powers that may or may not contemplate peace. We are discussing the question Japanese immigration at the present time. The Secretary of State would not have us imperil ourselves in any war with Japan; he stands for peace, for disarmament; but the Secretary of Labor, who also stands for peace—for industrial peace—is at variance with the Secretary of State upon this subject so far as it pertains to the Japanese.

He is in favor of involving us, if necessary, in a controversy with an otherwise friendly power by having us bar from the country the natives of Japan who seek an opportunity to obtain a livelihood in the United States. He stands for peace, but he does not want an Asiatic admitted into the United States, nor any other foreigner, in fact, unless he is qualified to fight. Rather an inconsistency in the Cabinet of a President who stands for peace.

The Secretary of the Navy stands for peace. He would not embroil us in any foreign controversy, and yet he sends us a message favoring the construction this year of two battleships, and one of his official staff appears before the proper committee of Congress to advocate four battleships this year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman add himself to the interesting catalogue of inconsistent peace advocates, inasmuch as he talks peace and wants to spend everything he can get at his

Mr. MOORE. I am coming to that. That is my very point. The gentleman from Kentucky himself, in bringing in his fortification bill to provide upward of $5,000,000, although the department wanted $9,000,000, is advocating war, though he stands for peace. But the Secretary of the Navy stands for peace, although he wants two battleships, and his representative on the naval board wants four.

This whole Congress stands for peace, and even went so far on a recent occasion as to pass a resolution declaring for peace, upon the say-so of a British statesman reported in the newspapers, and concerning which there was no official information. A resolution was passed by this House declaring for a certain cessation of naval construction for one year because it was said that Hon. Winston Churchill wanted it. I presume the gentleman who introduced the resolution was familiar with what he was doing when he said that the British statesman wanted to have the other nations of the earth cease building battleships in order that we might take a long step forward toward the great desideratum—peace. I happen to notice, however, that since the United States Congress passed this resolution the British Admiralty has been busy, and since we have officially declared for peace, though we have some contentions of our own, this same Winston Churchill, the Lord of the Admiralty, has been making a speed record in order to get constructed for the British Navy battleships that might qualify upon the high seas, and there is now a controversy throughout the Empire in regard to the expenditure of $25,000,000 in excess of the amount appropriated for the purpose of building British bat-tleships. I shall ask leave to put this statement in the Rec-ORD. It indicates how freely and cheerfully we take newspaper reports as to the attitude of foreign nations in order to pass serious resolutions in the House of Representatives. It illustrates, moreover, how prone we are to fall in with a sentiment that is stirred up in certain sections of the country that induces us to pass laws that will be inoperative and that are, in effect, against our own judgment.

Now, the gentleman has asked me a very plain question as to whether I have not stood for the construction of battleships, while I, too, am contending for peace. I admit that that is the fact, and it is based not upon the mere sentiment that Mr. Winston Churchill wanted us to do something, but it is justified by the fact that after the Congress of the United States has passed a resolution complying with a sentiment we knew absolutely nothing about officially, we are now bringing in in the regular way a large appropriation bill to continue to fortify ourselves against foreign attack.

But we are standing for peace in this administration. We want peace with all the earth and amongst our own people, and we are not quite so foolish yet, even though we stand for peace and proclaim it from the housetops and from the platform, as to let go our hold upon such battleships as we have and such armament and such fortifications as may be useful,

I rose to talk upon this question of peace merely to call attention to the fact that those who have been advocating it here are of necessity compelled to bring in bills making large appropriations of the people's money, even a tax upon the farmer, to build up fortifications and maintain them in order to be prepared for war as a sure guaranty of that peace in which we believe.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] is entitled to much respect and honor for having worked out faithfully the much respect and honor for having worked out latenthly the problem of economy in this bill. I believe he has followed the true Democratic doctrine of this year our Lord 1914. How long he may be able to continue it I do not know, but it is a fact that he has brought in a bill here which is approximately $4,000,000 less in the matter of our need for fortifications than the department itself has submitted we ought to have.

He has indicated that the plan of the experts upon this subject who desire to complete a scheme of fortification for the United States that would protect us against foreign invasion is not yet complete and that we are behind in that respect.

Four millions have been lopped off this year on general fortifi-What will be lopped off in other respects I do not know; but gentlemen are confronted, on the one hand, with their policy of economy, with which they want to convince the people that they ought to come back to Congress, and, on the other hand, they are confronted with the absolute necessity of doing the sensible thing, which they come in quietly to do when they can not do anything else.

They are bound to make appropriations for the Army and the Navy; they are bound to make appropriations for fortifica-tions; but they lop off a little here and they lop off a little there, and then they tell their constituents back in the country that they are practicing true economy down here in Washington.

I call attention to the fact that the policy of the Nation with regard to the protection of the lives of its citizens and its industries must be maintained and that, although under the rule of a Democratic majority which professes peace from the platform and from the housetops, we must still have revenues sufficient to enable us to make our fortifications secure and to protect ourselves against foreign enemies.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I do. Mr. SHERLEY. I will ask the gentleman if he has ever read the estimates submitted for fortifications?

Mr. MOORE. I have read the gentleman's very interesting report on that subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you ever read the estimates? Mr. MOORE. I have gone over the estimates hurriedly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; hurriedly. Would you grant them in their entirety?

Mr. MOORE. I do not know that I would.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why are you criticizing the committee,

Mr. MOORE. Because the testimony shows that the committee differed from the judgment of the experts on the subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman contend that we should accept the judgment and estimates of the experts and their viewpoint entirely?

Mr. MOORE. I think the committee is within its right in exercising its own judgment; but in this instance the committee has been brought to book.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the fact this, that the gentleman does not know anything about the estimates except for a little cursory examination, and has never read the Endicott Board scheme or the Taft Board scheme, and just for the sake of making a little political speech he is denouncing us for cutting the estimates?

Mr. MOORE. But the gentleman has cut the estimates, has he not?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is no crime. Mr. MOORE. It brings back directly to the gentleman the fact that whereas he and his party have brought in and passed here resolutions professing to make for international peace, they are still voting for large amounts for protection against

vania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I will append to my remarks the newspaper dispatch I referred to a moment ago. It reads as follows:

FOUR DREADNAUGHTS CHURCHILL'S 1914 PLAN—HEAD OF BRITISH ADMI-RALTY BENT ON SPEEDING UP NAVAL CONSTRUCTION, DESPITE EXPENSE— LIKELY TO HAVE WAY.

The Cabinet will hold an important meeting to-day to decide upon the financial feature of the naval program for the coming year. Since Winston Spencer Churchill has been head of the Admiralty he has spent money lavishly in speeding up construction, with the result that the expenditures have exceeded the estimates by nearly $25,000,000, and, by reason of this, David Lloyd-George, for the first time since he has been chancellor of the exchequer, is faced with a budget deficit. Hence his anxiety to bring about a halt in naval expenditure.

Mr. Churchill, however, insists upon four new dreadnaughts being laid down the coming year, together with further speeding of all naval construction, which will involve an additional expenditure of between $10,000,000 and $15,000,000.

The little-navy party consider two dreadnaughts sufficient, but the general belief is that the First Lord of the Admiralty will carry his point.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of my colleague whether he desires to use more time on his side?

Mr. CALDER. There are no further speakers on this side. Mr. SHERLEY. At the present time there seems to be no one present on the floor who desires time; and, Mr. Chairman, in the absence of anybody desiring time, I will ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

For construction of gun and mortar tatteries, $250,000.

For modernizing older emplacements, the sum of $100,000 is reappropriated and made available out of the aggregate unexpended balance of the appropriations for repair and protection of defenses of Pensacola, Fla., made in the fortifications appropriation acts approved March 2, 1907, and March 3, 1909, respectively.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, this item carried an appropriation last year of $75,000. In the estimates this year the amount asked for is $175,000. In the examination of the officers of the Army who appeared before the subcommittee it was discovered that there was on hand $265,000 that had been appropriated for the repair and protection of defenses at Pensacola. This fund was not needed for that purpose, and the committee determined to use $100,000 of this unexpended balance of $265,000 for the purposes of this paragraph. This is $75,000 more than was appropriated last year, and for the item farther down on the same page the sum of $165,000 is reappropriated out of this Pensacola fund to take care of estimates for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications. In these two items sufficient money is appropriated, and that itself makes $375,000 that we have lopped off of the War Department's estimates. That is part of the $4,000,000 reduction to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preparation of plans for fortifications and other works of defense, $5,000.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. This item is—

For preparation of plans for fortifications and other works of defense, $5,000.

Is not the preparation of these plans made by the War Department, and are not the men in the service who do the work already paid for their time? In other words, what is this expenditure for?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is for certain clerical expenses and expenses incident to the preparation of the plans. I do not know that I can amplify; the language itself clearly indicates the purpose. It is an expenditure for drawings and detailed plans for defenses, and this is an annual item that has been carried in previous bills. It is a very small sum that about covers the extra expense incident to the preparation of plans.

Mr. BARTON. I am simply asking for information as to whether or not these men are not already under pay of the Government.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I may amplify the answer of the gentleman from Kentucky. This fund has been used largely in the preparation of plans at New York. It is true that we in the preparation of plans at New York. It is true that we appropriate specifically for engineers, clerks, and draftsmen, but the department has found it necessary at times to have plans prepared away from Washington, and as I understand this fund is used for that purpose.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Is it not a fact that the department employs its own engineers and draftsmen?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not also a fact that this fund, when used at New York, for instance, is used in the renting of quarters and the purchase of supplies?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a board of engineers in New York who have not only the preparation of these plans but various other work to perform. The expense of their offices, including the clerical hire, is apportioned according to the amount of work that is done for fortification purposes and for other purposes, and the expense of the portion properly assignable to fortifica-tions amounts to about $5,000 annually, and for that reason this amount is carried.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I should like to ask if this money is being expended for the purpose of hiring ordinary clerks to work upon the plans of fortifications that this country is now completing?

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement in the hearings is to this effect:

The board has had allotted to it during the past year, for instance, in addition to the $5,000 of this item, an amount of $2,382.50 of appropriations made for fortifications in the Philippines from the specific item for Fort Drum, El Fraile.

The drafting of these plans is done by the board, and the board's expense is largely made up of draftsmen's salaries and expenses. This same group of officers is also the harbor-line board for New York City, and a part of its office expense is chargeable to river and harbor funds. The board has had allotted to it from such funds $2,382.50, making a total for this year of $9,765, the principal application of which has been to salaries for-draftsmen, as stated before, and a small clerical force which is in the office.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Then no ordinary clerks or assistants are hired for the actual work upon these plans, I take it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The thing I wanted to know was this, whether or not the department is hiring ordinary clerks to work upon the plans of these fortifications?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know whether they are ordinary erks. The board are hiring clerks, under the direction of these officers, to do certain clerical work, and draftsmen to make certain drawings in connection with the fortifications.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Are men who are not connected with the department employed for this work?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are being employed in connection with the department, under Army officers

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

For operation and maintenance of fire-control installations at seacoast defenses, $130,000.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. For the item just read the estimate of the department was $180,000. The committee have recommended $130,000.

An examination of the hearings will show that on December 5 last the department had for this item an unexpended and unallotted balance of $119,701.57. For that reason, and in view of the evidence brought out in the hearings, the committee determined to recommend a reduction of $50,000 in the estimate of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows: ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $450,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $300,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I notice in this paragraph, on line 16, "and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals." The same language is carried out in the subsequent paragraphs. Is this in accordance with existing law?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is. Mr. MOORE. It is not new?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not.

Mr. MOORE. To carry out the purpose of putting the work in the arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have always had the power to buy the necessary machinery for the manufacture of ordnance.

Mr. MOORE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $900,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what the department asked for.

Mr. SHERLEY. For $3,000,000.
Mr. MOORE. Where would this ammunition for the mountain, field, and siege cannon have been made under ordinary circumstances'

Mr. SHERLEY. Some in the arsenal and some purchased of private manufacturers.

Mr. MOORE. The most of it would have been made at the Frankford Arsenal?

Mr. SHERLEY. Quite a bit of it would have been made

Mr. MOORE. But it would not make any of the powder? Mr. SHERLEY. No; and the powder amounts to about 10 per cent of the cost. Mr. MOORE. Since the amount recommended by the committee is $900,000 and the amount asked for by the bureau is $3,000,000 I wish the gentleman would tell us why the committee thought it wise to cut it down to that extent.

Mr. SHERLEY. I explained for nearly 30 minutes in my speech opening the general debate this morning that exact point, but for the gentleman's benefit I will go over it briefly.

Mr. MOORE. It would answer some criticism I made a moment ago

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee considered the amount asked for in the estimate as being in excess of what we could properly recommend inasmuch as the largest amount that has ever been appropriated any year, with the one exception of one year during the Spanish War, was the amount carried last year, which is the exact amount recommended this year, namely, $900,000. I will give the gentleman the appropriations for the last 10 or

In 1899 there was $1,049,735 appropriated for this purpose. In 1900, nothing. In 1901 there was $115,140. In 1902, $300,000. In 1903, nothing. In 1904, nothing. In 1905, $211,600. In 1906, $200,000. In 1907, $160,000. In 1908, $160,000. In 1909, $160,000. In 1910, $160,000.

This latter item was the exact amount that had been asked for, and in explanation of such a small estimate it was testified this year that it was because they had instructions from the administration to cut it down in order to make a showing of economy. The next year, 1912, there was appropriated $300,000, and in 1913, $600,000, and in 1914, $900,000.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman knows that the capacity of the Frankford Arsenal has about been reached and that it needs to be extended to do any greater amount of business.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know, according to the testimony before the committee, that all the sums carried in this bill and the Army bill for material for the mobile Army can be used in the arsenals now at the present capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired and the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $336,800.

Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $300,000, in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. It says:

Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance United States Army is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned.

What does that refer to-everything that precedes? Mr. SHERLEY. It refers to the preceding paragraph-

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including carriages, sites, implements, equipment, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals.

Mr. MANN. Why not say, "for the purposes mentioned in the preceding paragraph"?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the language that has been carried in the bill, and I think it clearly indicates the paragraph above. Contract obligations do not necessarily mean contract obliga-tions with outside manufacturers. The arsenals frequently enter into contract relationship with the Government, and this simply authorizes contracts with the arsenal or with outside manufacturers; but, owing to the general limitation about outside purchases, it really relates to contracts with the arsenal.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think—perhaps I may be mistaken—that this coming as a separate paragraph would authorize them to enter into contracts for the $900,000 item.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has never been so construed.

Mr. MANN. This paragraph has not been carried in this way heretofore, I think.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was carried last year in the exact language and also the year previous.

Mr. MANN. I think it is not carried in the current law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not in this particular place, but similar language was carried under the item for mobile artillery.

Mr. MANN. This proviso is inserted as a separate paragraph, the gentleman will notice.

Mr. SHERLEY. It should be a part of the paragraph, and I will be glad to have the period in line 6, after the figures "$336,800," changed into a colon and the word "Provided" to immediately follow; and I make that motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 6, after the figures "$336,800," at the end of the line, strike out the period and insert a colon, and have the proviso follow as a part of the same paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for sea-coast cannon, and for modernizing projectiles on hand, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $140,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last The department in this instance asked for $400,000?

Mr. SHERLEY, Yes. Mr. MOORE. And the committee cut that estimate to $140,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the reason? Mr. SHERLEY. This is, as the gentleman probably knows, for ammunition for seacoast cannon. We already have 73 per cent of the total ammunition estimated as required. For the guns we have very much more than 73 per cent, and for the mortars something under 73 per cent; but the average for both guns and mortars is 73 per cent. Last year and the year before their estimate was $140,000, and we gave them that. This year there was no reason advanced why we should jump over 200 per cent in the rapidity with which we supplied the remaining twenty-odd per cent desired.

Mr. MOORE. They had not been using up the reserve?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is a reserve, and is not touched. The practice ammunition is carried in a separate item.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for Seacoast Artillery practice, including the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $425,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is the item that carries the appropriation for the practice ammunition, and we gave them the amount asked-$425,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the second paragraph following the one under consideration there is a provision for ammunition for the same character of guns, but in a different service. I refer to the paragraph at the top of page 5. It is for mountain, field, and siege artillery practice. I assume it is the plan of the committee to segregate each character of mechanism, especially for that character of service.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are very distinct. One is seacoast cannon, the smallest of which is 6-inch; the other is mobile artillery, the smallest of which is 3, running up to 6.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume from the gentleman's exposition this morning that the department separates the ammunition for each field of service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; they belong to totally separate services. One relates to the Seacoast Artillery and the other to the mobile Army

Mr. STAFFORD. The respective services are under different branches of the department?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are under different corps, and are entirely distinct.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the alteration and maintenance of the mobile artillery, including the purchase and manufacture of machinery, tools, and materials necessary for the work and the expenses of the mechanics engaged thereon, $45,000.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph carries an appropriation of $45,000; the appropriation last year was for the same amount; the estimate for this year is $55,000; there is an unallotted balance in the hands of the department of $10,000, and for that reason the estimate was cut by that amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mountain, field, and slege artillery practice, including the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $130,000.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman inform me what was the cut in this item?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a cut of $10,000. We increased this amount two years ago from $110,000 to $130,000, the extra $20,000 being due to the school of instruction we have in Oklahoma. This year they came with an estimate for $140,000, asking $10,000 more. We thought that $130,000, the amount allowed for the two past years, the largest amount that has ever been allowed, was sufficient.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROVING GROUND, SANDY HOOK, N. J.

FROVING GROUND, SANDY HOOK, N. J.

For current expenses of the ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J., comprising the maintenance of rail and water transportation, repairs, alterations, accessories, and service of employees incidental to testing and proving ordnance matériel, hire of assistants for the Ordnance Board, purchase of instruments and articles required for testing and experimental work, building and repairing butts and targets, clearing and grading ranges, $56,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think when we have the adoption of a reform a reason ought to be given. I am sure the gentleman has a reason for the reform adopted in that paragraph, and he knows to what I refer.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not.

Mr. CALDER. The gentleman from Illinois would like to have an explanation of the word "matériel."

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for the use of the word "materiel" rather than the word "material" is because one designates the things that go to make a finished article and the other technically represents the finished article itself, and it seems proper to use the word "matériel" here.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me the gentleman is correct in using the word.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there is an increase or decrease here?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is neither an increase nor a decrease; it is the same amount that it has been for several years.

Mr. GOULDEN. I thank you and withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of the submarine-mine matériel within the limits of continental United States, for the purchase of the necessary machinery, tools, and implements for the repair shop of the torpedo depot at Fort Totten, N. Y., for extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days in connection with the issue, receipt, and care of submarine-mining matériel at the torpedo depot, and for torpedo-depot administration, $68,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman this morning gave the committee very instructive information as to many matters. I think he has the information at hand which I would like to inquire about, and that is whether he can inform the committee as to the various places where the Government is engaged now in the manufacture of ammunition or any other kind of materiel that is covered in this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can give the gentleman the information. The following are the principal manufacturing arsenals and the general character of the work produced at each:

Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.: Manufacture of small-arms ammunition, mobile artillery ammunition, sights, and optical instruammunition, mobile artillery ammunition, sights, and optical instruments.

Watertown Arsenal, near Boston, Mass.: Manufacture of seacoast gun carriages and armor-piercing projectiles. The manufacture of shrapnel cases has recently been inaugurated on a small scale.

Watervliet Arsenal, near Troy, N. Y.: Manufacture of mobile and seacoast guns. The manufacture of shrapnel cases has recently been inaugurated on a small scale.

Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass.: The manufacture of small arms, machine guns, and pistols. The manufacture of diaphragms and other small parts needed in the work of manufacturing mobile artillery ammunition at Frankford Arsenal has recently been inaugurated at this place.

Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.: The manufacture of mobile gun carriages and other artillery vehicles; harness, saddles, bridles; personal equipment for enlisted men, such as meat cans, tin cups, etc. There is a small-arms plant at this arsenal, but that is not now in operation.

Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J.: The manufacture of smokeless powder for ammunition for cannon and small arms.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the gentleman's enumeration of the places where the various materials are manufactured I come to the conclusion that some of these places are duplicating some articles manufactured in other plants and some are devoting their attention to one line of manufacture.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. There are several of these places where the same character of work is being done, and there are also one or two places where work of a certain character is exclusively done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any information why the Rock Island Arsenal was selected to manufacture the various articles which the gentleman has stated.

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not state, but I think it has been very largely a matter of evolution in these arsenals, according to the capacity, and when the plant was sufficient to enable them to take in certain work they have done so. For instance, they have practically stopped the manufacture of small arms at Rock Island, and the reason for that is because we are so very near the total amount required that there is a falling off in the annual output.

So that last year in the sundry civil bill we carried a quarter of a million of dollars to enable them to utilize a part of the idle plant there in the manufacture of mobile artillery carriages, gun carriages, ammunition trains, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Could it not be said generally that the department is endeavoring to specialize in certain lines of manufacture of various equipments in one place as to these various establishments?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the bulk of a certain character of work i done in one place, and in some instances all the work is in one place. Of course, all the powder is made at the powder factory

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] induces me to read the testimony of Gen. Crozier on page 159 of the hearings. He says:

There are some advantages which different ones [arsenals] have. For instance, at the Rock Island Arsenal they have a power plant which the Government owns; a water power, the Mississippi River, that is very useful. On the other hand, I think the labor market out there is not as good as it is at some of the other arsenals, particularly at the Frankford Arsenal, which is in the city of Philadelphia, and which has a considerable advantage in that respect. At the Springfield Armory they have had a good deal of experience in the most economic expenditure of labor and in the use of the best kind of machinery, particularly for repetition work. They have had very valuable experience and very great success in getting first-rate output on a piecework basis.

I want to put in this statement about the labor situation at the Frankford Arsenal in Philadelphia. It is said to be one of the best in the country, and as the result of the utilization of that labor during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, there was a saving on the output of the Frankford Arsenal in the manufacture of small-arms ammunition, as against the outside purchase price, of approximately $1,300,000.

Now, one of the things which the gentlemen who have preceded me and have spoken on this question, and myself, wanted to say is that the capacity of the Frankford Arsenal has about been reached so far as building and grounds are concerned, and $250,000 having been recently appropriated for the development of the Rock Island Arsenal, the time has come, if we are to enter largely upon Government manufacture, for extensions at the arsenal at Frankford, where these excellent labor conditions

Mr. SHERLEY. In order to show that the Frankford Arsenal may not have a complete monopoly of all the good points, it ought to be stated that the same testimony of Gen. Crozier shows the advantages that exist there as to labor are offset by various advantages that exist at other arsenals. For instance, there is the advantage of cheap power at the Rock Island What shall be done, if anything, touching the enlargement of these arsenals is a matter for careful consideration. But I am inclined to think if any great enlargement is to come it will probably come at Rock Island, owing to situation as to power and the opportunity for expansion.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORTIFICATIONS IN INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT

For construction of seacoast batteries, as follows: In the Philippine Islands, $300,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With reference to the remarks made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] in charge of this bill, and with further reference to the opinion of Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, on this subject, I read from page 158 his statement, as follows:

The Frankford Arsenal is the only one which is equipped to turn out the complete ammunition. The other arsenals can not, without very considerable additions, do anything more than manufacture components.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire us to understand that in Philadelphia they pay less money to the workingmen than they do at Rock Island?

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. And since the gentleman from Illinois, or Rock Island, raised the question, I will say that I do not think that labor is sufficiently paid at any of the arse-nals, and I would like very much to see the common labor advanced even to the point of a minimum scale. It is a mat-ter of some regret to some of us that at the present time, owing to the conditions which prevail and the number of men who are out of employment in other lines of industry, that at least 2,000 men and women are knocking at the door of the Frankford Arsenal now for employment at such wages as are

I regret that unfortunate economic condition which has made it advisable for at least 2,000 men driven from employment in other industries-the textile industries, for instance-to seek employment at the Frankford Arsenal for even the paltry wages the Government pays at that place.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not regret with the gentleman, because I do not recognize the fact.

Mr. MOORE. The fact is as I have stated it, and the gentleman can ascertain it by inquiring of official sources

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I do not know about Philadelphia. It is always so far behind that it may not have caught up with the forward industrial movement. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. It is behind in the matter of appropriations now. I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania know it as a fact that the arsenals pay a greater wage than is paid in the outside market?

Mr. MOORE. No. As to Frankford Arsenal, I am advised that the wages paid there correspond almost exactly to the wages paid to other workmen engaged in similar industries in

Mr. SHERLEY. The testimony of Gen. Crozier is that one of the reasons why they do such very good work at the arsenals is because they get the pick of the men for that kind of work.

Mr. MOORE. In reply, I will say to the gentleman that I have seen correspondence which shows that the various business concerns around and about Frankford Arsenal, employing the same kind of labor, pay substantially the same wages as are paid at the Frankford Arsenal; and I regret that even at that wage so many of the mechanics to-day, owing to the economic condition that prevails in the country, are unable to obtain employment, but must continue to apply in vain at the Frankford Arsenal, to the number of 2,000, for employment which they can not get anywhere else.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they get it?

Mr. MOORE. Not now, I regret to say. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there is any distinction as to the arsenal, as to its location in the country inland, where it can not possibly be reached by foreign invasion?

Mr. SHERLEY. That would depend somewhat. Of course, an inland arsenal is more secure from foreign attack than a seacoast arsenal might be, and to that extent it might have an

Mr. MANN. If the Government should undertake to manufacture all of its ammunition, would it be advisable to have that work done at a point or at points where, if we should engage in a war and meet invasions, as is always possible, of course, except when we swell ourselves too greatly with pride, the manufacture would be beyond the reach of an invading

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is a proper consideration; but aside from that, Rock Island has this advantage: It has the advantage of a tremendous water-power capacity there. It also has an advantage in area, and it has an advantage in lessened land values that would make it seem the likely place for expansion if that expansion was to be great.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky know whether there is any water power on Frankford Creek or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The only things we get out of Frank-ford Creek are not of an agreeable sort—continued estimates [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. Unfortunately we have not gotten appropriations sufficient to deepen it.

Mr. SHERLEY. We still think that Philadelphia should attend to its own sanitary conditions.

Mr. MOORE. I will say to the gentleman that the city of Philadelphia has done its full share in looking after the Government's interests at that point.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

if it is not a fact-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not trouble the gentleman from Kentucky to keep standing for a moment. The question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is a local one, so far as he is concerned. It involves the impenetrability from a war attack of inland Rock Island, so far removed from the sea that it will not be possible for an enemy to shoot over the border and interfere with the magazines. That may be true. But I assume that the same thing would apply to the city of Philadelphia, which, so far as shooting from the coast line is concerned, is just as secure as Rock Island is. I call attention to the fact that all of the peace agitation that has swept over this House during the last month or two has been due to the fact that the people in the interior have no great concern about an attack upon the coast line. Upon the coast line we think a little more about defenses than our friends do out at Rock Island.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon for interrupting him, but I understood him to say that Philadelphia was an

Mr. MOORE. Philadelphia is an interior city, but it is also a seaport impregnable in the matter of attack. We regard Philadelphia as being as safe from attack as is Rock Island, and more capable, in the matter of its labor and fuel facilities, to manufacture this small-arms ammunition for the Government than any other point in the United States. However. that is neither here nor there. I do want to say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that so long as the Democratic Party has awakened to its real sense of responsibility in the matter of making appropriations for fortifications, for battleships, and for the Army, we have no real fear of any attack along the coast line. We believe the Democratic Party will get over its peace spasm very soon, and that it is actually getting over it now, in making the appropriations it does make for fortifications along the coast. In my judgment, it is not keeping up to the standard set by the fortification experts, but perhaps it is doing what its common sense dictates ought to be done, even though it does resolve, at the instance of the newspapers that published Mr. Winston Churchill's interview, to declare for peace, while recognizing the necessity of being prepared for war.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished and able friend from Philadelphia [Mr. Moore] in one breath is afraid that we do not make appropriations sufficient in order to protect the coast, and in the next breath says we already have sufficient protection so that there is no danger on the coast. Now, the gentleman can choose either horn of that dilemma. If there is no danger of invasion at Philadelphia, so that it is absolutely secure from invasion, then there is no occasion to complain because we do not appropriate more money to protect it. If there is danger—and the gentleman asks us to make greater appropriations in order to protect the city—I wonder if that is not a reason why the Government, engaged in the manufacture of its ammunition, should put that manufacture at a place which could not be reached by invasion? It would certainly be a sorry spectacle if at any time the arsenals where we are engaged in the manufacture of all our ammunition on the coast should be seized by an enemy so that we could not manufacture any ammunition. In that case even the inland territory would not be protected.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. MANN. Certainly. I always yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MOORE. The gentleman, of course, is intensely interested in the upbuilding of his own section of the country.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Island is not a part of my section of country—

Mr. MOORE. But it is a part of the State from which the gentleman hails. And so Philadelphia is a part of the coun-

Mr. MANN. Yes. A try from which I hail.

Mr. MOORE. Does not the gentleman think that if Washington were attacked while Congress is in session it would be easier to protect the life of the gentleman by having ammunition shipped from Philadelphia than by having it shipped from Rock Island?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea if Washington was attacked while this Congress is in

Mr. MOORE. I think, all things considered at the present time, it would be an excellent thing if Congress would not sit any more for a year or two.

Mr. BUTLER. That is why I am in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. Washington was once attacked and captured. Mr. MOORE. The gentleman knows that New York is exposed, Boston is exposed, Norfolk is exposed, and that there are other points along the coast that are exposed to attack, while Philadelphia is substantially a hundred miles from the sea, at the very basis of the best fuel market in the country, and in the center of the best labor market in the country.

Mr. MANN. I have not mentioned Philadelphia, except as the home of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. I am very proud to come from it.

Mr. MANN. And Philadelphia is proud of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For land defenses in the Hawaiian Islands, including the procurement and installation of searchlights, and the acquisition of land and rights of way, $457,000.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. Sherley] discussed this paragraph quite fully in his speech at the beginning of the consideration of the bill this morning. The War Department has advised the committee that the entire appropriation they will need for these land fortifications in Hawaii amounts to $797,000. In this bill we have recommended to Congress $457,000. The War Department maintains that if this amount of money is allowed and these fortifications are constructed the Hawaiian Islands will be absolutely impregnable—that is, the fortifications will sustain the Army of the United States in and about Honolulu for a considerable period. I think these facts should be known to the House. They are incorporated in the record, and in a way public, but should be in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD, so that the people may know it. Your committee has not cheese pared or cut down any appropriation asked for by the War Department for the insular possessions. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For tools, electrical and other supplies and appliances, to be furnished by the Engineer Department for the use of the troops for maintaining and operating searchlights and electric light and power plants at seacoast fortifications—

In the Hawalian Islands, $750: In the Philippine Islands, $3,000; In all, $3,750.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At this point I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if all the ammunition and armament that goes into the fortifications in the insular possessions is manufactured at the arsenals of the United States; that is to say, that which is not purchased within the United States? Mr. SHERLEY. All of the steel that goes into the guns is purchased because we have no means of forging steel in such The guns themselves made from this steel are all manufactured in the arsenals, and my impression is that the gun carriages are manufactured in the arsenals. As to the range-finding implements, I think all of them are bought. As to the electric lights, the mirrors are bought and the lenses are bought, and some of the material that goes into the finished electric light is purchased.

Mr. MOORE. All bought in the United States or in foreign

Mr. SHERLEY. The mirrors are bought abroad only because of the necessity of getting a certain quality. Practically everything else is bought in the United States.

Mr. MOORE. Is there any provision against the purchase abread of any commodities?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a provision carried in the Lill, and has been for years, permitting purchase abroad in limited quantities only. You will find that at the last part of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman give as in round figures an estimate of the cost of these goods that are bought in foreign countries?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not remember the amount, but it is negligible.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman, if he can, answer one ore question? Do the arsenals which manufacture in the more question? United States sell to outside parties in the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. They do not.

Mr. MOORE. Do they sell to any foreign countries, or are they permitted to sell to foreign countries?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are not.

Then it is not true that any arsenal-manu-Mr. MOORE. factured material has gone into Mexico with the knowledge of the Government of the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. I never heard any intimation of it.
Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. COOPER. I desire to ask the chairman one question: Do lines 4 to 6, on page 7, have reference to the project of the proposed fortification running from Honolulu up to Pearl Harbor, of which the gentleman spoke this morning?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who has been in the Hawaiian Islands, will recall somewhat the topography of the island on which Honolulu is situated. It has been raphy of the island on which Honolulu is situated. It has been found that, instead of there being but few places on that island where landing parties could be landed, there are many, and that it is impracticable to attempt to hold the entire island. The present scheme of land defense contemplates taking advantage of a series of hills and extinct volcanoes that make a semicircle embracing at one extreme Pearl Harbor and at the other the seacoast fortifications on the other side. By putting certain armament there and certain land defenses we can practically defend all of Pearl Harbor, Honolulu, and the seacoast defenses, and this item is toward the completion of that project. I want to say for the information of the committee that there came to the knowledge of the committee the fact that there had been transferred to the Hawaiian Islands certain armament taken from some of the fortifications in the United States and some of the ammunition to serve that armament. It has been the policy of the committee to keep a close check on all armament sent to the insular possessions,

The War Department requested an authorization of their action in this particular and an authorization for such future transfers as they might from time to time see fit to make. The committee has carried in the bill words confirming the actions heretofore taken, but declined to use language that would authorize such transfers in the future, for this reason: We recognize that conditions might arise, just as conditions did arise, that would warrant the Executive, in the proper performance of his high office, in making such a transfer, but that that would only be done in cases where the needs seemed great enough to warrant him in going ahead without the approval of Congress, and that in such cases there would be no difficulty in the future—as I anticipate there will be none in this instancein having that action confirmed; but that to give a blank power to the department to make such transfers might lead to transfers being made upon the mere whim and notion of some officer when conditions were not such as to warrant it, and that would prevent that checking up and watching of things which we believe Congress ought always to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, after deducting any amounts required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts to be entered into by contract, not more than 10 per cent may be used to purchase not exceeding 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material herein appropriated for that can be manufactured at the arsenals of the Ordnance Department, except when contract costs are less than arsenal manufacturing costs.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph was also discussed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] in his preliminary discussion of the bill. It is a departure from anything that we have done previously in fortification appropria-tion bills. It provides that the greater part of all of the sums appropriated by this act shall be utilized in manufacture at the arsenals of the Ordnance Department, except in cases where outside contract costs are less than arsenal manufacturing costs. The hearings before the committee show that up to a few years ago the cost of ammunition and guns purchased by contract under appropriations provided in fortification acts was from 40 to 50 per cent greater than it would be if manufactured at the Government arsenals. These sums, through keen competition between the Government and the outside contractor, have been materially reduced until it appears that the difference is now about 17 per cent in favor of the Government. Your committee went into a very careful examination of the offices of the Army upon this subject. The hearings show that the War Department included a considerable amount for overhead charges, interest on the plant, wear and tear of the plant, leaves of absence and holiday pay for all employees, watchmen, and all other expenses, so that after including everything that they should properly include, the Government seems to be able to manufacture these materials for 17 per cent less than they can be obtained by contract. It was for that reason the committee deemed it advisable to put this provision in the bill. It will stimulate competition on the part of outside contractors, and if they are able to bid lower than we can manufacture at the Government arsenal, then they can get their proportion of the business.

It seems to me that this is a very wise plan and one that will tend toward economy and good business on the part of the Government.

In this connection I shall include, as a part of my statement, a portion of the testimony of the Chief of Ordnance given before the subcommittee charged with the preparation of this bill:

Mr. CALDER, Gen. Crozier, in your statement a moment ago, you said there was 17 per cent difference between the contract price for this field-artillery materiel and the cost of it when manufactured in the the appropriation for matériel. For instance the pay of Army officers who are engaged in conducting the arsenal at Rock Island comes out of the pay of the Army appropriation, and the pay of enlisted men who are the guards and the caretakers of the grounds is carried in the Army bill. I also include what must be a charge, because the Government must meet it somewhere, interest on the value of the plant and depreciation.

Mr. CALDER. Do you include interest on the value of the plant?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; those charges are included in the 8.4 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Now, do you take into consideration the leave given the men?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; those charges are included in the 8.4 per cent. Mr. CALDER. Now, do you take into consideration the leave given the men?

Gen. CROZIER. All of that is taken into consideration. That is not included in this 8.4 per cent, but it is included in another kind of overhead charges which enters into the cost of the materiel.

Mr. CALDER. Is that cost included in the manufacture of these articles? Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDER. So, when you say there is a difference of 17 per cent you have included in your calculation interest, holidays, Saturday half holidays, and a certain amount for overhead charges, including the 8.4 per cent you referred to?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDER. I wanted that statement to appear in the record. Gen. CROZIER. I can particularize a little more on that and tell you what the charge for holidays and leaves of absence amounts to. It is almost exactly 10 per cent of the labor charge. There are 7 national holidays which the men are paid for without work, there are 13 Saturday afternoon half holidays, and there are 15 days' leave of absence with pay.

Mr. CALDER. Ten per cent of the time?

Gen. CROZIER. Those add up to 28½ days. Now, that leaves in the year 284 working days. If it were 285 working days which were left, the charge of this kind would be exactly 10 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. I wanted to get that fixed in my mind; I wanted to be sure about that, because I have heard it disputed, that you did not include all of these things.

Gen. CROZIER. We must include them; we have no other way of paying these men than out of the appropriation. Of course you understand that in our bookkeeping we include it by a kind of general process; that is to say, all manufacturing establishments have to have a fund for general shop expenses, and we levy on each one of the items of manufacture a percentage which goes into this general fund, and these leaves of absence are paid out of that general fund, but they are levied on the appropriations which are made.

Mr. CALDER Do you b

Gen. Crozier. The class of materials about which we have been speaking to-day—
Mr. Calder (interposing). Have you bought any during the past year?
Gen. Crozier. There have been very few materials bought abroad. We have bought a little Artillery ammunition abroad recently. I can tell you the principle on which we do that, if you like. When something is made on the other side, or made abroad, which can not be produced here of equal quality, I sometimes get a portion of the supply abroad, always endeavoring to stimulate manufacturing in this country, so that we will not have to go abroad for it. I do not remember any instance in which we have ever gone abroad for material purely because of the cheaper price. I have considered that it was intended by Congress that we should buy American material when we could, and I think that that is one of the cases where the economic loss to the country, if it exists—I am not intending to decide the question as between protection and free trade—but if it exists in such cases as that it is justifiable, because we ought not, for military reasons, to be dependent upon a foreign source for any of the materials which are indispensable for us as fighting materials.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I can not add a word to the bril-

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I can not add a word to the brilliant manner in which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherler] presented this bill to the House this evening, and I do not desire to detract a word from what he said. I can not let the opportunity pass by without expressing my profound appreciation for an item in this bill, which is as follows:

Of each of the sums appropriated by this act, after deducting any amounts required to meet obligations authorized in previous acts to be entered into by contract, not more than 10 per cent may be used to purchase not exceeding 10 per cent in quantity or value of any article or material herein appropriated for that can be manufactured at the arsenals of the Ordnance Department, except when contract costs are less than arsenal manufacturing costs.

The Committee on Appropriations is to be commended for inserting this provision in the bill. The wonder in my mind is that Congress has not gone into this matter of manufacturing Army supplies sooner. Why it has suffered the country to be held up by exorbitant and extravagant prices of private manufacturers for Army supplies is more than I can understand. For years Gen. Crozier has demonstrated to a mathematical certainty that the Government was able to manufacture Army supplies and Army materials much cheaper than private manufacturers were supplying them to the Army. I suppose the delay on the part of Congress in not making appropriations to enable the Government to manufacture its Army supplies has been due to the opposition on the part of manufacturers to the Government doing this line of work. Some might oppose the policy of the Government manufacturing its own supplies upon the ground that it is undemocratic and will not square itself with the principles of Democracy as laid down by Jefferson, Jackson, and other "patron saints" of the party. Some may criticize it as being socialism. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared and other "patron saints" of the party. Some may criticize it as being socialism. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to subscribe to every word set out in the provisions of the statute above quoted. It is a step in the right direction, and I rejoice to see the day approach when this line of work will go forward until the Government manufactures practically everything it uses in the Army and Navy. It will not only be an economy to the Government but, in my judgment, will soon stop the everlasting and persistent demand for increased Army and larger Navy.

I would freely have the Government manufacture everything that it is possible for it to manufacture used by both the Army and Navy. We have in the United States four or five quartermaster's depots, one located at Philadelphia, one at Chicago, one at St. Louis, one at Jeffersonville, Ind., and another in the South, I am not sure, either at Atlanta or New Orleans. The depot at Jeffersonville, Ind., my district, comprises 17 acres of ground; it started during the war, and Congress from year to year has enlarged it until to-day almost the entire ground is covered with solid, magnificent, mammoth buildings. It is equipped for the manufacture of all kinds of Army supplies, and yet it serves no other purpose to-day than that of being a relay or supply depot to which Army supplies are shipped and then reshipped again to the points where they are needed.

The depot at that place is now manufacturing, as I am informed, a small amount of harness used by the Army, and I am reliably informed by competent authority that, with the addition of a small appropriation for the purpose of buying and installing machinery, the depot at that place would soon be prepared to manufacture all the harness, saddles, and leather goods used by the Army. The city of Jeffersonville is within 50 miles of the center of population of the United States, with great trunk lines of railroad leading to the four points of the compass, with water transportation, with raw material in close proximity to the depot; and why not make an appropriation for the purpose of installing machinery in the depot, employing labor, put them to work in the manufacture of harness of all kinds used by the Army and thereby save a profit of from 20 to 35 per cent now being paid to private manufacturers for this kind of Army material.

I have introduced a bill asking for an appropriation of $250,000 to buy and install machinery at this depot for the purpose of going forward in this line of work. We are all charged—and should be—with economy. We have no right to recklessly spend the people's money. It is our duty to see to it as nearly as we can that every dollar of the people's money expended will buy them 100 cents in return; and when the Army supplies supplied by contractors cost from 20 to 50 per cent more than they can be manufactured for at Government arsenals or quartermasters' depots it is our duty as the Representatives of the American people to see to it that this amount of money is saved and this economy effected. Last winter the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] put in the Congressional RECORD some startling figures as to the cost of our Army compared with the armies in other countries. At this time I will not attempt to be accurate in rehearsing his figures, but if I remember correctly the cost to Germany to maintain 900,000 soldiers per year was about $250,000,000, while the cost of our Army, less than 100,000 men, practically amounts to one-half of the cost of the army of Germany. Now, if it be true that the Government can manufacture its supplies at its already equipped arsenals and quartermasters' depots and save the Government millions of dollars annually, it is our duty to do it; and this will go far toward reducing the cost of the Army and Navy in this country.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that we are now purchasing our ammunition and all ordnance stores, and have for some years, cheaper than the German Empire pays for the same kind of materiel?

Mr. COX. No; I did not know that; but if it is true I undertake to say that the reason for it is because the Government has gone into the manufacture of Army materiel and Army supplies. The report made by the able Committee on Appropriations is conclusive on this point, and I would call upon every Member of the House to read this report if he has any doubt whatever upon the proposition under consideration. On page 9 of the report accompanying the bill is the following language:

In making the ammunition for these guns it has been found that the arsenal cost is approximately 39 per cent less than the purchase cost of private manufacturers.

This is a startling statement, yet true beyond controversy. Why not save this 39 per cent to the taxpayers of this country, and manufacture this stuff in our own arsenals?

The report further says:

there would be a saving of 25 per cent on $156,000 worth of projectiles made, an estimated saving of $39,000. Approximately $350,000 is expected to be expended in armor-piercing projectiles under appropriations in the sundry civil act for Panama Canal fortifications; a saving of 25 per cent on 52 per cent of this sum would amount to $45,400 additional to the above.

One of the best illustrations that the Government can manufacture its supplies cheaper than purchasing them from private manufacturers is found in the manufacture of powder used by the Army and Navy. Ten or twelve years ago the Government was paying approximately $1.12 per pound for its powder. At that time the Du Pont Powder Trust was furnishing to the Army and Navy practically all the powder it used. Congress con-ceived the idea that there was one person in the United States who could drive the price of this powder down, and that person was Uncle Sam, and it made a small appropriation to begin the manufacture of powder, more as an experiment than any-thing else, and with increasing appropriations from Congress to Congress the price of powder has been driven down, until to-day we are getting our powder at a cost of 53 cents a pound, and yet it is demonstrated that the Government can manufacture its own powder at a cost of 41 cents per pound; but it is useless for me to encumber the RECORD with illustrations along these lines, because the facts and figures are abundant and conclusively establish the proposition that the Government can manufacture its own supplies much cheaper than they have been paying private manufacturers for the same in the past.

I hail with delight the coming of the day when the Government will go forward and utilize all its arsenals and quartermaster depots to the fullest extent and manufacture in them everything used in both the Army and Navy, and in doing this will save annually from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000. It is up to Congress to do it, and I stand ready to vote every dollar necessary to carry this work forward, because in the end I am sure we will find ourselves justified in so doing by greatly decreasing the cost of the Army and Navy supplies.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Will the gentleman from Kentucky kindly state what the percentage is now of purchased articles?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it does not run uniformly. We are making all of our powder now. We have been making about one-third of most of the other things, and with the enlargement of the Rock Island Arsenal touching mobile artilery it was expected we would make an additional one-third, which would make two-thirds, and then we would buy a third. Now, under this provision, it is proposed to make the additional one-third.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman estimate in figures what the increase would be in the arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, about $41,000,000 worth of materiel to be manufactured or purchased in order to-

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman does not mean $41,000,000? Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. I mean $41,000,000, in order to complete the entire project—not simply as to this bill, but to finish the total required. Assuming that we have been making about one-third, and are now going to make two-thirds, it would mean an increased manufacture of about $26,000,000 worth of matériel.

Mr. MOORE. So far as one year's appropriation goes?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, as to that the gentleman will find in the report, I think, a statement-I do not know that I can tell him from memory, as it is hard to carry in one's head the amounts that are involved. I should say there was involved in this particular bill somewhere between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 worth of materiel, and assuming that we make all of it, in place of making a third of it, I think the gentleman can see what would follow.

Mr. MOORE. And there would go to the arsenals now that which has not gone to the arsenals heretofore?

Mr. SHERLEY. Speaking generally. I would not like to be accurate as to that—I would say that we make all the powder, which constitutes a tenth of the entire cost, and, as to certain other things, we are making all of them, and we are buying other things entirely; however, I think it would average twothirds of the whole, excluding powder, that we have been buy-

Mr. MOORE. And that would be divided amongst the Frankford, Springfield, Rock Island, and Watervliet Arsenals?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not be divided into quarters. major part of it will go to Rock Island, owing to the increased capacity resulting from the appropriation of one-quarter of a million dollars last year.

Mr. MOORE. May I call the gentleman's attention to the exemption in this paragraph, on line 21, which provides that there is given to the Ordnance Department authority to manufacture: Except when contract costs are less than arsenal manufacturing costs.

Is it the intention of the committee to give the Ordnance Department in this matter over 10 per cent?

Mr. SHERLEY. Where cheaper; yes. I can not see any reason under the sun why we should manufacture when we can buy cheaper in particular instances.

Mr. MOORE. I asked the question for the purpose of raising another one—whether in the matter of time that would be regarded as increasing the authority of the Ordnance Department? I did not know but that the committee intended by this language to give the department added discretion.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Ordnance Department clearly understands the purpose of this limitation, and in order that the matter might be of record on the floor, as it is in the hearings, I made the statement to-day to this effect, that even the 10 per cent leeway was not given with the idea that the ordnance people will buy 10 per cent, but is simply meant as a leeway, and what is practically expected and intended is that they should manufacture entirely. But if it should develop, for instance, that in the case of a carriage for a gun, which could be manufactured by many plants in America, they offered a price considerably under what the Government would have to pay in the arsenal, I can see no reason why they should not buy it.

Mr. MOORE. I am not criticizing this language, but I wanted the gentleman to get my meaning, which perhaps can best be illustrated in this way-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more, in order to complete the statement, The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. There may be two bidders for a contract, and one may bid $100,000, to finish in six months, and the other may bid $150,000, to finish in three months; and it might be developed to the satisfaction of the awarding power that the $150,000 bid, in the matter of time, would be cheaper than the I want to know from the gentleman how far the $100,000 bid. discretion of the Ordnance Department would go in that matter?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not conceive that time would be an element in determining the cheapness of cost in such a matter. Mr. MOORE. In case of war it might be a greater element than anything else.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, in case of war we should not be bothered by this limitation. We would be bothered about something worse than this limitation.

Mr. MOORE. I hope we shall not be. I hope it will not be

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Page of North Carolina, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12235, the fortifications appropriations bill, had directed him to report it back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment?

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is only a matter of punctuation. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sherley, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 387.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Keating resolution that was passed for the mining investigation does not, under the rules, get printed. There is quite a demand for copies of it. I ask unanimous consent that there may be a thousand copies of it printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of House resolution 387, designated by him, be printed for the use of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 386) for the consideration of H. R. 6060.

Resolution (H. Res. 386) for the consideration of H. R. 6060.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration from day to day until finally acted on, except on Calendar Wednesday, of H. R. 6060 with the amendments reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; that there shall be seven hours' general debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the measure. At the expiration of said seven hours' general debate the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall perfect and report the measure to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments, including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to final passage without intervening motions, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to have a vote on that to-night, in view of the circumstances which have been explained to the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Personally, in view of the circumstances, I shall not insist.

Mr. MANN. This resolution would come up the first thing in the morning

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wondered if we could have an agreement about the time this afternoon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. A number of tentlemen came to me while I was in charge of the fortifications bill asking whether we would take the entire day. At that time it looked apparent that we would, and, believing that we would, they have gone away. Under the circumstances I do not think it is quite fair to them that we should undertake to fix the time for debate on this rule to-night. The rule now has the right of way to-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has it within his control to fix the time for debate on the rule to-morrow. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. BURNETT. The rule fixes it at 40 minutes, does it not?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not necessarily.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman has it under his control.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make this statement: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Harpwick] was directed to report this rule to the House. I think there is no opposition to the rule in the committee. The gentleman from Georgia was called away, and left, perhaps, under the impression that the fortifications bill would consume the entire day, and that this rule would not be called up this afternoon. Perhaps, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], it would not be fair to the House to press this matter this afternoon. I wish to make this parliamentary inquiry: Is to-morrow claims day?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman has the prior right, ahead of claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that tomorrow is claims day.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow is the fifth Friday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Under the rules it would not be claims day. Mr. CRISP.

Mr. CRISP. No; it would not be.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it is claims day, I want to preserve the right of the Claims Committee; but if it is not, then I think I will not make any request about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, a reference to the calendar shows that tomorrow would be claims day. The language of the rule is excepting the second and fourth Fridays." That would make any other Friday, of course, a day for private claims.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, under the rule would it not be a general day for the consideration of the Private Calendar? Under the rules of the House the Private Calendar is in order on all Fridays. On the second and fourth Fridays preference is given to pensions, and on the first and third Fridays it alternates between claims and war claims.

Mr. MANN. It does not say anything about the first and third Fridays alternating.

Mr. CRISP. One is given preference over the other; but on the fifth Friday the general Private Calendar is in order.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gar-RETT] is entitled to prior recognition to-morrow it he asks it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As far as my own inclination is concerned, I am inclined to let the Committee on Claims have is concerned, I am inclined to let the Committee on Claims have the priority. That committee has only a few claims on the calendar. But I give notice that immediately after claims are disposed of this rule will be called up.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall move to adjourn in a moment, but I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] desires to present a request for unanimous consent.

RURAL CREDITS (H. DOC. NO. 679).

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the bill that was introduced by myself to-day, providing for rural credits, which bill (H. R. 12585) is the result of the work of the commission appointed by the President, that commission have stated the reasons for the bill.

The report of the commission has been made to Congress to-day, and will be printed as a Senate document. The report considers three things: First, a general discussion of the question; second, the bill that was framed; and, third, the reasons supporting the bill, and paragraphs explaining it. I ask unanimous consent of the House that in connection with the bill introduced by me to-day there may be printed the reasons given for the bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to print it in the same document with the bill?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. No; I should like to have it printed as a report coming from a committee is printed.

Mr. MANN. Printed as a House document?
Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Printed just as if it were the report of a committee.

Mr. MANN. But it is not the report of a committee.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The only other way to print is as a House document.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Then I should like to have it printed as a House document.

Mr. MANN. How long is it?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I should think not more than 8 or 10 printed pages. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document that part of the report of the commission which relates to the reasons for the bill as it is framed by the commission.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana will have to furnish what he wants printed to the clerk of the Committee on Printing, because otherwise he will not know what it is.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Oh, certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana that the reasons presented by the commission may be printed as a House document? There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 30, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of canal leading from Centennial Lake at Vicksburg, Miss., to the Mississippi River, with a view to the preservation of the channel (H. Doc. No. 667); to the Commit-tee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Sabine River up to Logansport, La. (H. Doc. No. 668); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Public Printer submitting urgent estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the Government Printing Office for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 669); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in appropriation for printing and binding for the fiscal year 1914 (H. Doc. No. 670); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1914.

Rev. J. J. Mair, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, we recognize Thy hand in all the blessings vouchsafed to us, and we beseech Thee this morning to look with favor upon these Thy servants in all the duties of the hour. May the highest incentives prompt decision as well as deliberation. Give Thy grace unto the President of the United States and all engaged in the administration of public life. Guide us ever to Thy glory at home and abroad with the right-eousness which alone exalts a nation. We humbly ask, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONDITIONS IN MINING DISTRICT IN MICHIGAN (S. DOC. NO. 381).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 29th instant, a report in regard to the strike of mine workers in the Michigan copper district, which began July 23, 1913. Mr. SMITH of Georgia.

The report has already been before the Committee on Education and Labor, and I have been directed by that committee to ask that the Senate order the report printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed as a public document and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Minneapolis, Minn., relating to the industrial condition in the copper district of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Italian Journal, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of George Rogers Clarke Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa.; of General Joseph Warren Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and of Thomas F. Meagher Branch, American Continental League, of Jersey City, N. J., remonstrating against any appropriation being made for the celebration of the socalled "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples." which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorial of the German-American Alliance, of Lehigh, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Roxbury, Mass., praying for an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining districts of the United States and favoring the ownership and control of all mines by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present a memorial or resolution from William McKinley Circle, No. 2, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, D. C., protesting against the establishment of an inebriate asylum in the District of Columbia. Inasmuch as the resolution is a very short one and comes from a patriotic body of this kind, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD as well as referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions of William McKinley Circle, No. 2, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, protesting against the proposed inebriate asylum in the District of Columbia.

Army of the Republic, protesting against the proposed inebriate asylum in the District of Columbia.

Whereas an effort is being made to have the Congress appropriate $75,000 for the purpose of erecting an inebriate asylum in our National Capital; and
Whereas we, the members of William McKinley Circle, No. 2, Ladles of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, D. C., realize that an asylum for drunkards will be an added burden of taxation on an already overtaxed Nation, without any adequate return or appreciable benefit to the Nation or to humanity until the institutions which make drunkards are removed; and
Whereas the movement to establish an inebriate asylum is apparently an effort on the part of the saloons and those interested therein to have the drunkards removed to a respectable (?) institution in order that the ruinous and degrading consequences of their nefarious business may in part be removed from the daily observation of our patriotic citizens and all true Americans who believe that the saloon, the cankerous institution eating at the heart of the Nation, should be wholly removed; and
Whereas, as a patriotic body, we would consider it a desecration of our flag to be placed over a national institution of this kind and an admission on the part of the Government that it is willing to have the saloon remain with us indefinitely and debauch its citizens to swell its revenues; and
Whereas we believe that our hospitals and reformatories are adequate to properly care for the present supply of drunkards if we would close the industrial plants which manufacture them: Therefore be it Resolved, That we earnestly protest against this $75,000 Government warehouse for the free storage of the surplus products of the saloon:

Resolved. That we earnestly protest against this $75,000 Government warehouse for the free storage of the surplus products of the saloon; and be it further Resolved. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minute book of this circle and that a copy be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9317) to regulate the payment of postal money orders, and I submit a report (No. 203) thereon. It is a very short bill, there is no objection to it, it is unanimously reported from the committee, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read first.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill. The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe, postal money orders may be issued payable at any money-order post office, and on and after the date upon which such rules and regulations become effective all money orders shall be legally payable at any money-order post office, although drawn on a specified office; and that all laws or parts of laws in conflict here with are hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was under the impression that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] expected at this time to call up Senate resolution 241. I yield to him if he wishes to call it up.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I gave notice yesterday that this morning I would call up Senate resolution 241, which was under discussion at the close of the morning hour. I ask that the consideration of the resolution be resumed.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the considera-tion of Senate resolution 241, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to conduct an examination to ascertain whether facts or evidence exist justifying the Government in instituting proceedings for recovery of fines, etc., from the United States Steel Corporation, its subsidiaries, or any common carrier, because of unlawful rebates within the last six years, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. LANE. I should like to offer an amendment to the resolution if it is proper for me to do so at this time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] had the floor when the discussion closed yesterday.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose I have no technical right to resume the floor, but-

Mr. LANE. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, should like to offer an amendment to the resolution providing that all the testimony taken at the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be under oath. It follows right after the second paragraph.

If I may be allowed to offer another amendment, I should like to move the substitution of my original resolution for the resolution as reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not offer it now. Mr. LANE. I am informed by the Senator from Utah that I can not offer the latter amendment at this time, but I understand that the first one is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment will be in order. The purpose of the latter amendment can be reached by disagreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am in some doubt in regard to the propriety of taking up very much time on this resolution, but I have such a firm conviction that the resolution as originally introduced should be amended, so that the direction should be given to the Department of Justice instead of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that I will pursue for a moment or two the thought I was endeavoring to express yesterday when the unfinished business displaced the resolution.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is an independent body. It has certain defined duties. It has been created for the purpose of administering what is known as the interstate-commerce I do not believe that we ought to begin the practice of directing that commission to originate and pursue a complaint, nor do I believe that we ought to attempt in any case to direct the commission to abandon a complaint when once originated upon its own motion.

This resolution, if passed as it was originally introduced, commands the Interstate Commerce Commission to initiate a complaint against a railroad company or against a corporation which it is alleged has received a rebate. That complaint when thus filed, or the proceeding when thus begun, must be pursued according to the requirements of the Constitution and according to the procedure of the interstate commerce law. Those who are to be affected must be notified, an issue must be framed, and the testimony must be taken, according to the resolution, in an open hearing. The effect of that procedure is to give immunity from criminal prosecution to every witness who is called by the commission in the pursuit of the investi-

The commission is already overcrowded with work of vast importance to the people of this country. The citizens of my own State have many complaints respecting railway rates now pending before the commission which can not be determined on account of the volume of work that precedes those complaints in point of time.

We have here an instance-I do not disparage the instance at all-in which it is desired that the Attorney General shall bring a suit against the persons who received the rebates and the companies which paid the rebates for the recovery of triple damages. The law specifically provides for such suit, and it specifically provides that the Attorney General shall bring it. All that the Attorney General needs to know is that he has evidence upon which he can found the proceedings and which will is the Interstate Commerce Commission?

probably enable him to recover. Mr. Green, according to the resolution, has that evidence or knows where it can be found.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I understood Mr. Green to say that he had information within his own knowledge to that effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; that is still better-within his own knowledge, according now to the Senator from Oregon. All the Attorney General has to do is to bring the suit, call Mr. Green as a witness, and prove the case which he makes. I assume that the Attorney General will do his duty; I have not heard it suggested that he was unwilling to begin and carry forward a prosecution in order to enforce the law; and yet we are asking in this original resolution that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall begin a formal proceeding in order that there may be an open hearing held, in which a complaint shall be made against somebody, which can do nothing more than develop the fact, and which, when concluded, must be referred to the Attorney General in order that he may bring suit for the recovery of these damages. I say that this is what evidently is desired, because it appeared before our committee that Mr. Lamar, of whom you have all heard, went to the Interstate Commerce Commission and proposed to furnish this very testimony if certain conditions were complied with relating to the appointment of counsel to prosecute the case. That proposition was declined. Then the resolution found its way into

I am in favor of referring the resolution to the Department of Justice, with the direction that the Attorney General investigate, and if he discovers sufficient evidence to warrant the bringing of a suit, that then the suit may be brought, for I assume that he will then bring the suit to recover the damages which are sought. So much for the original resolution,

I regret that the Committee on Interstate Commerce reported the resolution in the way in which it did. I rather agree with my friend from California [Mr. Works] that it is a bit of pleasantry to refer this resolution, without any action at all upon it, to both the Department of Justice and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have the same objection to making the reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the report of the committee that I have already suggested as against the original resolution. I think the whole matter ought to go to the Department of Justice, and if this evidence is at hand and is sufficient, the suit should be brought. I do not know whether or not the evidence is sufficient; there is a great deal of mystery surrounding it; it is apparently such evidence as Mr. Green was unwilling to give to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and unwilling to give the Members of the Senate an opportunity, to judge of its character or its weight or whether it was sufficiently strong to warrant further investigation. desire, of course, to suppress an investigation. I hope, if there is a guilty person connected with the matter, he will be exposed, prosecuted, and punished; but I do not intend, if I can help it, to encumber the Interstate Commerce Commission with a duty of this sort, when it is organized for the very purpose of enforcing this law, and hitherto it has performed its duty with. signal ability, as well as with unusual fidelity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa, I know, has given very diligent study to questions of this characbecause he has very frequently discussed these subjects before the Senate with great forcefulness and fullness of knowledge and to the benefit of the body, and before he yields the floor I want to ask the Senator this question: In case it was made clear that the Steel Corporation had been guilty of violations of the law in taking rebates and in accepting other privi-leges, under our system which of these two departments would be expected to initiate proceedings for the purpose of punishing those violations of the law?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from North Carolina mean as to criminal proceedings?

Mr. SIMMONS. Either criminal or civil.
Mr. CUMMINS. Criminal proceedings would be begun, just as all criminal proceedings are initiated, before a grand jury of the appropriate jurisdiction.

Mr. SIMMONS. The institute the proceedings. The Attorney General would necessarily

Mr. CUMMINS. But the district attorney of the proper district, I assume, would be in charge of such a criminal prosecution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the direction of the Attorney General.

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, certainly.
Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Senator a further Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Senator a further question. Is not the Department of Justice just as well prepared, and probably better prepared, to conduct an investigation of this character, with a view to instituting proceedings, as

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not answer that question either "yes" The preliminary investigation made by the Department of Justice is, of course, one in which the Attorney General can not subpoena witnesses or administer oaths. That eral can not subpoena witnesses or administer oaths. That investigation must be made precisely as every other investigation tion is made; by one who believes that there is a foundation for a suit, either civil or criminal; but the grand jury of the appropriate jurisdiction can investigate with all the power that the Interstate Commerce Commission has, and, indeed, with a great deal more power. Therefore the district attorney has it within his authority to carry on an investigation before a grand jury with all the efficiency that a similar investigation could be carried on by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, indeed, with more efficiency.

Mr. SIMMONS. Therefore, if the Attorney General, employing the means at his command, shall find that there is a reasonable ground for instituting an investigation, and, acting upon that information in the usual way, he shall bring the matter before the grand jury, the opportunities for a thorough probing of the matter would be just as great, if not greater, than would be enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission proceeding in its usual way in making investigations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly; but if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, there is no question that in this case the end sought is the institution of a civil suit; that is, a civil suit in form, but for the recovery of a penalty. Everything indicates that. May I call to the attention of the Senator from North Carolina a clause in the act of 1906?

Any person, corporation, or company who shall deliver property for interstate transportation to any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, or for whom as consignor or consignee, any such carrier shall transport property from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or foreign country—

Now, it will be remembered that under the old act the crime was on the part of the common carrier that gave the rebate or made the discrimination; but this is the provision of the later act, which reaches the person or corporation receiving the rebate or the favor-

who shall knowingly by employee, agent, officer, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, by or through any means or device whatsoever, receive or accept from such common carrier any sum of money or any other valuable consideration as a rebate or offset against the regular charges for transportation of such property, as fixed by the schedules of rates provided for in this act, shall in addition to any penalty provided by this act forfeit to the United States a sum of money three times the amount of money so received or accepted and three times the value of any other consideration so received or accepted, to be ascertained by the trial court; and the Attorney General of the United States is authorized and directed, whenever he has reasonable grounds to believe that any such person, corporation, or company has knowingly received or accepted from any such common carrier any sum of money or other valuable consideration as a rebate or offset as aforesaid, to institute in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction a civil action to collect the said sum or sums so forfeited as aforesaid.

By express provision of the law the very case which, as I un-

By express provision of the law the very case which, as I understand, is sought to be reached by this resolution is given to the Department of Justice; that is, to the Attorney General.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the point I wish to make is that it seems to me quite apparent that the mover of this resolution.

lution and the committee had in mind the fact that these offenses were subject both to a civil proceeding and to a criminal proceeding. Now, we have one department—the Department of Justice—that is peculiarly equipped for the purpose of investigating where the proceeding is to be of a criminal character; and we have another department, to wit, the Interstate Com-merce Commission, provided with the machinery for conducting investigations for the purpose of instituting a civil proceeding. That being so, Mr. President, I can not altogether agree with the Senator from Iowa that this resolution ought to be referred exclusively to the Attorney General, although I think that it ought to be referred to him for investigation, because there is a criminal element involved, which should have attention; but I think it should also be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission, because there is a civil element which should have investi-

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will then yield to him.

I agree with the Senator from Iowa in one particular, and that is that we ought not simply to refer this resolution to these two departments for the purpose of having the facts investi-gated or not investigated, as they may see fit. I think, if we are to refer it to them at all, we should refer it to them jointly, with instructions that each one of them institute an investigation, one with a view to instituting criminal proceedings, that being peculiarly within its jurisdiction and being a part of its essential function, and the other-the Interstate Commerce Commissionfor the purpose of investigating whether civil proceedings should be instituted.

I may say in brief, Mr. President, that while I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa in the statement that it should be referred solely to the Department of Justice, I do agree with the Senator from Iowa that, if we are to refer it to either one or the other, or both, we ought to refer it with instructions that they each make an investigation, one as to whether civil proceedings should be instituted and the other as to whether criminal proceedings should be instituted. Now I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say, for the informa-tion of the Senator from North Carolina, that my object was merely to secure an investigation at the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am under the impression and the belief that the facts will be easily ascertained, and that, too, in a brief period of time. Then, with the facts in their hands, they could report to us if such conditions did or did not exist; and then it would be just a step, and a logical one, to put into the hands of the Attorney General that portion of the matter which belongs to the Attorney General. If we throw it there in the first place, then we shall become subject to the delays and methods of precdure of the law, and my object was to get a speedy, an open, and a fair discussion of the subject. That is the only object I had.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. LANE. I am through.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, but inasmuch as several references have been made to Mr. Green, who is the man named in the original resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], and inasmuch as in the testimony taken before the Interstate Commerce Committee I was several times referred to as having given some attention to this subject, it seems to me that I ought to make a short statement as to my knowledge, perhaps my connection, with this subject.

I want to say, to begin with, that I have known of Mr. Green, who is a resident of my State, for quite a number of years. I who is a resident of my State, for quite a number of years. I never met Mr. Green personally, so far as I remember, until a few weeks ago, when he came into my office in Washington. I had known him somewhat by reputation; I had often read of him in the newspapers; and I want to say that, so far as I of him in the newspapers; and I want to say that, so far as I know, or so far as anything I have ever heard in regard to Mr. Green is concerned, he is an honorable, honest gentleman. I have never heard his honesty questioned, and I have read of him, as I have said, a great many times in the newspapers. He is quite a prominent Democrat in our State; he was a delegated to the last Democratic newspapers. gate to the last Democratic national convention in Baltimore, and, so far as I know, has always borne an excellent reputation.

As I understand, he was the principal witness in behalf of the Government in the so-called Harvester Trust prosecution;
he did a great deal of work on behalf of the Government in some investigations in developing the evidence in that case, and I believe gave very important and material testimony in the case, although I have not read it and was not present to hear it.

When Mr. Green came into my office he told me that there had been a practice on behalf of the so-called Steel Trust of taking and giving rebates that had extended over a number of years, and that the people he represented were in possession of the evidence. He told me then that he was not at liberty to give me the names of the persons who had possession of the evidence, but that the evidence was, as I understood, practically of a documentary nature, and that there could be no possible doubt of its being convincing and practically conclusive, although he admitted to me then, as he did in several subsequent conversations, that on account of the fact that he was not able to disclose the names of the men who had the evidence he realized that he was occupying rather an embarrassing position.

This is the request he made of me at that time: He wanted me to make an appointment with him so that he could see the President of the United States, and said that if I could make an appointment for him to see the President he would promise not to take up more than 15 minutes of the President's time; that he desired to submit this evidence to the President with a view of having the President, after he had seen the evidence, instruct the Attorney General to begin the necessary actions. He told me that Mr. Davis, an attorney here in Washington, who was at one time the United States district attorney here, a lawyer of considerable ability, I think, and, so far as I know, of good standing, had examined the evidence, and said that in his judgment as a lawyer it was practically conclusive, and that Mr. Davis was a personal and political friend of the President, and would go with him to the President to explain any legal technicalities that might arise.

I made an appointment with the President's secretary to see the President, to tell him what Mr. Green had said, and to give him an opportunity to let Mr. Green present the evidence. I did that three different times, on three different days, but each time the appointment was canceled by the Secretary to the President, and I consequently did not do what Mr. Green desired to be done in the way of getting an interview with the

Mr. Davis, the attorney mentioned, and the only man whose name was mentioned to me by Mr. Green in all our conversations-the name of Lamar, or of Schulteis, or of any of these other persons was never mentioned, and I had no knowledge that any of them had anything to do with it or knew anything about it-then came to my office. I talked with Mr. Davis about the matter for perhaps an hour and a half. Mr. Davis represented to me that he was a personal friend of the President; that he had been in Princeton with the President; that he had taken quite an active part in the last campaign in behalf of the President, and was his personal friend, as well as was Mr. Green. It was really on account of Mr. Green's standing as a Democrat that I decided to go to the President with a view of asking him if he would not permit Mr. Green to present the evidence, because I was firmly of the belief then, and am still, that there was no one who had a higher opinion of the President, and that he had no other object than to bring about justice. As I say, I believe that yet.

Mr. Davis told me that in his judgment as a lawyer there was not any doubt whatever but that this evidence was practically conclusive; that from its very nature it was hardly subject to dispute, as it was documentary; that there was no doubt but that these rebates had been taken, that they were rebates as a matter of law, and that under the laws of the United States the action would lie.

I had considerable talk with Mr. Davis about the persons who had possession of the evidence. He also said that he was not at liberty to tell me the names of the persons who had the evidence, but that he had examined it, and he came to me representing them, although he could not disclose their names; and he recognized, too, that because of that handicap there might be some suspicion connected with it.

I confess that if it had not been that both of these men were anxious, in my judgment, to be of use to the President in a proper and friendly way, I would have had more suspicion than naturally would arise on account of the fact that they did not disclose, as I think they ought to have done, the evidence they had, and I frankly told them both so. It seemed to me, however, that if they did have the evidence, and were willing to let the President see it, inasmuch as it would take only a few moments, it would be well worth the President's time to give Mr. Davis and Mr. Green an opportunity to talk to him about it.
Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission, and that is whether the amount involved was mentioned to him?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it was. Mr. LANE. I wish the Senator would state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not give the figures now, but it went into the millions; in fact, somewhere in all these conversations with Mr. Davis and Mr. Green—there were several of them— I had gotten a little idea as to what the evidence was

Mr. LANE. I will say for the Senator's information that I was informed that it amounted to not less than $75,000.000 of rebates, and that the amount would be shown to be even larger if the matter were investigated, and that if an action were instituted and were successful the Government could recover as much as $225,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the first thing I said to Mr. Green, and also to Mr. Davis, was: "The proper place to go with this evidence is to the Attorney General, in my judgment." They both admitted that, but said that for reasons that were satisfactory to the men who had the evidence-I do not mean it was Mr. Davis's idea, necessarily, nor Mr. Green's-the men who had the evidence would not go to the Attorne; General; and they represented to me that the only reason why the men who had the evidence wanted to have the President see it first was that, in their judgment, if the President saw it he would then give a direction to the Attorney General that would bring about results which they feared they would not get if the President did not have some knowledge of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in my judgment, the first question to be considered in determining what action should be taken upon a resolution of this character is the power of the Senate to deal with it.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is an executive or administrative body created by law, and its duties and powers are defined by law. Therefore it is not within the power of one branch of Congress, either the Senate or the House alone, to direct it in the discharge of its duties. Its duties being defined by law, which requires the approval of both Houses of Congress, whatever action the Senate takes in this matter will be purely directory, and can not be mandatory.

The next proposition that I think worthy of consideration is that if the resolution were passed in the original form, it would constitute a legislative act, if the resolution of the Senate is valid, giving immunity to Mr. William H. Green and to all witnesses whom he might call to testify before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Upon consideration of that matter, and as a matter of fact, I do not believe Mr. William H. Green needs immunity; but it is quite probable that the witnesses whom he would call, who are not named in the resolution, would require immunity before testifying, and that is probably the reason their names are not disclosed.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator that I am informed that that is not the case; that the information will be derived from people who are not now directly connected with the matter in any way, and can not be punished for it; that it is documentary evidence that has been gathered up for six years. That is the information Mr. Green

Mr. ROBINSON. The legal effect of passing the resolution in the form in which it was originally presented to the Senateif the Senate has the power to pass a resolution of that character-would be, by legislative enactment or resolution, to give immunity to witnesses whose names we do not know and the character of whose testimony is not disclosed to the Senate nor to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I have already said that, as a matter of law, it seems to me that any resolution which the Senate passes in the matter must be purely directory, and can not be mandatory. Therefore the Committee on Interstate Commerce has done all that it is in the power of the Senate to do, unless Senators think this body alone has the power to direct an executive department or bureau of the Government in the discharge of its duties when those duties are defined by law. It is clear to me that they can be duties are defined by law. It is clear to me that they can be neither added to nor diminished by a resolution of one House of Congress

I do not know that there is any further statement that I desire to make at this time. I will say, however, that every member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was desirous of securing full information concerning this subject. We were confronted with a very peculiar condition—a resolution that is extraordinary in its terms, naming one witness and giving him the power to name other witnesses to be called, and not disclosing the names of the other witnesses.

As was suggested by the junior Senator from Utah yesterday, it is clearly not within the power of the Senate to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission as to what witnesses shall be called in an investigation, because that body, having the power to make the investigation, can call any witnesses it chooses; and it is not within the power of the Senate alone to place that kind of a limitation upon the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This resolution, as reported by the committee, is in effect nothing more than a request from the Senate to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the Department of Justice that they make the investigation the original resolution sought to require them to make. The Senate not having the power to make that requirement, it seems to me that all that should be done in the resolution is to make the request which is contemplated by the amendment submitted by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and that will produce every benefit, as I see it, that can come from the original resolution.

There is not a Senator here who doubts that if the matter is referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the Department of Justice the subject will be investigated, that Mr. Green will be called, and that if in the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Department of Justice the witnesses whom he names should be called, their testimony will be taken.

There is a further difference. The original resolution sought to require the Interstate Commerce Commission to have public If the facts exist upon which the resolution seems to be based, it may not be advisable to require that those hearings be made public. If those facts exist, it may be necessary that prosecutions be conducted against the parties guilty of violating the law; and it may be necessary to conduct some of the investigations, in a preliminary way at least, through special examiners.

So, upon the whole case, it seems to me the best way to do is to leave the Department of Justice and the Interstate Commerce Commission to discharge their duty under the statute, without an attempt upon the part of the Senate to control the manner in which their duties shall be performed.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have not taken very much interest in this resolution, but I am moved by many things which have been said to put a question to any Senator on the other side who may feel competent to answer it.

What is the matter with the Attorney General of the United States? Why should a vote of want of confidence in him be passed by the Senate? Why should the Senate be spending days and days in discussing something which everybody agrees is a matter of his duty?

I have thought very well of that gentleman, sir. I consider the present Attorney General of the United States an able and competent lawyer and an able and competent officer of this Government. I do not see why his own party friends should be discussing here a resolution which, in its essence, is an attack upon his competency to perform the duties of his office.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. ROOT. Is not this administration capable of performing its duty of executing the laws of the United States? Is it necessary for the Senate of the United States to take upon itself the burden of supplementing any inefficiency in the Department of Justice?

If we are to spend our time, sir, over a discussion of the way in which an investigation is to be pursued to determine what the duty of the Attorney General is, it seems to me the Attorney General should have been heard, and we ought not to condemn him without a hearing

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from New York vield

Mr. ROOT. In a moment. While it is no part of my duty on this side of the Chamber to defend or to assert the competency of the Attorney General of the present administration, my personal regard for him, my sense of justice to him as an eminent lawyer, my sense of justice to him as I believe him to be a faithful and devoted public servant, lead me to say that we ought not to take any action appointing or directing any other officer of the Government to determine or to investigate for the purpose of determining what his duty is until it has been clearly ascertained that he is not performing his duty, or will not perform his duty, or is incompetent to perform his duty. None of those things have been shown, and it seems to me none of them can be shown.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not know whether the remarks of the Senator from New York were directed against the original resolution or against the action of the committee in reporting an amendment to the resolution. I sought to ascertain that from him while the Senator from New York was on the floor.

I disclaim for myself, and I assume to take the liberty of doing so for the committee, any intention to reflect, also any act which is calculated to reflect, upon the Attorney General of the United States or the Department of Justice.

In reply to what the Senator from New York said, that the Attorney General should have been heard, I desire to state that he was heard. He was notified by the chairman of the committee of the hearings and appeared by an Assistant Attorney General, who stated that a suit is pending against the United States Steel Corporation involving the dissolution of that corporation as a trust, but that no testimony had been submitted in the case concerning the payment of rebates to the Steel Corporation by railroads. The Assistant Attorney General also stated that, in his opinion, the case could be reopened on the part of the Government, the Government having completed its testimony, and that the evidence which would be germane upon such an investigation could be submitted in that case, and that this, in his opinion, should be done.

Now, Mr. President, the situation as it appeared to the committee was this: Here was a citizen of the United States claiming to have in his possession facts which involved very grave considerations. Those facts had not been presented to any department of the Government. He declared he had promised to withhold the sources of his information and not to reveal them anywhere save before the Interstate Commerce Commis-He gave no reasons for having made such a promise or for its having been exacted of him; still the fact remains that it is contended that the law had been violated and that evidence is available which would establish that fact. The committee thought that there could be no reflection upon any department of the Government to simply call the attention of the Department of Justice and the Interstate Commerce Commission to such circumstances as had come to the knowledge of the committee.

I yield to no man, not even the Senator from New York, in my respect and loyalty to the courts and the judicial department of this country. I regard them, Mr. President, as a great bulwark of individual liberty and of the constitutional rights of the citizens of this Republic. In the discharge of my duty as a Senator, I do not regard it as reflecting upon the courts or upon the executive branch of the Government for me to refer to them information which comes to my knowledge and which it is their duty under the Constitution and statutes of the United States to take cognizance of.

Mr. President, the simple reading of the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce will disclose the fact that there is nothing in its action or in the recommendation which it makes to the Senate that reflects upon anyone. If the amendment submitted by the committee is passed, both the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the attention of the Department of Justice will be formally called to the matter. Both of them have some jurisdiction concerning the subject. The Interstate Commerce Commission may enter upon its own motion upon an investigation of the matter. To call the attention of that body to facts and circumstances alleged to exist is to guarantee in the mind of any man who has confidence in the institutions of this Republic that if the facts exist they will be obtained in the best way to the interest of the people of this country. To call the matter to the attention of the Department of Justice is no reflection upon that department. It is dis-closed by a representative of the department that if these facts had been brought to his attention in a pending suit they would

If the Senate has not the power to make a mandatory direction, it can take the liberty of making a recommendation to both the Attorney General and the Interstate Commerce Commission and accomplish all the beneficial results that could have been obtained under the original resolution. This will cast no reflection upon any officer of the Government; it is not intended to do it, and it is not calculated in fact to accomplish that result.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President-have been germane as evidence for the Government.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator from Wyoming will yield to

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. LANE. As a matter of personal privilege, I wish to say. to the Senator from New York [Mr. Root] that it was with the greatest respect to the Attorney General personally that I submitted the resolution. I thought this course would be advisable-presenting the facts which are germane.

Mr. WORKS. Before the Senator from Arkansas leaves the Chamber I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would be very glad to answer if I still have the floor. I retired from the floor.

Mr. WORKS. I was just waiting to see who has the floor. I do not want to violate the rules. I saw the Senator from Arkansas leaving the Chamber, and for that reason I addressed the Chair.

Mr. LANE. I will be through in a moment. Inasmuch as I had the information, which I supposed to be true, that the Attorney General's department was carrying on a suit against the Steel Trust for dissolution, and these facts had not been presented to them and they knew nothing of them, and that it would have made a difference in the manner of their procedure had they known them, I sought investigation on the part of another department which it was perfectly competent to consult as the authority under another aspect of the case. I cheerfully said that I was willing after getting the information that it should be given to the Attorney General specifically, and I meant no discourtesy whatever. I thought I was doing the department a favor rather than impeding their progress.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I think the resolution as proposed to be amended practically accomplishes nothing. I wanted to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he does not think that this matter, having been already if he does not think that the Attorney General, whom all of called to the attention of the Attorney General, whom all of us regard as perfectly competent to perform his duties, has not accomplished everything that will be accomplished by the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Unless a failure to adopt the amendment as reported by the Senate committee could be misconstrued. think it is true that the matter has already been called to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in all probability the investigation will be conducted independent of the passage of any resolution here. As I said before, the only legal effect of the resolution, as I understand it, is a request for them to make an investigation and to furnish the Senate information concerning it.

Mr. WORKS. I asked the Senator the question with the understanding that no investigation had been made by the committee. It has no information to impart to the Attorney General. It is making no direct recommendation as to what should be done. The matter is already before the Attorney General, and it seems to me that the passage of the resolution would be an idle thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think perhaps the resolution ought to be amended so as to request the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General to report their findings and con-clusions in the event the investigation is made. I think an amendment to that end should perhaps be adopted.

been suggested by some Senators about me here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there seems to be a general air of mystery about this resolution and its purposes and the witnesses, so much so that it seems to me the resolution ought not to pass. If I am correctly informed, there is an unsavory atmosphere surrounding the whole business. plicit confidence, from the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, both upon the floor and privately, that Mr. Green is a very reputable citizen; but we know, if what has come to our ears is true, that this request for information comes also from a most unsavory quarter. We know that one of the men who is engaged in urging the passage of this resolution or something like it is a man who upon his own oath before a committee of this body within the last two or three months has been absolutely discredited.

We are further informed-not officially from the committee, but privately from members—that the promise of evidence is given with the understanding, or a promise is made, that evidence will be given if a certain man is allowed to conduct or assist in the conduct of the prosecution of these cases, if they are brought, and without such assurance the information will not be furnished.

Mr. LANE. I wish to ask the Senator a question in rela-tion to that statement. I am assured that the gentleman of unsavory character to whom he refers in those terms has nothing whatever to do with the prosecution, the investigation, or the employment of any attorney in the event that this matter is turned over to the commission.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will allow me—
Mr. LANE. I will modify that by saying that he will not do, perhaps, anything more than he might interject himself.
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Green refused to testify before the committee until he had called this man on the telephone and asked his permission to do so. That appears in the evidence.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question? What is the difference whose unsavory reputation is wrapped up in this proposition if there are any facts to be had. and if there are no facts to be had, still further, what is the difference whose unsavory reputation is affected? want or should want are the facts. What we

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am not saying that I will reject the truth because it comes from a bad source, but when a man who is a notorious liar, self-confessed, comes before the Senate of the United States and says he has evidence that is of the value of $75,000,000 to the Government of the United States, when he does not go to the proper authority to advance that evidence, when he has not been to the Department of Justice, when he has not been to the Interstate Commerce Commission and is seeking to traffic for personal gain and not for public good, I am not willing that the Senate of the United States should be made a vehicle for that sort of work. If this evidence exists, a court of justice can get it without any doubt at all. If the man knows of the evidence, he can be compelled to divulge it. He can be compelled to divulge the source of the information.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, these offenses, these violations of the law, are generally committed by a number of individ-uals, some one of whom finally concludes to tell the truth. That is what all these trust cases are built upon. If there is some one who has been in the deal who concludes to state what the facts are, I do not care anything about the man's unsavory reputation. But no one has assailed Mr. Green. No one attacks his standing. No one attacks his character.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I was simply saying that the resolution itself, the circumstances, are all mysterious. Secrecy is to be observed. It is all mystery. There is nothing plain. There is nothing outspoken. There is nothing reason of having an investigation, where no one could profit by having misled us, but by reason of an open and public inves-tigation all that is true could be known and all that is untrue could be put aside.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We have had investigations coming from this same source; we have had month after month, where we have sat under this sort of evidence; where the Congress of the United States has been sought to be smirched from one ocean to the other in the estimation of the people; where Congressmen's names have been used over the telephone in forgery by the very people who are urging this investiga-tion; where nothing has come from it. Not a single Member of the Senate, after all the months, has been even brought under suspicion.

For one Member I am suspicious, and I will not vote for any investigation, no matter how meritorious it may appear to be, unless it is founded upon the word of some man other than a man already discredited at the bar of the Senate.

Mr. President, I think if we are going to pass any resolution at all we ought to pass one that has something in it.

I agree with the Senator from California [Mr. Works] that resolution as amended and reported by the committee is an idle resolution. It looks as though the committee had put the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane] in this shape in order to have it rejected. I think the Senator from Oregon wanted to accomplish something. I do not believe this accomplishes anything. It simply calls the attention of the Department of Justice to facts that the committee itself says the Department of Justice has been informed of. It occurs to me, as stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. Root], that we ought not lightly to assume here, by resolution or otherwise, that the Department of Justice or any other department of the Government is derelict in its duty.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was not present when this matter was up for consideration before the Interstate Commerce Committee. The other day, without having seen the report, I thought I would vote for this resolution. I do not believe I shall. It seems to me that the statement made by Mr. Green—whoever he is—before that committee was a gratuitous insult to the committee, to every Member of the Senate, and to every member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Note this report:

The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission reported that David H. Lamar had appeared before the commission and proposed to furnish it evidence of rebates and preferences similar to those referred to in the pending resolution, provided the commission would stipulate to employ an attorney whom he—Lamar—would designate, and that the commission had declined this proposal.

The Senator from Oregon introduced a resolution. Mr. Green, it seems, has some information of some kind, and the Senator from Oregon states that he himself had no knowledge of the rebates and preferences other than the assurance of Mr. Green, and that testimony regarding such rebates would be presented.

Now, note the following paragraph of the report of the committee:

mittee:
On a subsequent day the Senator from Oregon secured the attendance of Mr. Green before the committee, but Mr. Green declined to state either what the facts were or the names of the witnesses upon whom he relied, insisting that he desired an open investigation before the Interstate Commerce Commission and not before a committee. Upon being shown that it was the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the law to prosecute such investigations upon the facts being presented to it, and that he had the privilege of appearing before the commission and presenting his facts and witnesses, he replied that he wished to obtain the backing of the Senate in the matter. Upon being pressed by the committee to give it such a statement of facts as would enable it to form some judgment as to the necessity for and the good faith of the investigation, he again declined to give such information.

What lawyer ever heard of calling a witness into court simply.

What lawyer ever heard of calling a witness into court simply because he had some information pertinent to the issue that was being tried and put him on the stand, not knowing whether he was to tear down the case or build it up? Yet the Senate is expected to act favorably because somebody comes here and asks that he may have permission to disclose certain information to certain boards or a certain commission and will give them no information in advance upon which to act, save his own ipse dixit.

Senators, if this is to be a precedent for the action of other committees, when will we be able to find any time for legitimate Are all the members of this committee of so low standing that they can not be trusted with the names of the witnesses that this distinguished gentleman, Mr. Green, is going ous. Secrecy is to be observed. It is all mystery. There is nothing plain. There is nothing outspoken. There is nothing straightforward about it. There are all the indications of a nasty mess somewhere.

Mr. BORAH. On the other hand, the very thing that these people are asking for is publicity. The very thing they are asking for is not secrecy, but the very opposite of secrecy—a public and open investigation, where no one could profit by body has some information which he is not going to disclose to the Senate and will not give the names of the persons from whom he expects to get it. Not while I am a Member of this body will I vote for such a resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it was within the power of our committee, through its chairman, to have obtained at the hands of the Senate a resolution, if it had not already been done early in the session, that would have enabled us to have brought these men before our committee and have made an examination to have satisfied ourselves whether or not there was enough in this matter to warrant further examination of it. seem to me a very strange position for us to take, when information comes, even in the most informal way, to fall back upon the alleged disreputable character of men who profess to have information. For one I have no patience with that recourse in this matter. It seemed to me it was our duty to have first, if we had not already done so, clothed ourselves as a committee with the power to have brought Mr. Green or anybody else before the committee and have satisfied ourselves whether there was enough in the matter to warrant further investigation. Not having done that, I for one feel no reluctance whatever in supporting the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane].

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

Does the Senator from Minnesota The VICE PRESIDENT. yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure. Mr. KENYON. I want to ask if the committee has not such power at this time? I have some remembrance of a resolution, as it seems to me, which was passed by the Senate giving that committee full power to send for papers and witnesses.

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I say. If the committee has that power, we could have easily brought Mr. Green before us or the other man-I forget his name.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a minute?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, Mr. Green was brought before the committee, or came before it, voluntarily; and, if the Senator will read his testimony, he will find that Mr. Green stated that he himself had no information whatever upon the subject, but he had witnesses, whose names he concealed, who would furnish evidence. The committee could not get anything further out of Mr. Green. Mr. Green simply indulged in some general statements about what he said was going on; but he distinctly stated that he himself had no personal knowledge on the subject.

Mr. CLAPP. No: but he had the names of the men who, he claimed, did have personal knowledge; and we either had the authority, or, if we did not, then we should have obtained it, to have forced him to reveal the names of those witne

Mr. LANE. I wish to say, for the information of the Senate

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.
Mr. LANE. That later along Mr. Green corrected that statement-you will find it on page 33 of the hearings-and in answer, I think, to a question by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend], he stated that he did have evidence, and that he could give evidence, of things which he himself knew. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] called his attention to the fact that he had early in the examination made a different statement, and he again repeated to the Senator from Rhode Island that he himself knew something of those cases, but that he had not been a party to them and had not enjoyed those rebates, which I assume, and only assume, was the occasion for his answer in the first place.

This witness when he was before the committee was an embarrassed man; he felt himself out of place; he expressed the opinion a number of times that he was in the presence of the wisest men of the highest rank in intelligence in the country; and he stated that it was embarrassing to him, as a poor country gentleman, to appear before such distinguished gentlemen; that he was overawed. He himself said so.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will allow me, Mr. Green was not so embarrassed but that he said, as the Senator will find on page 24 of the testimony, that in the harvester case he brought about action by going to Attorney General Wickersham and threatening him with impeachment if he did not proceed. I do not believe that Mr. Green or anybody else ever went into Mr. Wickersham's office and made such a threat without being ordered out of the office. He would not do it with Mr. McReynolds and he would not do it with any other Attorney General of the United States

Mr. CLAPP. Supposing he had been ordered out of the office; supposing he is not of the most supremely high type of man-I do not know him; I do not know anything about himit seems to me that it was the duty of our committee, if we had the power, to proceed; and, if we did not have it, to have obtained the power, and then satisfied ourselves, without resting upon Mr. Green's statement or the statement of anybody else. I do not favor the idea that the committee can avoid its responsibility or that the Senate can avoid its responsibility because some man comes before the committee whose reputation may be tarnished. I do not know anything about it; I do not think I ever saw this other witness, and do not now recall his name; but having ourselves failed to pursue this matter as, in my judgment, it ought to have been pursued, I repeat that, for one, I am willing to support the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] says "if the committee had the power."

I will read the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thompson in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The following is the resolution adopted by the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any sub-committee thereof, be, and the same is hereby, authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ, if necessary, a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. That simply strengthens my position. I asked in the presence of the committee whether such a resolution had been adopted, and was unable to obtain a reply. Then I insisted that if such power had not been obtained it was our duty

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That resolution was presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands]. Mr. CLAPP. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On the 20th or 21st of January, I think, it was adopted. That was since this matter came before the committee. So there is abundant authority for the committee, if it so desires, to proceed with the investigation under the power conferred by that resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. But the committee has not gone ahead; and in view of its failure to go ahead with this matter I, for one, have no hesitation whatever in supporting the resolution of the Senator from Oregon. We have had time enough now to do something; we have not done it; and I am now in favor of letting somebody else do it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] insists that the committee should have made this investigation, and should have made it under oath. At the time this matter was under consideration by the committee the resolution to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has just referred was not adopted. That resolution was adopted after the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate had acted upon this subject matter.

Let me say further that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am opposed to taking up the time of the committee with a prolonged inquiry into the question whether rebates were received by the United States Steel Co., when it is made the duty, under a statute passed by Congress, of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make such an inquiry, that commission being vested with full powers regarding the matter, and when by a law, in the passage of which this body participated, it is made the duty of the Attorney General, upon probable cause being shown, to institute a suit for three times the amount of the rebates.

The Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate has important legislation now pending before it sufficient to absorb all its energies during the existing Congress; it has before it legislation relating to the trusts under the recommendations made by the President in his message. It would be a serious detriment to the public business for that committee to be switched off now into an investigation such as was conducted by the lobby committee or by the House committee regarding the Steel Trust or other committees, which have served the purpose largely of contributing to sensationalism, without any substantial results in legislation, and committees which the Senator from Mississippi declared have spent in connection with their labors a large proportion of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. President, when we passed the interstate-commerce law did we mean that that law should be enforced or not?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. In passing the interstate-commerce law we neither abdicated our functions nor became released from the duties and the obligations resting upon us, first, as members of the Interstate Commerce Committee; secondly, as Senators; and thirdly, as citizens.

Mr. NEWLANDS. We certainly did not release ourselves from any obligations as legislators, but we did not add to our labors the duties of investigation, which we had imposed by law upon the executive department. So, Mr. President, I object, so far as I am concerned as an individual member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, at this important juncture of legislation, to that committee taking up its time with unnecessary investigations, when by law we have organized a tribunal for that purpose, and when by law we have made it the express duty of the Attorney General and of the Interstate Commerce Commission to cover not only the field of investigation but the field of action by the institution of suits.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho? Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Would not the Senator, as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, be willing to withdraw the amendment which has been reported by the committee and give us an opportunity either to vote the resolution up or vote it down, to pass it or not to pass it? The proposition as it is presented here is unsatisfactory to everyone. It amounts to nothing; it is a vain thing. We are simply sending a formal request to the Attorney General and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It does not express the wish of the Senate. We do not go on record as to whether we are in favor of or against the proposed investigation, and if the resolution as amended is adopted we will have expressed no opinion. I think that we ought, at least, to have a conviction about it and record that onviction in our vote,

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regard action upon this resolution, as suggested by the Interstate Commence Committee, as a mere reference of a subject matter which has been called to the attention of the Senate by a Senator, to a tribunal which has been organized by law for conducting such investigations, a mere act of courtesy to the Senator who proposed it, a mere act of public duty, such as any individual might perform when matters of consequence, coming from sources however questionable, are brought to his attention. That is all that this resolution means.

The Senator from Oregon is doubtless in earnest in pressing this motion; he is doubtless prompted by the worthiest of motives. We all know-for it has been disclosed in a recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission-that the Steel Trust has been receiving rebates through some of its organiza-How extensive that practice has been is not known. I would not willingly put an obstacle in the way of any man who seeks to bring facts to the consideration of the Department of Justice or of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I would not place an obstacle in the way of the Senator from Oregon, who, under his responsibility as a Senator, relying upon some statements which have been made, has presented this resolution. He has made a mistake as to the form of the resolution, for it practically calls upon one body of Congress to legislate for both bodies, practically to change existing law, to add to the duties of an existing tribunal, and to prescribe the form in which it shall discharge those duties; but, so far as I am concerned, I think the committee did right in referring the whole subject matter, however questionable the source of the information might be, to the officers charged with the duty of attending to it.

Facts do not always depend upon the character of the source from which they come; the truth may sometimes be told by a scoundrel, and a scoundrel may be in possession of facts that are material to public justice. I would not ignore a matter of this kind from whatever source it was brought to the attention of the Senate; but whilst I would not ignore it, I would not usurp the functions of legislation that do not belong to this body, but would simply, in view of the form of the resolution, can impose upon it a duty which is not laid upon it by general refer it to those charged with the responsibility, and that is all that this action calls for.

It has been said that the Attorney General and the Interstate Commerce Commission have already been before our committee upon this subject. That is true. The Attorney General was requested to appear, and not being able to appear personally, he appeared by his assistant. I see no reason, however, having communicated the matter to his assistant personally, why we should not formally communicate the matter to the Attorney General himself by the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should prefer to have an opportunity to vote upon this resolution directly rather than to vote upon it as it is presented; but the wisdom of the committee seems to have been to present it in this way.

I do not think we are confined in this matter to a consideration of the position or attitude of Mr. Green alone. The Senator from Oregon has presented this resolution after considerable investigation, and no one doubts that he is quite earnest in regard to it. I presume no one doubts that he thinks the way he has suggested in his resolution is the proper way to accomplish what he desires to accomplish.

I knew something of the Senator from Oregon before he came to the Senate Chamber, and he does not often get upon a false trail. He has had considerable public service, and has been subject more than once to severe attack for his methods, but he has generally won out successfully for the public.

So far as I am concerned, in voting upon this matter I shall vote in the belief that the Senator from Oregon has made his own investigation and believes that his resolution has a worthy foundation and that the way in which he wants to do it is the proper way to accomplish it.

It seems to be admitted by the chairman of the committee that these rebates have been collected and that there is a foundation for the charge. How many millions are involved no one knows but the amount has been estimated all the way from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000 or $200,000,000. The Senate can afford to go on record as being in favor of this resolution or being against it. It is no courtesy to the Senator from Oregon, as suggested by the chairman, to send this resolution down to the Interstate Commerce Commission as a mere formal request, because that is what he does not desire; and it is a peculiar form of courtesy to give a man something he does not want and something to which he is very much objecting.

If we desire to show the proper regard for his earnestness in this matter, and believe there is a foundation for it, let us follow his course. If not, if it is without foundation in fact and without proper reason, we can afford to vote against it.

I wish the chairman of the committee would present the resolution as a straight proposition.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Idaho takes his seat I should like to make an inquiry of him, as I have very great confidence in his opinion as a lawyer. I will preface my question with a short statement.

I presume the Senator recognizes the fact that it is only by law that we can impose a duty upon the Interstate Commerce Commission or upon the Attorney General, with the exception that we can require of either of those departments information they may have, or information they may acquire under our direction, that may be needed to aid us in legislation. In other words, when we seek to impose upon the Attorney General a duty of a general character, or for any other purpose than the purpose of securing such information as we may need in the Senate for the action of the Senate, it must be done by law. When I say "by law" I mean by a statute or a joint resolution and not by a Senate resolution.

I think the Senator from Idaho will certainly recognize the correctness of that proposition.

Mr. BORAH. I accept the proposition as correct.

Very well. I had no doubt in the world as to Mr. BACON. the Senator's doing so, and for that reason I now wish to apply that proposition to the resolution as introduced by the Senator from Oregon.

The first requirement in it is that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make an investigation, not for the purpose of informing the Senate with a view to its proceeding in its business of legislation, but for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there should be action by the Department of Justice in the way of bringing suit.

I say, Mr. President, that that is not within the scope of the powers of the Senate. It is within the scope of the powers of Congress, but it is not within the scope of the powers of the Senate, because it imposes upon the Interstate Commerce Commission a duty which can be laid upon it only by law. We law if the performance of that duty is essential to the performance of our duty as Senators.

It seems to me there can be no possible doubt about the proposition that the first requirement proposed in the original resolution was one which related to a matter which did not have for its purpose furnishing to the Senate information which would be necessary and profitable or valuable in the prosecution of the work of legislation by the Senate, but that it was for the distinct purpose of seeing whether or not some-thing should be done which lay within the duty of the Department of Justice; and the same thing may be said of other provisions in the original resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BACON.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator a question. do not discover anything in the resolution which gives any information whatsoever with reference to these alleged offenses against the law. It is a mere statement with reference to an examination of certain parties who are supposed to possess information with regard to these offenses.

If it is competent and proper, as the Senator has just stated, for the Senate to refer to the Department of Justice or the Interstate Commerce Commission any information that may come into its possession with reference to matters within their respective jurisdictions, I wish to ask the Senator what there is in this amendment affecting the jurisdiction of either the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Attorney General that we want to refer to them?

If we pass this resolution in the form in which it comes to us from the committee, are we not merely referring to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the Attorney General a resolution that has been offered to the Senate asking for an investigation? If so, what good is to be accomplished by that reference, unless we are going to accompany it with some direction or with some expression of opinion by the Senate with reference to the action it thinks those departments should take with regard to it?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina propounds to me a question which has no connection whatever with the proposition I was discussing. I shall vote for the resolution as it came from the committee. I am not speaking as to that at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Perhaps the Senator does not understand my question. What are we referring to the Interstate Com-merce Commission? We are referring to them nothing but a resolution

Mr. BACON. I am not discussing that question, either. I am discussing an entirely different question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia further yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has the floor, and I am simply propounding a question to him. I wish to say, in justification of myself, that I was not discussing the report of the committee at all. I was discussing the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho that the original resolution ought to be adopted. That is what I was discussing.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator from Georgia misunderstood the Senator from Idaho. I asked for an opportunity to vote directly upon the original resolution, and either reject it upon the ground that it ought not to be adopted as a resolution or else adopt it. In other words, by the resolution to which the Senator finds objection, and very properly, so far as the legal phase of it is concerned, in some respects we are doing, I will not say a foolish thing, because the Senate of the United States is doing it, but we are sending down there an inapt and im-What for? It is a good deal like a doctor proper resolution. who finds a patient for whom he can not do anything, and he tells him to take a trip to California and see if that will not

Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada. Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator asks, "What for?" My answer is: To give the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General the information that a certain man-Mr. Green-claims to have information relating to rebates, and that he has within his knowledge the names of other material witnesses as to these transactions, and that is all.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to say just one word.

I certainly misunderstood the purpose of the Senator. I am glad to know that I did misunderstand him. I understood him to be in favor of the resolution as it was originally presented by the Senator from Oregon, but I am glad to know that I am mistaken as to that,

I wish to say further to the Senator that I am not lacking in If I had been sympathy with the view he has just expressed. on the Interstate Commerce Committee, I should have preferred to have let the matter rest, or not to have taken any action whatsoever. I do not regard this reference, however, as anything more than a formal transference of the matter to them, with full discretion on their part to do as they may see fit, and with no possible effort to constrain them or coerce them in any way to do anything which may not commend itself to their judgment.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator takes his seat, if we had had a report from the Interstate Commerce Committee directly upon the resolution, as to the advisability or inadvisability of passing it, either they would have suggested such amendments as would have made it proper and appropriate or we would have amended it upon the floor of the Senate and made it speak the language which we desire it to speak. The resolution, however, is brought in here in its inapt form, if I may use the term, and it is sent in that form, a mere matter of request, as we would send it through the mails, to the Attorney General and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does not the Senator think we ought either to whip it into shape and send it down there in proper shape, or, if it can not be made to do the thing we want it to do, vote it down?

Mr. BACON. I am very frank to say to the Senator that the resolution is not in the shape in which I myself would prefer to have it; but I yield to the superior judgment of the committee which has had it in charge and which has thought it proper to present it in this way. I should prefer that nothing should be done if it could have been done without its being brought directly to the vote of the Senate; but I think the committee has done all that could be done. I mean it has gone as far as it could go with propriety. In my judgment, it could not have gone any further than to refer the matter to the Attorney General and to the Interstate Commerce Commission to take such action as they may see fit and proper to take, without in any manner indicating to them what we desire that they shall do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have been somewhat interested in this discussion, and I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question to see if I correctly understand the matter.

It seems that a man named Green has declared that he has information to the effect that the Steel Trust has enjoyed re-bates from the railroads. That information came to the attention of the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Oregon desires the Senate to request or direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and see whether or not these reports are true. This resolution, in the form in which it is reported from the committee, does not propose to do that, but refers the matter to them for their consideration and action, if they see fit to take any action.

If we want to find out whether or not this corporation has been violating the law, why should we not undertake to do it?

Is there any reason?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question, suppose it should transpire later that rebates had been paid to the amount of two hundred and some-odd million dollars and the statute of limitations had run and the action had lapsed. What position would the Senate of the United States be in, when it had before it this resolution, imperfect in form though it may be, and failed to whip it into form so that it would be effective and sent it off on a wild-goose chase to some other department meaningless and inapt in itself?

The duty devolves upon us to do one of two things-either to determine that the resolution is in improper shape and that the facts are not sufficient to warrant action or to put the resolution in proper form and determine that the facts are sufficient, and then either go ahead with our own investigation or put it in such shape that the department may investigate it.

There would be no valid excuse upon the part of the Senate if it should transpire that the Senator from Oregon is correct in his position-and I am not willing to assume that the Senafrom Oregon is in error. I am satisfied that his tenacity of purpose in this matter indicates that he has some facts which he is desirous of having revealed and which should be revealed. He might be in error, but it is quite evident that he is not himself desirous of fathering a useless and fruitless

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.
Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire, if the Senator will permit me, what is the objection to the Senate undertaking to find out whether the statements in regard to the action of this corporation are true or false? Why should we not find out?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. When this matter was before the committee originally the committee had no power to make the investigation. That is to say, it had no power to call witnesses or to administer oaths—unless it has that power inherently—and no power to expend any money. Since that time, I believe, Senate has given to the committee the power to make such an investigation as this, and therefore the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas is very pertinent. I should like to see the resolution go to the committee and have the committee exercise the power that it now has and call witnesses and ascertain concerning this matter, as it should have done originally or would have done originally if it had had the power to do it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BORAH. I do.
Mr. LANE. With all due respect and humbleness, I will say that a great deal of delay attaches to the work of this great and distinguished body and its committees. It has arbitrary powers, possessed by none other except perhaps the great Creator. It is a law unto itself. It does many things that are hard to understand. It has the power of going off into a back room, and locking itself up, and going into executive session, and there transacting the business of the people. Although it is the servant of the people, it retains in its hands the power to transact the affairs of the people and exclude the people from any information in regard to them. They do not even have the right to put their noses in the door

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will kindly suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will now state.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

Mr. NEWLANDS. I observe that the Senator-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WORKS. I yield. Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the matter in hand. I think it is very near a vote. I do not think there will be much more speech making,

Mr. SMOOT. The only way that can be done will be for the Senator from Georgia, having the bill in charge, to ask that it be temporarily laid aside, and then the request for unanimous consent can be made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will make that request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I knew that we could vote upon the resolution in the course of 10 minutes I would be willing to give the matter that direction, but I think there are still Senators who wish to speak on the subject. I was on the point yesterday of giving the matter that direction, and yet we have found an hour and a half taken up in the discussion this morning. I am just afraid to do it, though I would like to accommodate the gentlemen interested in the resolution, and especially the chairman of the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would not the Senator give us half an hour? If we do not dispose of the resolution by that time, as I am confident we will, it can go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really feel that I ought not to yield that long. I believe the safe course is to go on with the unfinished business. The friends of the measure urge me to go on with it.

Mr. BORAH. I think possibly the publicity which this matter is having will have practically the same effect anyway as the passage of the resolution.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask whether there are any other

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to have five or six minutes. I have just come into the Chamber; I have not been here before to-day; and I was on the committee.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from California yield? He has the floor.

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia who has the bill in charge.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to know from the Senator from California whether it is upon the resolution reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce or upon the unfinished business that he intends to address the Senate?

Mr. WORKS. I was about to address myself to the unfinished business

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am told by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] that there will be considerably more debate upon the resolution. I want again to say that I regret not being able to accommodate the wishes of the Senator from Nevada. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I know it is quite unpopular, as it is unpleasant, to oppose any legislation that is supposed to be in the interest of the farmer, but sometimes one's sense of duty impels him to do unpleasant things.

We are proposing by this bill to appropriate millions of dollars for one class of the citizens of this country. It is class legislation. We are proposing to devote the public money to aid that class of citizens to do the work that is imposed upon them in their own interest and in the interest of the country. It is paternalism pure and simple.

I know, Mr. President, that nothing I may say here to-day will have the slightest effect in preventing the passage of this bill. I am addressing myself to the Senate more for the purpose of calling attention to the unfortunate tendency of latter-day legislation, of which this is only an example.

want in the beginning to call attention briefly to the terms of the bill, and then to refer to some other legislation which is now before the Senate, as well as to legislation that has already become effective, showing this tendency.

The bill provides, in section 3-I am reading it, including the amendments that have already been made by the Senate-as so amended the bill provides:

so amended the bill provides:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of said cooperative agricultural extension work and the necessary printing and distributing of information in connection with the same there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $490,000 for each year, $10,000 of which shall be paid annually, in the manner hereinafter provided, to each State which shall by action of its legislature assent to the provisions of this act: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation hereinbefore made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That there is also appropriated an additional sum of $600,000 for the fiscal year following that in which the foregoing appropriation first becomes available, and for each year thereafter for four years a sum exceeding by $600,000 the sum appropriated for each preceding year, and for each year thereafter there is permanently appropriated for each year the sum of $4,800,000 in addition to the sum of $490,000 hereinbefore provided.

As I figure out the provisions of this section of the bill, we

As I figure out the provisions of this section of the bill, we will pay up to the end of the fourth year for the purposes of this act $12,000,000; the annual payment at that time will have reached $3,000,000; and from that time on we propose to make a permanent appropriation for this purpose of $4,800,000 in addition to the permanent appropriation already provided for of $490,000.

Now, let us see the purpose for which this money is to be appropriated. Section 1 of the bill provides:

appropriated. Section I of the only provides:

That in order to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same, there may be inaugurated in connection with the college or colleges in each State now receiving, or which may hereafter receive, the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862—

And so forth.

The act of 1862 provided in substance for the use of a portion of the public lands for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural and mechanical colleges. Subsequently another act was passed providing for the extension of that Now we are proposing to go further and extend the work to be done by the National Government in cooperation with the States to the actual education of the farmer on his farm.

Section 2 of the bill provides:

That cooperative agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not attending or resident in said colleges in the several communities, and imparting to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act.

Mr. President, we are proposing by this bill to pay out within the next four years $12,000,000, and $4,800,000 annually thereafter, for the purpose of doing extension work, in addition to what is already being done at the expense of the Government, by undertaking to educate the farmer on the farm. By this bill we have departed from the original purpose of the legislation to educate not only the farmer but the mechanic. The colleges that were provided for by the previous legislation were agricultural and mechanical colleges.

Why should we expend the public money for the purpose of educating the farmers of this country any more than the me-Why should we educate the farmer any more than the chanics? blacksmith or the carpenter? It is said that the farmer is the backbone of the Republic, and that everyone is interested in agriculture. But everyone is interested in labor in all its departments, and there is no reason that I can conceive of why we should select the farmers for the purpose of aiding them by the expenditure of the public money any more than anyone else who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow.
Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

I am one of the advocates of this bill, but Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to be misunderstood or wrongly classified. statement just made by the Senator from California is absolutely true. There is no more imperative reason for the expenditure of money in the education of a farmer than in the education of a carpenter. I am in favor of national aid for edu-

The Senator from California will remember that when the bill was last before us it contained two divisions—one giving aid to the educational work among the farmers, and the other giving aid to the educational work among the vocations, such as have been mentioned by the Senator from California.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President Mr. CUMMINS. I hoped that the two might go hand in hand through Congress. I am very sorry that they are now separated, but the fact that they are separated makes me none the less anxious that this division of the great work carried on with success. But I want to say that I shall follow the conclusion of the Senator from California, and at the first opportunity be in favor of similar aid to the education of the carpenter and the mason and men in all the other trades.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to make this suggestion to the Senator from Iowa; Aid in education of the trades has been rendered by the Government in the establishment of mechanical and agricultural colleges. You could not, I apprehend, provide in the same manner to render service to the mechanic which is provided under this bill. The agent of the Government goes upon the farm and there assists the owner of the farm in developing the resources of the farm in the management of the You could not render that assistance to the carpenter working on a house or mechanic at the forge, but you do give the mechanic the opportunity to acquire an education in the agricultural and mechanical colleges, and it is the only way he could be assisted by the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senator from California unless he freely gives it to me.

Mr. WORKS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Iowa should reply to what has been said by the junior Senator from Mississippi, and I yield for that purpose. Of course I do not want to submit to long speeches within my time.

Mr. CUMMINS. The manner of extending this information or aid is not exactly the same in the case of a farmer as in the case of a carpenter, but the object is the same and the great results are similar. If it is thought that this bill is intended to educate only the particular farmer upon whose land the demonstration is made, there is error somewhere. I do not so understand it. The demonstrator goes to a farm, selecting in a community the farm best adapted for his purpose, and begins his demonstration, but that is intended to educate the community. It is intended to extend the information to all those who may live thereabout and who will come to see what has been done and to learn how it was done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield further to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WORKS. I yield. Mr. VARDAMAN. You can not develop a truth or discover fact in any community without the whole community being benefited by the discovery of that truth.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, if it is not an incidental benefit it is a direct benefit, and, as a matter of fact, there is school established on a particular farm for the benefit and instruction of all who may be so approximate to the farm as to be able to reach it and see what is being done.

Now, with regard to the trades, of course the education must be carried on in schools established and maintained in the urban population, and through probably greater organization than is required in agriculture; but, after all, the ultimate object to be accomplished is the same, namely, making the men and the women of this country more efficient in the work which they are called upon to do from day to day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator that we have passed a joint resolution providing for a commission to take up broadly the subject of vocational education as applied to men engaged in industrial pursuits. I hope that that commission will be named in a very short time. The resolution requires it to report to Congress by the 1st of June, and it is my earnest hope that as the result of our work we may be able to bring before Congress a measure that will receive the support of both Houses in the direction of a contribution toward industrial education, seeking thereby to reach the other classes of the community.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, referring to what has been said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins], I am a great said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins], I am a great said by the Senator from I am in entire sympathy with believer in vocational education. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator from Iowa in that particular; but the question isand it is one that the Congress of the United States should have asked itself long ago, when we entered upon this kind of legislation-should the National Government participate in the expense of education that is to be carried on in the States? Why should the farmers of the State of Iowa, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, agricultural State in the country, composed probably of as intelligent a class of agriculturists as can be found anywhere in the world-I know that, because thousands of them have had the good sense to emigrate to California, where they have made up a part of the very best citizenship of our State-why should the farmers of the State of Iowa come to the National Government begging its beneficence to educate the farmers themselves? Why should the millions of dollars of the public money that must be paid by the tax-payers of this country be used for the purpose of educating one class of the people to the exclusion of another?

I wish to call attention to the report that was made by the House committee on this bill as indicating just what the tendency of the legislation is, and I want to follow it up by showing the enormous expenditures that have been provided for by the Government for the various purposes for which money is being appropriated. I do this for the purpose of calling attention for a moment to what I call the downright extravagance of appropriations by the National Government for these and other purposes. The House committee says in this report:

In practical effect it undertakes to provide such machinery as will bring to the attention of the farmer, the farmer's wife and children, in the most striking manner such demonstrated truths and practices of successful agriculture which, lived up to, make rural living desirable and profitable as an occupation. It provides the connecting link between the sources of information in matters relating to agricultural life and the people sought to be reached with such information, and furnishes an added agency to our system of agricultural teaching.

I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that, as I construe the bill, it confines the work to be done under it absolutely to the instruction of the farmer on the farm, with the exception that it provides for the publication of information for the farmer that is already being done by thousands and thousands of documents that are published and sent out to the farmers throughout the country. Therefore we are providing these millions of dollars for the simple purpose of attempting to educate the farmer on the farm by a demonstration to be made by ex-I want to ask the Senate, conceding that it is proper and legitimate legislation, whether it is likely to be worth to the farmers the millions of dollars we propose to appropriate for that purpose?

They say, further, in this report after reviewing the previous legislation which has been enacted that I have already mentioned:

A glance at this legislation is conclusive of the committee's propo-

The passage of the first Morrill Act for the endowment and mainte-nance of at least one agricultural college in each State committed the Federal Government emphatically and irrevocably to a policy of appropriating money to aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture.

appropriating money to aid in acquiring and unusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture.

This first serious national effort to teach agriculture in a practical way was followed by legislation providing for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations in the several States, the creation of the Federal Department of Agriculture, and other enactments for collecting agricultural truths to be made available to the farmer through such colleges and other agencies as were found suitable for the nurrose.

Approximately $70,000,000 have been expended by the Federal Government in the maintenance of the State experiment stations and agricultural colleges in the last 50 years, and the annual appropriation for the Department of Agriculture reaches a sum of more than $20,000,000.

It would seem that if the National Government has irrevocably embarked upon this kind of legislation it has done quite enough in aid of the States, who should educate their own citizens, in expending $70,000,000 for that purpose and, in addition, making an annual appropriation for the maintenance of the Agriculture Department of $20,000,000 a year. Not only has the Government done enough for this class of citizens as compared with others, but the work that is proposed to be done will not be worth the money that we propose to expend for it.

What are we going to do with this $12,000,000 in the next four years and the $4,800,000 thereafter, in compliance with the terms of this bill? If it is limited, as I think it is, to the instruction of the farmer on his farm, all we are going to be able to do, I suppose, is to educate, if they are not already educated, the necessary experts to go out and teach the farmers how they ought to run their farms and how to grow their crops and pay the expenses of an army of theoretical experts who will endeavor to teach the practical farmers who know more about scientific and useful farming than they do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Shafroth in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from California if it is distasteful to him, but I should like to ask him if he really opposes the appropriation for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural and mechanical colleges?

I am not doing that now, Mr. President, be-WORKS. cause that question is not before the Senate. I say with perfect frankness, however, that I think the entry of this Government upon that kind of legislation and the making of appropriations for that purpose was a mistake. I think the education of the farmer, as well as that of other people, ought to have been left to the States. I do not know of any provision in the Constitution or any right that belongs to the Government itself that would authorize this kind of legislation; but that has passed and gone. Having entered upon it-Congress has already settled that question and entered upon that sort of legislation-I do not expect that Congress will repeal any of those statutes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator-

Mr. WORKS. Pardon me just a moment. I am afraid that Congress will continue, as it has in the past, to appropriate more and more of the public money for purposes of this kind. Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator maintain that very large returns have not been the result of such appropriations and that the country has not greatly benefited by them?

Mr. WORKS. That, Mr. President, I do not know; neither does the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think that greater progress has been made in agriculture through the operations and directions of the Department of Agriculture in the last 20 years than we had made in a hundred years preceding that work has been done in the way of education under the laws which have been passed, and they have been advantageous to the country, and to the farmer particularly; but that does not meet the question. The question is whether this very same thing might not have been done, and ought not to have been done, by the States themselves. Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WORKS. There is no doubt about that, and if the States

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator does not maintain, though, that good has not resulted therefrom?

Mr. WORKS. I have said, Mr. President, that I have no doubt that good has resulted from it. Good may result from a great many things that are done by Congress which are unauthorized and illegitimate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am interested in what the Senator from California is saying, and I think it is the exact truth about the situation to which he is calling attention. I do not think it need be the occasion of any surprise to him nor to anybody else that the Government is now proposing to engage upon another activity, which I think probably the framers of the Constitution would have regarded as utterly outside the province of national activity. I think, however, the barriers, which were put up by the Constitution against these extra constitutional movements, have long since been broken down, and I agree with the Senator from California that we are going to continue, probably under the leadership of the party that formerly professed to stand as strict constructionists of the Constitution, to engage in more of these socialistic enterprises, probably urged by the fact mentioned by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman] that great good may result from them; in other words, the clause in the preamble of the Constitution, which states why the framers made it to provide, among other things, for "the general welfare," is considered to be warrant enough for the attacking of any provision of the Constitution or the evasion of any of its limitations.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that if the barriers to which he refers in the Constitution were broken down, which the Democratic Party has heretofore undertaken to keep up, they were broken down by the party of which he happens to be a distinguished member. Now, since they are broken down, I think it hardly lies in the mouth of the Senator or of any other member of his party to complain when we undertake to direct the agencies of the Government for the upbuilding of that class of our population upon whose toil and whose services the prosperity and the permanent material interests of the country depend.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, those barriers have been broken down and are being broken down by people who come here who belong to both parties and to all parties and to no They are going to continue to be invaded, in parties at all. my opinion. I am not saying that any one party is exclusively responsible for it; but I am calling attention to the fact that the party which for a long time has stood as a consolidated rock against such constructions of the Constitution has now given way and is advocating those doctrines.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that any barriers have been broken down that ought to be maintained. I am glad to see the Government of the United States enlarge its activities for the benefit and the advantage of the people, and I am a little surprised at one utterance of my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee]. He speaks of a process of education carried on and maintained by the Government as a socialistic enterprise. I should like to ask him whether it is any the less socialistic if carried on and maintained by the States than by the United States; and I should like to know what civilized country on the face of the earth abandons its duty of attempting to educate its people?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not split hairs with the Senator about the use of the word "socialistic"; perhaps it was improperly used in that connection. Let us call it "paternalistic." What I meant to say was that simply because it may benefit somebody has not heretofore been considered a sufficient reason for the General Government to engage in an activity which is more properly reserved to the States under the Constitution.

had done their duty as they should have done—

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator will allow me to answer his questions as I go along. I will say that a great deal of now almost openly avowed that little attention is to be paid to the Constitution or to any limitation in it, and that we are to plunge ahead, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MAN | has said, for the benefit of different classes in this country, to do things which will benefit them as classes, taking up first one class and then another. My idea is that it will be much better and safer in the long run if we should pass general laws and let them operate for the benefit of all the people, and let the so-called classes adjust themselves and their own relations under such laws.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not want to trespass upon the time of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

WORKS. I will yield; but I hope that I shall not be involved here in a side discussion on socialism.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from California, but I do want to say, in this connection, that agree with the distinguished American, whose vision has always been a matter of wonder to me, that our only security is in a written Constitution, and I believe in living within its limitations; but I also hold, Mr. President, that the highest end of Government is the improvement of man; and if the man be improved, the Government will share his improvement, and the intelligent moral sentiment will write the laws of the land. We may rely, Mr. President, with confidence upon the awakened public sentiment to steer the ship of state over the breakers of socialism or any other issues. I think of all classes who have received least at the hands of the Government, who have received fewer favors than any other class, it is the farmers, the men upon whom rests the whole burden of Government, and upon the product of whose toil the whole superstructure of commerce is founded. I can not conceive how a Senator who has the public interest at heart can be opposed to the little assistance that is proposed to be rendered to the farmers in this bill, except upon the ground stated by the Senator from California, that it is violative of what he believes to be the original plan scheme of our Government.

Mr WORKS I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that the benefits that will result to the farmer as the consequence of the passage of this bill will be very slight indeed, but it is going to cost the Government a good deal of money. If the Senator from Mississippi is right that the Democratic Party has opposed the letting down of the barriers, and that it has been done in violation of the Constitution by the Republican Party, the Democratic Party should feel it its duty to again put up the barriers and prevent the further illegitimate use of the public money for any such purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator that I do not think it is in violation of the Constitution. There are a great many Democrats who have thought so, but I do not

Mr. WORKS. Then I do not understand why the Senator from Mississippi should have declared that it was against the opposition of the Democratic Party that these barriers were

Mr. President, I want, in view of the purposes that I indicated in the beginning, namely, the effort to show the unfortunate tendency of legislation of this kind, to call attention to some of the other appropriations that we have made and are proposing to make not only in the interest of the farmer, but for other So far as the farmer is concerned we have taught him by this kind of legislation not to depend upon his own exertions and his own ability, skill, and intelligence, but when he wants anything to come to the Government and ask for an appropriation by the National Government to help him acquire what he should acquire by his own industry, skill, and perseverance. So long as we have taught him that lesson he will be coming here year after year, through some of these agricultural professors or experts and otherwise, asking for just such appropriations as this. What the American farmer needs is not charity, but fair and just laws that will enable him to work out his own problems.

We are educating the people to depend upon their Government and the appropriation of public money to acquire what they should gain by their own exertions, and I am afraid we are going to continue that kind of education to the end. Where we are going to stop I do not know.

There is another unfortunate phase of this character of legislation. Whenever a bill of this kind in aid of the farmers comes upon the floor of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, if any party, Democratic or Republican, opposes such legislation it is charged at once with being opposed to the interests of the farmers. Any political party that wants to hold its place in power or one that seeks to obtain power in the Government generally has not the courage to withstand opposition that will naturally come from the farming interests if they fail to legislate upon questions of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator from California if he does not think he had better change the adverb right there. He said it "generally has not the courage." Does he not think that it never has the courage?

Mr. WORKS. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have never known one of them that had. Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is an unfortunate situation. These bills as a rule are not—the Senator from Mississippi will probably correct me and say they are never-thoroughly considered on their merits.

Now, let us see, Mr. President, what we have done and what we are proposing to do in the way of the expenditure of public We have started out at this session by appropriating, so far as this body is concerned, $40,000,000 for the construction of a railroad in Alaska. There was some excuse for that appropriation. It was not for any class of citizens as against or in preference to any other class; it was for the purpose of improving and developing the property of the whole people and making it useful.

Next, we have a proposition here to appropriate $500,000 for the cure of hog cholera, and I have no doubt that bill will be passed. I was greatly amused at the description of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] of the process by which this cure was brought about. It was about this: They take the poisoned blood from a hog sick with the cholera, inject it into the veins of a healthy hog near the ear; 10 days later cut off the tail of the hog, extract the blood, and in turn administer it to a sick hog, and thereby expect to cure him. Well, in the beginning we have one sick hog; by the first administration of the so-called serum, or what the serum is finally made of, we have two sick hogs; and when we administer the serum to a third hog, we do not know just exactly what is going to happen. The Senator did not tell us what becomes of the well hog, whose comfort or whose life is sacrificed for the good of his fellows, or the amount of serum procured from his tail. To me, Mr. President, that is perfectly ridiculous; and I say it with all deference to the distinguished and expert gentlemen who have concluded that that kind of administration of poisoned blood from a sick hog can cure another sick hog after it has run through a well

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I notice that my colleague is not here. He can defend himself.

Mr. WORKS. I suggest to the Senator that it is quite appropriate for the senior Senator to say what may be said on that subject, because he got the junior Senator into his trouble by suggesting that he describe the process of the cure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing at least to bear the responsibility. The process is not essentially different from that of inoculation or vaccination in order to prevent smallpox. I know there are a great many people who do not believe in vaccination in order to prevent that disease, but it is accepted by scientists; and I think, therefore, that a similar process with regard to hog cholera can hardly be sweepingly condemned. although I grant you there may be a difference of opinion

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the long-disputed question about the efficacy of vaccination. I know a great many people thoroughly believe in it, and I respect their convictions. I do not believe in it myself, but I am not an expert on that question, and I may be wholly mistaken as to the effect of vaccination. I am not an expert on hog cholera, either, and while this mode of undertaking to cure hogs may be entirely successful, I do not believe it will be. I have to be convinced. as I said a moment ago, with all deference to the opinion of distinguished people who believe to the contrary; but was about to suggest, Mr. President, whether it would not be a wise thing for the Government to allow the States that have already entered upon the use of this serum to determine with some degree of certainty whether or not it is beneficial before we appropriate $500,000 for that purpose. That, it seems to me, would be only reasonable, whatever may be the efficacy of the alleged cure.

Then we have another bill here, introduced, I believe, by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], providing for a commission to investigate the roads and public highways with a view of expending more money by the National Government to improve the highways in the States. For that the Senator evidently thinks an appropriation of a million dollars would be about the right thing, and that amount of appropriation is provided for in the bill. What may be the fate of the bill, of course, I am not able to say; but following now upon the footsteps of that one is another bill for aiding the States in the construction of roads, for which it is proposed to appropriate $25,000,000 a year. That appropriation would be chiefly for the benefit of the farmer. It might benefit some of the distinguished gentlemen who are able to ride in automobiles for pleasure, but primarily it would be for the benefit of the farmer, and it ought to be as between him and the man who rides in his automobile. That is just another one of the kind of bills that are made the instrument of appropriating the public money of the National Government in aid of improvements that, in my judgment, should be made with the money of the States.

Then the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] has a bill by which he proposes to have Congress appropriate $50,000,000 a year for the improvement of streams, waterways, harbors, and so forth. That is a perfectly legitimate appropriation of public money, if applied to navigable streams particularly, because it is not in the interest of any one class of people as against another, but it is a public improvement that applies to and benefits everybody. It is an indication, however, of the disposition on the part of Congress to appropriate large sums of money for purposes a great many of which I think are illegitimate and for which appropriations ought not to be made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if these projects which seem to originate and flourish in the penumbra of the Constitution are to receive the legislative approval, does the Senator from California, as a progressive, far-sighted Senator, blame the authors of these bills for trying to get in quickly and secure their share of the plunder before it is exhausted?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not just now talking about the "pork barrel." I have left that out of this discussion altogether. How much money we are spending in that way nobody can guess, although I presume it might possibly be figured out; but I am not blaming anybody; I am not criticizing individuals who introduce these respective bills; I am simply calling attention to the tendency of modern legislation on this subject; and I think it is worthy of the careful attention of Members of this body.

Then we have a proposal by the Postmaster General to acquire the telegraph and telephone lines. How many million dollars that is likely to cost the National Government nobody knows. That may be a good thing to do; I am not prepared to say that it might not be a good thing for the people of this country if the Government did own the telegraph and telephone lines; but, again, it shows the tendency to expend large sums of money, to reach out in a way that I think brings about the worst kind of extravagance in appropriations by Congress.

Then we come to the Reclamation Service. We have appropriated for the Reclamation Service $101,000,000. actually expended for that purpose $81,000,000 of that amount. The original purpose of the reclamation legislation was commendable. It was a legitimate and proper effort to bring about the improvement and settlement of the public lands and to encourage and enable the poor man to take up small tracts of land under the system, and thereby secure for himself a home; but that system has not worked out well. The reclamation projects were made to cost such enormous sums of money that it was utterly impossible in many cases for the man who went upon those raw lands without any funds of his own to reclaim his lands and to pay to the Government the amount that was required by the statute to be paid by him. All along the line we have been receiving letters and petitions and all sorts of requests, from people who have settled on the lands, to so modify the original statutes that they could pay for the claims which they have taken up under the National Government. Besides that, the original purpose of the reclamation project was abandoned later on and the door was opened to the use of the water that has been stored in that way, at millions of dollars of expense to the National Government, not by the settlers upon the public lands alone, but by the private owners of lands-naturally so, because it was evident that it was impossible to carry out the scheme successfully if the payments were confined to the men who had settled upon small tracts of land.

What is likely to be the result? Unless some legislation is passed to guard against it, it is going to turn over again into large holdings the property that is held under the reclamation projects and the interests and the large landowners are going to get the benefit of the enormous expenditures which have been made by the National Government in the beginning for the benefit of the small settler upon the land.

Mr. 8MITH of Arizona, Mr. President, will the Senator permit me there just a word?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The apprehension of the Senator may be well founded, but at least it runs counter to my experience and observation. I think ultimately it will be demonstrated that it is not only folly but worse for any man to attempt to hold in a properly irrigated country vast tracts of land, for we find where there is a sufficient supply of water and proper agricultural lands, especially in the heart of the desert. that the whole tendency is to break up the larger holdings. The lands will bring so much more in tracts of 40 and 80 acres than they will in tracts of four or five hundred acres, and every man with a large holding finds such an enormous amount of service necessary to cultivate properly that the tendency is, at least where I have seen it—and I am glad the Senator has called attention to the fact that it might possibly happen—to break them up into smaller tracts, because greater profit can be made by the man with the larger holdings by doing so.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Arizona is right with respect to the ultimate tendency to divide up these lands into smaller holdings; but the water is being supplied now to the larger holders, to the speculators owning these large tracts of land. Of course, they will divide them up into smaller tracts, and they are the men who are going to get the profits as the result of it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That may be, if the conditions happen to be such that the large holdings are lying within the possibility of reclamation. While that is to be deplored, yet, if it be an existing fact, whatever they get for it, if ultimately the man seeking a home can get it at all in those smaller holdings, it might in the end turn out to be a blessing rather than otherwise.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Arizona is right again; but I will ask the Senator whether he does not think some modification ought to be made of the present reclamation laws in order to enable the little fellows to pay out on their lands?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably; and that is my whole purpose.

Mr. WORKS. That is our only hope in the West. Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is, unquestionably.

Mr. WORKS. But so far as the benefits of the Reclamation Service are concerned. I do not want it to be understood that I am condemning the Reclamation Service at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, no; I understand the Senator. Mr. WORKS. I want to make it just as perfect and just as efficient as I can, but we shall have to enact further legislation if we are going to make it efficient and beneficial.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I understand the Senator's sympathy with it, and my suggestion was not in any sense a criticism.

Mr. WORKS. I am glad to have the Senator's suggestion. Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I knew the Senator from California was as much in favor of it as I was.

Mr. WORKS. Then we have a proposition to establish land banks, I believe they are called, in the bill that was introduced yesterday, for the purpose of enabling the farmer the better to borrow money. My observation is that with most people it is too easy to borrow money, and I think that is about as true of the farmer as it is of other people. Yet I am not at all out of sympathy with the effort that is being made to enable the farmer to secure what we call rural credits. I think it may be quite valuable to the farmer, and that will not involve the expenditure of very much money on the part of the National Government. I do not know how extensively it is proposed to have the Government go into the banking business, or how much the establishment and maintenance of the banks is going to burden the public generally, but it is another evidence of the kind of legislation that is going on.

Then, at the last session of Congress, we passed a law providing for the valuation of railroads. It is estimated that the mere valuation of the roads will cost the Government $10,000,000. It is supposed that great benefit will result to the people generally from this valuation. That may be so. I do not know whether it will or not. I am quite skeptical about it myself; but we are reaching out constantly with these appropriations. We are making them in all directions, ostensibly for the purpose of advancing the interests of the public, and there seems to be no stopping place.

Then, Mr. President, we have the matter of the distribution of seeds. I believe the proposition is at this session of Congress to appropriate $295,000 for carrying on this enterprise of seed distribution. The Senate has voted on two or three different occasions to abolish the system entirely. It ought to be abolished. I entirely agree with what was said the other day by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] in favor of abolishing the system of distributing seeds, and yet by some people evidently it is regarded as something of extreme value either to the people to whom the seeds are sent or to the Member of Congress who sends them; I do not know which.

Just think of it, Mr. President. Here we are spending of the public money nearly $300,000—yes; it will amount to a good deal more than $300,000 when we consider the expense of carrying the seeds in the mails—chiefly in order that the Agricultural Department may buy up from private individuals seeds not propagated or grown by the National Government, except in a very few instances; seeds that are actually bought in the market and distributed by all the machinery of Congress throughout the country. A self-respecting Congress ought to put an end to that sort of thing, and I hope that will be done.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BRISTOW. I have heard it stated, and I inquire if the Senator has ever looked up the matter to verify it, that frequently the purchase of these seeds is made in very large quantities, and that they consist of hulls from seed houses, and frequently they are of a very inferior kind?

Mr. WORKS. Perhaps the Senator has had some reports of the results of planting the seeds that he sends out to Kansas as to whether they are good or bad seeds.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know; that may be, but I have heard such statements made, and I inquire of the Senator whether he has ever had any information along that line?

Mr. WORKS. I will say to the Senator that I have heard statements of the same kind, but I have no personal knowledge on the subject.

Now, we are coming to another proposition that is being talked about all over the country. Public sentiment is being aroused in its favor, and we find it touched upon here gingerly every once in a while by a Member of this body. I refer to the question of railroad ownership. Unless there is some change in public sentiment, unless there is some change in the manner of dealing with railroads as we are dealing with them now we are going to come to Government ownership of railroads, and that before many years. If we continue to regulate the railroads as we have been regulating them in the past-too often, I am afraid, with too little appreciation of the rights of the railroad companies themselves—we are going to reach the point where the railroad companies will conspire together for the purpose of unloading their railroads upon the United States Government. If the people want the railroads, and the railroad owners and operators are in a condition where they are glad to be rid of them and think they may turn them over to the National Government and in a few years buy them back at a profit, you may expect the Government to own the railroads

Taking all of this legislation-and I have not covered anything like all of it; these are only instances-taking the kind of legislation that is running through Congress at the present time and has been for some time past, and the tendency of public sentiment, I want to say to the Senate that we are fast becoming a paternalized Government, and we are on the downward road, not only to paternalism, but ultimately to socialism. By these public beneficences we are educating a spineless ism. By these public beneficences we are educating a spineless citizenship, taking away from our people their initiative and enterprise and industry, and to a great extent making them mendicants and beggars of the National Government, to which they look to do for them what they should do for themselves.

Mr. President, I do not like it. I think I am as willing and as glad to do anything for the real benefit of the farmer as most men, but I think in the State of California we have farmers intelligent enough and enterprising enough to cultivate their farms, reap their crops, and carry them to the market without the paternalistic aid of their Government or of the experts that may be sent into California as the result of the passage of this bill. The independent and intelligent farmers of California can not afford to accept money of this kind from their

There is another tendency that I should like to touch upon while I am talking about this subject, and it is very largely of a piece with the enormous appropriations that are being made. and that is the constant tendency toward a bureaucratic goverument. We are establishing bureaus, commissions, and all sorts of things, and the Congress of the United States is gradually turning over to these bureaus the legislative power it possesses, and allowing them, by rules and regulations, to control the affairs of government that should be controlled only by act of Congress. Not only that, but these bureaus and commissions are adding millions of dollars to the expense of operating the Government.

I ask, Senators, where are we going to stop in that class of legislation? There seems to be no stopping place. At every session of Congress we find an apparent necessity for establishing one or more of these commissions or bureaus; and to-day you can not pass a bill through Congress or through the Senate of the United States until after you have referred it to a de-partment or a bureau and asked the head of that department or bureau whether or not the bill ought to be passed, and generally an adverse report from one of these kills the bill.

Of course, I understand that a committee of Congress is not actually bound by what the head of the department or anybody else may say with respect to it; but it does seem to me a little singular that a committee of Congress or a committee of the Senate is not able to proceed with legislation under the established rules of the Senate or the committee until it has received the report of the head of a department or a bureau or a commission or something of the sort, and that too often such report is treated as sufficient to control legislation.

Mr. President, this is a great country. We say sometimes that it has unlimited resources. We think there is no end to the supply, and that it can not be exhausted; but we are following in the footsteps of other Governments that have gone from extravagance to extravagance to their ultimate downfall. Unless we mend our ways, unless we retrace our steps, if we follow the tendency that now controls our acts to its legitimate conclusion, we are going to reap the whirlwind after a while.

I hope I am not a pessimist. I have great confidence in the stability of this Government; but there is no Government on earth, whatever may be its strength, that can withstand the continued inroads of the kind and extent of appropriations we are making and propose to make in the near future. Of course we assume always that we are going to stop somewhere along the line, but we have not stopped yet. Conditions in that respect have grown worse instead of better. The great Democratic Party, which is controlling the affairs of the country to-day, as evidenced by what we have had since it came into power, has not changed conditions for the better in that respect.

As I said in the beginning, I know very well that anything I have said or that I may say with respect to this bill will not change the result. I do not expect it to change the mind of a single Senator who has concluded to support the bill. Perhaps what I have said on the subject might as well have been left unsaid, so far as its effects are concerned; but I have felt this situation for a long time. I think it is a condition of things that Senators ought to think about, and think about seriously. I am not assuming to constitute myself a watchdog of the Treasury. I do not want to see this Government penurious in the conduct of its affairs; but I am sometimes alarmed at the extent to which we are going in the appropriation of millions and millions of dollars for what I think are, in many instances, ille-gitimate purposes, so far as the National Government is concerned.

I have said all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, without entering into a discussion of the merits of the question of Federal aid to State enterprises generally, and without saying that as a general proposition I am opposed to such aid, I can not help but think that whether we should accept it or not depends somewhat upon the cost of that aid.

To my mind there is a vital principle involved in this bill. has been discussed at some length by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. Works]; but there is one particular feature of the bill in which the principle may be applied, and to that I wish to call attention.

It may be entirely proper and justifiable for the Federal Government to appropriate money in order that the agricultural col-leges which it first aided by land grants may carry on certain work in harmony with the purposes for which those colleges were founded. The serious question here is as to how far the agricultural college, and through the agricultural college the State, should be dependent upon the General Government for aid other than such as is involved in the appropriation of money provided for in the bill.

The self-reliance, the self-sufficiency, the independence, and the pride of the people of a State, out of which so much good has come in the upbuilding of a Nation, are involved, and, I think, menaced by the cooperative features of this bill. these qualities by the people of a State means loss to the Nation; and that is what I mean by the suggestion that I am not opposed to Federal aid, provided it does not cost too much.

The essence of this bill is cooperation—cooperation between the Agricutural Department of the Government and the agricultural colleges of the State; cooperation imposed and enforced By plain implication, if not by express terms, this is the condition of the grant, the basis upon which the appropriations of the bill are made.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia was emphatic the other day in his assurance that the colleges would not be interfered with, that the work would be designed and carried on under their direction and control, and the plain inference from his statement was that the colleges would select and employ the men who are to do the work, but this can not be. If such be the situation, then "cooperation" is a misnomer. Throughout the text of the bill the work is in every instance spoken of as "cooperative agricultural extension work"; and in section 2 of the bill it is provided that the work "shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act." The bill itself is silent as to the very men who shall do the work; but in this regard we are not without evidence as to the construction put upon the bill by the Department of Agriculture itself.

In the hearings upon the House bill, known as the Lever bill, which is the same in substance as the pending bill, Dr. Galloway testified as follows. On page 5 of the hearings he is asked the

The men who go out to do this farm-demonstration work—will they continue to do that work under the appointment and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, as now?

And his answer is:

Yes; that is the plan. It is thought, however, that that work can be made more effective if it is coordinated fully with the work now being carried on in the States or the demonstration work to be inaugurated by the States.

And thus we see in the construction put upon the bill by the Assistant Secretary of the Department of Agriculture that it is the purpose to take men who are now engaged with the Agricultural Department and put them in the business of farm-demonstration work under this bill.

Mr. President, it might be fair to assume that men now or hereafter in the service of the Agricultural Department, being either real or so-called agricultural experts, are to work in conjunction with instructors, demonstrators, and other employees of the colleges in laying out and carrying on the work of agricultural extension. In view, however, of the readiness of the officials of the Agricultural Department to control and direct State activities and interests—yes; I will go further, and say in view of the natural ambition and tendency of men to dignify their own business and make it paramount—it is not unfair to assume that the officials admitted to cooperation by the terms of this bill would, directly where they can and indirectly where they can not, establish their policies and their methods, and thus come in time to dominate the entire field.

I think, Mr. President, this is borne out by what is said by the dean of the college of agriculture and director of the agricultural experiment station of the University of Illinois. quoted from him the other day to some extent when this bill was first considered for a short time. I wish to refer to another statement made by him. After saying that certain bureaus of this department have departed widely from their proper functions and not only invaded but spread over the natural fields of labor of the State experiment stations, Dean Davenport goes on to say:

If there is a local question in agriculture between the two oceans and from the Mexican to the Canadian border that the Department of Agriculture, through some of its thousands of local agents, has not attempted to cover, or, more properly speaking, that it has not dipped into, then it would be interesting indeed to hear it named.

In doing this the department has violated every distinction that ought to obtain as demarking the legitimate and proper fields of its effort, and it has done so with a constantly increasing aggressiveness. Through its numerous agents it has interested itself in purely local questions and activities to a degree which no other branch of the Fedral service has ever attempted, and it is now engaged in organizing a national system for placing an agent in every county for the giving of ordinary advice to individual farmers.

He asks this very pertinent question. I think:

He asks this very pertinent question, I think:

He asks this very pertinent question, I think:

How has the department been led into engaging in local activities?

In a perfectly natural manner. A number of years ago, when it was reaching in all possible directions in order to extend its activities, it undertook to function as a kind of graduate school by taking into its service some hundreds of young graduates just out of college, incidentally absorbing a good deal of the rejected material from the State institutions. These men ought to have been in some good graduate school or upon farms—anywhere but in the Federal service. Instead, they were given business cards reading "Agricultural expert" and sent over the country to engage as they could in the study of agricultural enestions.

The inexperienced men, supposed in those days to be doing research work, came as experts, but as a rule in search of ideas. They even inquired what they could do and how they could go about it. Here is where the first feeling arose.

Mr. President, the agricultural college might see its way clear gations may enable it to solve the problem, to remedy the evil, to change and improve every untoward condition; it may contend that its position in the field with its experiment station at hand enables it to know the soil conditions, weather conditions, and the plant life better than the men in Washington or the men whom they send out, but all this will be of little avail as against the ascendency and authority sure to be acquired by the Agricultural Department under the provisions of this bill.

The farmer who has been loyal to his State, and proud of her resources and institutions, who has had confidence in the zeal and capacity of her educators, who has sent his sons to the agricultural college that they might add to their practical knowledge what science has to offer, his daughters that they may be further trained in household economics, is now referred to a department of the General Government as the final authority; and all this, too, upon matters concerning the treatment of which and the teaching of which the States, with their colleges and experiment stations, have every element and facility, and that in abundance.

For what under this bill does the General Government propose to give aid? Two specific things, and those only—farm demonstration work and home economics. Can enything be imagined that is more benignly paternal than instruction of this kind given by the Federal Government? As though any State in the Union was not great enough, not resourceful enough, to accomplish these things unaided by the General Government. As though there was in the Union a single State so lacking in men, enterprise, and independence that, passing by these splendid facilities at home for self-help and self-development and ignoring, too, all the strength and vigor that comes from such a course, it becomes a humble suppliant for the General Government to send out an army of gentlemen from Washington to teach them all about how to plant, what to plant, and where to plant. I say an "army of gentlemen," for such they would be, as compared to the men who are "to the manner born," and who, with their fathers before them, have planted and tilled and garnered; to none of whom are crop rotation, care in the selection of seed, or the comparative value of stock food any secret

Who, indeed, Mr. President, will constitute the best-equipped corps of instructors for this farm demonstration work? Who else but the bright young fellows in the State who have been raised on the farm themselves, walked the furrows, bound the grain, and attended to the breeding and raising of stock, and who have added to a rich store of practical knowledge thus gleaned what the State agricultural college and experiment station has to give that is new and that is helpful? There, too, they have learned the art of communicating to others all needed information in regard to conditions and methods in farming operations. So we say, Mr. President, that here are all the facilities for growth from within the State, and there is absolutely no need for extrond within the state, and there is absolutely no need for external aid of this kind. Out of the farmer's own initiative, with the help he may obtain in his own State from his own college, his own county institute or farmers' club, will come every possible improvement in work, in methods, and conditions.

It should be so; and if this be our policy, rather than one which on every pretext looks for any form of aid from the General Government, it will be better for the farmer, the State, and the Nation in the end the Nation in the end.

Mr. President, that aid which forestalls and prevents self-initiative or self-help, and invites dependence of the people of the State upon the General Government in any enterprise, costs too much, and the Nation itself will in the end feel the enervating influence of such a policy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator a question, and I will ask him, if he has concluded his speech, before he takes his seat. Very well. Mr. STERLING.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does not the Senator think that the mere fact that it may be found that the General Government can be induced to provide the funds for all these things, commendable in themselves but doubtful as to present constitutional authority on the part of the Government, will in the end induce the States to surrender their functions and to get them into a condition where they will not do these things for themselves if they can get them done by the General Government?

Mr. STERLING. In answer to the Senator I will say that think the tendency is perhaps that way, or it would be in that direction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him to answer the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object, but I would be glad to to give the instruction, make the demonstration; its investi- have the views of the Senator from Georgia later on. I wanted the view of the Senator from South Dakota, if I might have it, on that point before he was prompted by the Senator from Georgia, if I might interpolate the remark.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the Senator from South Dakota has expressed his view. I was only going to call attention to a fact. It is that the National Government 50 years ago made the first appropriation toward the agricultural colleges. At that time the States were doing nothing in that Instead of taking from the States a feeling of their responsibility the States have more and more, following the lead of the National Government, increased their local appropriations to support their agricultural colleges, and now more than five times as much is spent by the States to support their agricultural colleges as the amount appropriated by the Na-

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when my attention was first called to this subject just a few days ago, I remembered that I had read some years ago an article on the relation of the States and the Federal Government, and while I did not have a very clear and distinct recollection of the contents of that article I thought it bore in a general way upon this subject, especially that particular feature of the pending bill which provides for cooperation in the work of instruction with the General Government. The author of this article propounds this

Which parts of the many-sided processes of the Nation's economic development shall be left to the regulation of the States; which parts shall be given over to the regulation of the Federal Government?

In answering the question the author, among other things, says:

It is not, at bottom, a question of sovereignty or of any other political abstraction; it is a question of vitality. Uniform regulation of the economic conditions of a vast territory and a various people like the United States would be mischievous, if not impossible. The statesmanship which really attempts it is premature and unwise.

The fundamental thought here expressed is opposed to the cooperative feature of this bill; that thought would leave the States to their own initiative or to that of the men connected with the agricultural colleges in the several States. They, knowing the conditions in regard to crops and soil and stock raising, should be left free to work out their problems for them-

Further on this author says:

Further on this author says:

We are too apt to think that our American political system is distinguished by its central structure, by its President and Congress and courts, which the Constitution of the Union set up. As a matter of fact, it is distinguished by its local structure, by the extreme vitality of its parts. It would be an impossibility without its division of powers. From the first it has been a Nation in the making. It has come to maturity by the stimulation of no central force or guidance, but by the abounding self-helping, self-sufficing energy of its parts, which severally brought themselves into existence and added themselves to the Union, pleasing, first of all, themselves in the framing of their laws and constitutions, not asking leave to exist, but existing first and asking leave afterwards—self-originated, self-constituted, self-confident, self-sustaining, veritable communities, demanding only recognition. Communities develop—not by external, but by internal forces. Else they do not live at all, Our Commonwealths have not come into existence by invitation, like plants in a tended garden; they have sprung up of themselves, irrepressible, a sturdy, spontaneous product of the nature of men nurtured pressible, a stardy, sportaneous prints of the pressible in a free air.

It is this spontaneity and variety, this independent and irrepressible it is communities, that has given our system its extraordinary elasticity, which has preserved it from the paralysis which has sooner or later fallen upon every people who have looked to their central government to patronize and nurture them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am curious to know just how far the Senator from South Dakota carries this reasoning. We are now talking about a school system. The common school is the best type, I suppose, of our efforts in that direction. Does the Senator from South Dakota think that each school district should be permitted to have just such school as it pleases, or no school at all, just such a course of instruction as it cares to adopt, just such teachers as it cares to employ, without any general standard of efficiency or competency? In other words, does he believe that neither the county nor the State should have anything to do with the education of the people in their common schools?

I am quite with the Senator from South Dakota with regard to the oversight of the General Government in the expenditure of this money, but I am very much surprised to hear him cite sentiments from a paper that would seem to lead to the conclusion that there should be no corelation between the individual community or the smallest organized society and the larger society known as the State, or the still larger one known as the United States.

Mr. STERLING. In answer to the Senator from Iowa, Mr. President, I do not mean to carry the idea that far or to that extreme, nor do I think this article carries the idea to any such extreme. But this article lays down a principle. It indicates a clear line of demarcation, I think, between what might be proper Federal activity and supervision and what should merely depend upon the initiative of the people of the State.

Who is the author of this article? you may be led to inquire. He is none other than the distinguished author of Congressional Government and The New Freedom. He is speaking here, however, as I take it, not of the new but the old freedom, the freedom upon which, under our system, everything else depends. I can not help but think that it is the foundation freedom, or, if I might change the figure a little, the fountain freedom, at which the Nation itself is renewed and invigorated.

Mr. President, just a word in conclusion. If there is to be cooperation-and I do not say but that there may be cooperation in some fields between the Agricultural Department and the agricultural colleges-let it stop short of a system of cooperation under which the Federal Government is to tell the farmers of a State how to farm or the young women in our rural communities how to cook. Let it be cooperation not imposed or enforced by law, but the cooperation which comes about by the purely voluntary action of the Agricultural Department and the agricultural colleges,

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. of the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if he is not now ready, and if not when he will be ready, to proceed with the consideration of the Glass case?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I had intended, and now give notice of my intention, to call up that case for disposition as a matter of the highest privilege on Monday next. I should call it up this afternoon but for the fact that I am obliged to leave the city this evening and will not return until Monday noon, Therefore, if agreeable to the Senator from Alabama, I shall call it up on Monday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are ready to proceed with it, but we are disposed, of course, to meet the views of the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the committee. If he prefers to call up the case on Monday, that will be satisfactory to us. Besides, do not care to break in now upon the consideration of the bill before the Senate. It being understood that the case is to be called up on Monday, that will be satisfactory to me. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I am not in error in saying that the amendment which I proposed last night is the pending question. If I am, I will be glad to be advised of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the record shows that the amendment was sent up, read, and ordered printed, but it was not offered as an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The record is wrong, then, because I distinctly offered it. But it makes no difference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be now considered as the amendment pending.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 4, line 12, strike out the words "rural population" and insert in lieu thereof the words "acres of improved land in farms," and in line 13 strike out the words "rural population" and insert the words "acres of improved land in farms," out the words "rural population" and insert the words "acres of improved land in farms," so as to read;

Such additional sums shall be used only for the purpose hereinbefore stated, and shall be allotted annually to each State by the Secretary of Agriculture and paid in the manner hereinbefore provided, in the proportion which the acres of improved land in farms of each State bears to the total acres of improved land in farms of all the States as determined by the next preceding Federal census.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he does not think there might be some difficulty under the amendment in determining what constitute improved lands?

Mr. CUMMINS. I was about to address myself to it, but answering directly the question of the Senator from Mississippi, I will say that improved lands are classified and designated in the census precisely as the rural population. It would be no more difficult to ascertain the acreage of improved lands than to ascertain the rural population.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator know what the Census Bureau included as improved lands? I ask for information

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not. I only know— Mr. WILLIAMS. They included pasturage, I suppose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only know that the Census Bureau has a class known as improved lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator know whether that included pasturage?

Mr. CUMMINS. Improved lands in farms and the acreage of such improved lands are given for each State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but does the Senator know whether in arriving at that result they included pasture lands and meadow lands?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state the reason why I ask the question. If they did not include those lands, it would be rather unjust to those parts of the country which are deeply interested in the pasturage of cattle.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know definitely.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I should think also that woodland, where such land was necessary to carry on the farm, should be included as a part of the improved lands.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think an answer possibly may be inferred from this fact: For instance, take the State of Mississippi. The total land area in Mississippi in 1910 was 29,671,680 acres. The total acreage in farms in Mississippi in 1910 was 18.557,533 acres, whereas the acreage of improved land in farms in that State in the same year was 9,008,310 acres. That comparison would rather lead one to believe that the land used for pasturage at least was not included within the term "improved farm land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is exactly what I was afraid of. In that event, of course, the cattle-raising and sheep-raising parts of the country would be discriminated against, if the Senator's amendment was adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair) Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Iowa is now going to begin the explanation of his amendment, it seems to me that we ought to have a quorum present. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we may have Senators present to listen to the explanation of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton] on official busi-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Root].

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Thornton] on account of sickness

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. Townsend] from the Chamber on account of official business.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has been called from the Chamber by important public matters.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Poindexter] is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in beginning the submission of my amendment candor requires me to say that while I am absolutely sure that the basis adopted by the committee wrong I am not so sure that the basis I suggest in my amendment is right. I desire to consider that with an open mind. It is the most accurate standard that I could find to reach what I regard as the equity of distribution, but it may very well be that in order to reach perfect justice we shall be compelled to compound several factors and to use a composite standard; but I intend, first, to address myself to the equity of the basis propounded by the committee now in the bill.

Mr. President, in discussing the question presented by the amendment which I have offered, I intend to assume that the people of every State are in like need of education and instruction. I am sure that the basis that has been adopted by the committee was not chosen because any part of this country was in greater need of instruction than any other part of the country. I believe that the standard which is applied in the bill was selected because it was believed that it would equitably distribute the appropriation among all the people in all the States. If I am wrong with regard to that, I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will at once advise me of my mistake, for everything that I am to say is bottomed upon the assumption that it is here attempted to divide the money equitably upon the theory that all the people are alike in need of the information which they will secure through this instrumentality.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In connection with the study of this problem and the distribution of this agricultural fund, there was also in contemplation an appropriation looking toward a contribution to industrial work, and in fixing this place as the place of separation it was thought that later on, when we made an appropriation for industrial work, it should be divided according to population, starting not with the rural but the urban population, as the census had classified it, and that we would distribute our industrial appropriation when it is completed according to the urban classification of the census and our agricultural distribution according to the rural separation, I do not believe anyone in charge of the preparation of the bill figured at all as to where the money would go. It was an effort to determine how it should best be divided, with a view also of this line of separation of the two classes of appropria-

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, my suggestion, however, had, I think, no relation to a future appropriation for vocational education. I am right, therefore, in saying that this aid about to be given by the General Government to the people of the several States, to promote agriculture, principally, is to be given upon the presumption that the farmers of one part of the country need instruction just as much as do the farmers in any other part of the country, and that the land in one part of the country can be improved and its products can be increased just as much as in any other part of the country.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield. Mr. VARDAMAN. The purpose of this bill, as I understand it, Mr. President, is for the agencies operating under its provisions to impart information to the individual tiller of the soil in order that he may so intelligently cultivate the land as to develop its hidden resources. It seems to me that the effect of the Senator's amendment would be to make it a matter of fertilizing acres rather than enhancing the mentality of the man.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will withhold criticism upon my amendment until I have explained it. Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to hear the Senator on that point, because the Senator always speaks entertainingly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am about to proceed, and I want a definition upon which we can all agree, to begin with, so that we shall not diverge save upon the argument; that we shall not differ upon the meaning of the terms or the purposes of the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, I shall wait until the Senator finishes his remarks. I always listen with interest to the Senator from Iowa. His fund of information is always illuminating to any subject he may discuss.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with what has just been said by the junior Senator from Mississippi. While the knowledge of the tiller of the soil is essential to the product of the soil, the foundation for aid of this character is that we may increase the productivity of the soil, and through its increased ability to raise things that the people of the country eat and wear, that we may be better served in that re-

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator understands that that can only be done through and by the work and the knowledge of the man who tills the soil, does he not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly. It is not within my view that any supernatural means are to be employed in order to increase either the fertility or the product of the soil. The basis adopted in this bill is rural population; that is, each State is to receive that proportion of the entire appropriation, save the original sum of $480,000, which is to be divided equally among the States, that its rural population bears to the entire rural population of the United States. The term "rural population" as applied by the Census Bureau means the population in the country and in cities and towns of 2,500 and less. This would seem to be a fair basis. One receives at once a favorable impression from the language of the basis, namely, "rural population," inasmuch as it is a rural people whom we are attempting to benefit, but whether it be fair or not can only be tested its application to the conditions as they exist.

First, I intend to take as illustrations the States of Georgia I take them largely because the Senator in charge of the bill represents in part the State of Georgia and because the Senator who has proposed this amendment represents in part the State of Iowa.

There is, however, another reason for presenting these two States as illustrations of the application of the bill. There are striking similarities between them. I mean between them physically; I am not claiming that the State of Iowa is represented in the Senate of the United States with that distinguished ability which I am glad to yield to the Senators from Georgia. I do not want to be regarded as vain or egotistical, and I hope no such application of my suggestion will be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Iowa that we enter no claim of competition in that regard with the State of Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. But there are some very interesting similarities. For instance, Georgia has a population of 2,600,000-I am using now round numbers for brevity's sake-Iowa has a population of 2,200,000. There is no great difference in that regard. The total land area in Georgia is 37,584,000 acres; the total land area in Iown is 35.575,000 acres, so that the two States not only have practically the same population, but they have practically the same area, Georgia being slightly larger than Iowa. Georgia has land in farms amounting to 26,953,000 acres; Iowa has land in farms amounting to 33,930,000 acres. In that respect my State is a little larger; that is, it has more land in farms than has the State of Georgia, but not markedly so.

I now come, however, to a comparison which shows a striking dissimilarity. Georgia has improved land in farms amounting in the aggregate to 12,298,000 acres; Iowa has improved land in farms amounting to 29,491,000 acres; in other words, there are in my State almost two and a half times as many acres in improved farms as there are in the State of Georgia.

Again, in 1910 the value of the agricultural product of the State of Georgia was $344,006,114. In the same year the value of the agricultural product in the State of Iowa was $789,-

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment until I finish the sentencein other words, Iowa produced in 1910 more than twice as much in agricultural products as did the State of Georgia. Now, I yield to the Senator from Mississippl.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it is not relevant to this discussion at this point, but I want to ask the Senator, as a matter of information for myself, what per cent of the land in the State of Iowa not in cultivation does he estimate is susceptible of agricultural development or cultivation?

Mr. CUMMINS. The percentage is very small. I think I can give the Senator from Mississippi the exact facts in regard to it. As I have said, the total acreage of Iowa is 35,575,000 acres. There are already in farms in that State 33,930,000 acres, substantially the whole of it, and there are actually under cultivation—that is what the term "improved lands" means, I suppose, although I have no positive information from the Census Bureau upon that point—but the lands in cultivation in Iowa aggregate in acres 29,491,199 out of a total of 35,575,000 acres.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have given some thought to the question, and my impression was that a larger per cent of the acreage in the State of Iowa was susceptible of cultivation than the I thought he probably had the figures; and Senator has stated. I thought he proif he had, I should like to hear them,

Mr. CUMMINS. I have other statistics, but they are not at hand. I know it is true that the land in my State susceptible of cultivation is 15 per cent greater than in any other State in the Union, and, as I remember the statistics, something like 94 per cent of the lands in Iowa are capable, not of agricultural use alone, but capable of cultivation as farm lands. But I will proceed now with this comparison.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BACON. I want to say one word. Mr. President, as to the statements made by the Senator from Iowa as to the comparative production of the States of Iowa and Georgia. In the first place, the year which the Senator has selected was one in which there was a very short cotton crop in Georgia.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not selected it; I simply took the Census Bureau report.

Mr. BACON. I am not accusing the Senator— Mr. CUMMINS. It is the only information that I could get, because it is found nowhere else.

Mr. BACON. I am not accusing the Senator of any impropriety; I am simply stating the fact for the purpose of stating something else. Did the Senator refer to 1910 or 1911?

Mr. CUMMINS. These statistics have been given to me from the Census Bureau as being the statistics of 1910.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Now, I want to state, Mr. President, that in 1911, I think it was, the cotton crop of Georgia alone brought over $200,000,000 in gold, three-fourths of which, or two-thirds of which, was equivalent to gold brought from foreign countries here for that product. I have no idea that the statistics show anything like the agricultural production of Georgia, for this reason: In Iowa practically all the crops are food crops, and all the corn is estimated, as are all the potatoes and everything else that is raised. The fact is that so far as agricultural products are concerned Georgia has but one commercial crop, and that is cotton. That is practically the only agricultural crop our people think about. No man raises corn in Georgia for export or for sale outside the State. nor does he raise oats or wheat or potatoes or anything of that kind; and when you go to a farmer there and inquire what he is raising, he tells you what his cotton crop brought. He has never even measured what he got in the way of corn, potatoes, oats, and things of that kind, because they are consumed on his farm, and he thinks nothing about them.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Georgia must know that the census enumerators or agents accumulated the value of all these things, whether they were used on the farm or whether they were sold in the market, and I presume they used exactly the same system in the State of Georgia that they used in the State of Iowa.

Mr. BACON. The great misfortune we have all fallen into in the Senate is that when something is stated a Senator does not even wait to hear the complete statement before he gives the answer.

I am not charging or suggesting that the census was not honestly taken; I am simply speaking of the habit of our people on account of which there is not such accurate statement of the production of food crops in our State as there is in Iowa, where that is the sole crop.

The food crop with us is not a commercial crop. People do not talk about how many potatoes they make or how much wheat they make or how much corn they make. They do not even know. A man may guess at that and speak of it as an unimportant thing, and never take the pains to make any accurate return upon it. For that reason I have no doubt that in many instances he has not given any return of it at all whereas in Iowa, all those being commercial crops, every bushel of corn a man makes, and every bushel of wheat, and every peck of potatoes, and all the chickens and eggs he raises, and everything else, are estimated and put into the list.

I have not a shadow of doubt in my own mind that if an estimate were made of all the corn and wheat and rye and oats and even potatoes and chickens and eggs, and hundreds of other things that are produced and used by our people in great abundance, and in great waste, the amount would equal that stated by the Senator as being the report of the census as to the record in Iowa.

Mr. President, with us there is nobody who knows much about what food crops are made in the State. We never think about them. All we want to know is whether or not we made all we needed to use. As I say, the people not only use them lavishly, but they use them wastefully. What a man thinks about as a crop is the cotton crop. It is a very important crop for this country, too. If it had not been for the cotton crop, years in and years out, the balance of trade would have been against us in this country, because whereas the corn crop of Iowa is a crop which is made and almost exclusively consumed in this country, the cotton crop, which supplies the world with clothing, is that which brings to this country two-thirds of its value in gold from other countries; or, if not brought in actual gold, it represents in exchange gold which otherwise would go out of the country; so it is the same thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not think I am endeavoring to belittle or disparage the State of Georgia, because if we enter another field of production Georgia far outranks my own State, as shown by the census reports. I am dealing solely with her agriculture, as shown by the census

Mr. BACON. I did not misunderstand the honorable Senator, and I was simply making my suggestion in view of the application which I supposed the Senator desired to make of these figures. I presume the application which the Senator desires to make of them is to show that, estimating the rural populations of the two States, and considering the amount of agricultural products, there would be great injustice in giving to the rural population of Georgia the same proportion of this benefaction or assistance that it is proposed to give to Iowa. I am not incorrect in that, am I?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is quite correct about that. Mr. BACON. I am entirely legitimate in that, and not in any manner imputing any improper motive to the Senator from

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Iowa give once more the figures as to the production of the two States? I was interrupted when he gave them. What was the production in 1910 in Georgia and in Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not prepare this statement myself. assume, however, that it is correct. The agricultural production of Georgia in 1910, as computed by those who furnished me this table, was $344,006,114. That of Iowa for the same year was $789,642,784.

One more comparison-

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator leaves that branch of his statement-I understand the Senator is comparing the improved lands of his own State with those of Georgia-has the Senator any data he could give to the Senate showing the average size of farms in Iowa and the average size of farms in Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have, and I shall be very glad to furnish that information to the Senate before I have finished. I will furnish it now, so that I may not overlook it.

In 1910 the average acreage of improved land in each farm in Georgia was 42.3 acres. In Iowa it was 135.9 acres. average value, as given by the census, of the 42.3 acres of improved land in each farm in Georgia was $616, or something like $15 per acre. The average value of the 135.9 acres in each farm in Iowa was $12,910, or substantially $100 per acre.

I may say here that I intend to make the same comparisons between various other States. I am making them now as between Iowa and Georgia only for the reason that I thought it was eminently proper, inasmuch as the Senator from Georgia is in charge of the bill, that we should look at these States first.

According to the present plan of distribution, Georgia receives 4.19 per cent of the whole. I need not reduce that to an aggregate amount, for it is simply a matter of multiplication. Iowa receives 3.13 per cent of the appropriation. Georgia receives each year from this appropriation 1.06 per cent more than Iowa receives. Assuming that the appropriation is $5,000,000 per year, that means that Georgia receives each year about $53,000 more of this fund than does Iowa.

I can not believe that a basis which reaches a result of this character is sound or wise or equitable. The great purpose of this bill is to increase the productiveness of the soil. I assume it is to enable the people of this country to obtain what they must eat, and what they must wear, too, under the most favorable conditions; that is to say, to make the soil of this country serve not only the present, but the future, with all the efficiency that the wit and the learning of mankind can provide.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield. Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me that if we follow the argument of the Senator to its logical conclusion the people of Georgia need just that much more education; that since this bill is intended to increase their productive capacity they should have the instruction which the bill is designed to give, in order that the lands of Georgia may be brought up to a level with those of Iowa. This strikes me as the logic of the Senator's argument

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi has now stated the very matter with which I began my argument. I could not assume that the farmers of Georgia needed instruction any more than the farmers of Iowa. I do not believe they do need instruction any more than the farmers of any other State. There are other reasons which account for the disparity between the value of the agricultural production in Iowa and that in Georgia.

In the very first instance I asked the Senator from Georgia whether those who composed this bill did so upon the theory that there was any part of this country that needed instruction more than any other part. If we are endeavoring to distribute the bounty of the Government according to the degree of ignorance that may prevail we must, of course, adopt some other standard. I repudiate that, however, and I am sure every Senator from every State will repudiate it with equal emphasis.

I believe this aid was intended to be distributed without taking into account the differences that may exist with regard to the stage at which the science of agriculture may have arrived in the different States of the Union. To attempt to distribute it as suggested by the junior Senator from Mississippi would be most disagreeable, I am sure. It would be most humiliating. I do not think that sentiment ever entered the minds of the members of the committee who presented the bill to the Senate for our consideration, and I am unwilling to admit it to the discussion in the Senate.

To repeat what I have said, I can not think that a distribution can be defended which gives to the State of Georgia, practically the same in area as my own, considering its agricultural production and considering the importance it has in the commerce of agriculture, one-third more than is given to the State of Iowa, which stands at the very head of the procession of Commonwealths, viewed from the agricultural standpoint. think it would simply introduce a seed of discord and sow a crop of discontent that would ultimately result in the overthrow of the system we are endeavoring to enlarge, if not to establish.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. SIMMONS. Following up my question of a little while ago, have a view of this matter with reference to which I should be glad to hear from the Senator from Iowa.

As I understand the Senator, the size of the average farm in his State is 135 acres, and in Georgia it is 42 acres?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the average acreage of the improved land in a farm in Iowa.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes: the improved farm land. So that one farmer in Iowa owns 135 acres, while it takes three farmers in Georgia to own that amount?

Mr. CUMMINS. A little more than three farmers.
Mr. SIMMONS. The object of this appropriation is to take information and instruction to the individual farmer. That is its fundamental purpose. Under the plan of distribution proposed by the Senator from Iowa, the one farmer in his State who owns 135 acres would get just as much of this money for his instruction as the three farmers in Georgia who own 135 acres would get. Does the Senator think that would be a fair

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has a conception of the administration of this law that is totally different from the one I entertain. I do not believe we are organizing a system here that is intended to send a demonstrator into every home. That would be utterly impossible. If we intend to do that, we must appropriate billions rather than millions.

I do not know whether the Senator from Georgia will verify what I am about to say or not, but I hope he will. He has seen a good deal of the farm demonstration work, and so have I. I have helped to carry it on, as the governor of a State, just as he has helped to carry it on. The demonstrator does not go to a little patch of ground owned by some thriftless man and endeavor to reform the habits of that thriftless man. demonstrator-at least in my part of the country-goes to the most intelligent, the most capable farmer in the vicinity in which he is to establish his demonstration. He goes to the farm upon which he can receive, and upon which he is sure to receive, the greatest assistance in the work he is to carry on; and there he establishes his local experiment station, and he calls in the people from the country roundabout. He asks all the farmers to come in and see the manner in which the work should be done, what crops should be planted upon particular should be done, what crops should be planted upon particular soil, how they should be planted, how they should be tilled, and finally how they should be harvested. In that way he is able to disseminate among a great number of people the information he has and the science he is teaching.

Why, if we were to attempt to go to every little farm and teach the farmer how he could best farm that little tract of land, we would not be able to accomplish any practical thing in a century. We are simply making little colleges of the farms upon which these demonstrations are taking place; and they are not only for the benefit of the farmer who happens to own the land, but for the benefit of the whole community.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator from Iowa had better read this bill again. Whatever construction may be placed upon the bill in practice, in its terms it is not at all what the Senator seems to conceive it to be, or else I am entirely mistaken about According to the Senator, it is not the intention to do just what the bill says shall be done, to go on the farm and educate the farmer there. It seems from what the Senator says that it is his idea to go upon the farm of a man who is already educated and undertake through his farm to educate somebody else on the outside, whoever may be induced to come in and take the education.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from California is usually very fair, but in this instance I think his zeal has led him to a somewhat exaggerated statement. I did not say that the demonstrator was to choose a farmer who already had been educated in the science of agriculture and therefore needed no I said that when the demonstrator went into a community he would go to the farm upon which he could do his work to the best advantage and under the most favorable conditions, and he would call to that farm all the farmers of the vicinity in order that they might share in the benefits of the work he was doing.

Why, Mr. President, if we were to attempt within the next quarter of a century to send a demonstrator to every farm in this country and have him educate individually that particular farmer, we would far outrun France in the proportion of her citizens who are in the public service. We would have to gather in practically half the people of the country in order to carry on this work. Ten times the amount of money we propose to appropriate here would not reach one-half the State of Georgia alone if it were to be a farm demonstration confined to one farmer at a time.
Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

Mr. CUMMINS. Before I yield again to the Senator from California, I must answer his first suggestion. He says I have not carefully read this bill. He is in error about that. I agree that I may misunderstand the bill, but I have somewhat carefully read it. I read now:

That cooperative agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics

to persons not attending or resident in said colleges in the several communities, and imparting to such persons—

Whom? Persons not attending or resident in said collegesinformation on said subjects-through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise.

Plainly, the field demonstration on the farm of a particular man is intended not alone for the man who owns that soil, but for all who can be reached in that community. To me it is very plain. If I am wrong about that interpretation, I hope the Senator from Georgia, who has given the matter vastly more study than I, will correct me. Can I be mistaken in regard to that construction?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator has stated the work substantially correctly. I think it might go even further. It extends to work in the home also, in the line of domestic science; but it certainly is not expected that the instruction shall be given exclusively to the person upon whose land or in whose house the instruction is given.

Mr. WORKS. I certainly did not intend to be unfair to the Senator from Iowa, nor to the bill itself. I do not agree with the view of the Senator with respect to the proper construction to be placed upon the bill, if its provisions shall be carried out literally, but in connection with the real efficacy and benefit to be conferred by this bill I venture the assertion that the vast majority of the farmers in the State of Iowa know more to-day about scientific agriculture than the theoretical experts who will be educated by the Government and sent out under this bill to educate them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is not my view that the United States Government is to send out any experts, and I intend to do the best I can to see that there is no authority here given to the Secretary of Agriculture to send out experts. I look upon this as an extension of the work of the agricultural college, and I expect that it will select the men who are to make these demonstrations in the State to which the college

I shall be very sorry if the enactment of this bill results in the employment of a great army of investigators and demonstrators having their headquarters in the Department of Agriculture. I believe it is a work that the States can do, so far as concerns the selection of the teachers and instructors, better than the General Government can do it. From my point of view, all we ought to do is to encourage it by giving the agricultural colleges more money than the States at this time seem to be willing to give them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

I yield to the Senator from North Dakota. Mr. McCUMBER. In the matter of the distribution of the funds, I wish to see if I have the position of the Senator correctly. It is first that the demonstration in Iowa, as in Georgia, must be made upon a specific number of acres of land at a particular point. Now, if on the land of the larger farm, say, 40 men could have visual demonstration in the State of Iowa and obtain their information that way, and on account of smaller farms 160 men in the State of Georgia could get the same visual instruction, there would be no reason for appropriating a greater sum to give the instruction to the 160 men in Georgia than to the 40 men in Iowa, who in reality are covering the same acreage and obtaining the same benefit and giving the country more benefit by reason of the added numbers.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a very good suggestion, Mr. Presi-Of course the conclusion stated by the Senator from North Dakota would follow. Here is a little school established, and everyone who can get there is invited to attend and hear the course of instruction and take away all the benefits that can be derived from that course of instruction. It does not make a bit of difference how much land the man owns upon whose farm the demonstration may be made. It is simply a question of gathering together in a particular community the greatest number of people who are willing to take the instruction and be benefited by it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if he will now suspend his remarks and resume to-morrow, in order that we may have an executive session. I understand from the Senator that he will require considerable more time, and it might suit his convenience to suspend now

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope I will not consume much time; but the Senator from Georgia knows how we proceed here. No one can determine in advance how much time he will take, and I fear that I would not be able to finish to-night.

Mr. BACON. It was with that view that I asked the Senator if he would yield. I understand the Senator in charge of the bill to be willing now to lay it aside. In that case the Senator can resume to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield, Mr. President.
The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I submit a resignation from a committee, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

I hereby resign as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee. JAMES A. O'GORMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That the Hon. Blank Lee, junior Senator from Maryland, be appointed as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency to fill the vacancy on said committee occasioned by the resignation of Senator O'Gorman, of New York.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 31, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 30, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hearest and answerest prayer, hear and answer our petition. Grant that all the questions which confront us, national and international, may be wisely, justly, and amicably adjusted, that peace and prosperity may flow on uninterrupted. To this end bless our President and all others in authority and guide them by Thy holy influence. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Ferris, to preside to-morrow as Speaker pro

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-CARNEY AGAINST SMITH.

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contestedelection case of Claude S. Carney against John M. C. Smith, in the third congressional district of the State of Michigan, and give notice that I shall call it up for consideration one day next week. (H. Res. 396, H. Rept. 202.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1, in the case of Carney against Smith, giving notice that he will call it up one day next week.

Mr. Speaker, why not dispose of it now?

The SPEAKER. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. POST. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Why not dispose of it now?
Mr. POST. I think we better wait until the report is printed. The SPEAKER. The report will be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLACKMON indefinitely, on account of sickness.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith a privileged report from the Committee on Rules which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 378 (H. Rept. 205).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 6060, with the amendments reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that there shall be seven hours' general debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the measure. At the expiration of said seven hours' general debate the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall perfect and report the measure to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments, including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to final passage without intervening motions, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it was understood last night that this matter would be withheld until after the consideration of the Private Calendar, which has the right of way to-day.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman by saying that this is the regular day for the Committee on Claims, but as long as that committee had only six bills, and by their next meeting day expected to have quite a number to engage the attention of the House, that committee did not press its claim for recognition to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. And in connection with that, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to what happened last night, I wish to say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett], in presenting the report from the Committee on Rules yesterday afternoon, inadvertently presented a resolution which the committee had not agreed to report; and in the exercise of great caution, so that the record of the House may not show what neither the gentleman from Tennessee nor I desire it to show, I ask unanimous consent that the report presented by the gentleman from Tennessee be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the report presented yesterday afternoon by the gentleman from Tennessee be voided. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is aware of the fact that we have had this resolution before the committee, first and last, in three different forms. The matter came up hurriedly yesterday afternoon and the print, which was sent to the Clerk's desk by myself to be read, was in fact not the print which the committee had agreed upon, although that fact was overlooked. There was a slight amendment to it which should have been inserted. I do not know that there is any necessity for voiding it. I think the proper proceeding would be that I should ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution which I presented yesterday afternoon, and I therefore do ask unanimous consent to withdraw that resolu-

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the same thing. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution which he offered yesterday afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk reported the resolution which has just been read as House resolution 378. Is that correct?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; this is House resolution 378, which the Committee on Rules has reported with an amendment, the amendment simply providing that the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. I have in my hand a resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. HARDWICK. This is House resolution 378. Speaker, is there any necessity for any debate on this rule?

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Under the terms of this resolution is it expected to set aside next Monday, unanimous-consent day, if the matter should go over that far? Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the gentleman frankly on that matter. I believe that when the House acts under special order the general rules of the House fixing special days, and so forth, are set aside, except in the one case of Calendar Wednesday. Of course that point, as far as I know, has not been ruled upon by the present occupant of the chair, and it would be a matter of construction by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. MANN. I think the form of the resolution which the gentleman from Alabama introduced, House resolution 386, which is different, provided for consideration from day to day.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. Mr. MANN. That undoubtedly-

Mr. HANN. That undoubtedly, without any question being raised, by any possibility.

Mr. MANN. I take it that unless the previous question was ordered it would let it go over without the previous question being ordered.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.
Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further? I notice the resolution provides that when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports back to the House the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments, including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That, I suppose, is taken from some old form which somebody introduced heretofore

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is no other amendment, I take it, in the House except those reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If that language is left in the resolution, it might imply the previous question was ordered on any other amendments which were offered. Would it not be better to strike it out and have it clearly that the previous question is ordered on all pending amendments which are reported back from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. HARDWICK. I realize the justice of the gentleman's criticism, although I do not think it is important. I believe the construction would be that the House would vote only on the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and therefore pending in the House. The gentleman is correct, in that we have followed an old form in preparing this rule. If the gentleman desires to present a request for unanimous consent to strike out that language in the resolution, to wit, "including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union," personally I should not object. I think to do so would really improve the phraseology of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Well, I make that request, Mr. Speaker—to strike out of the resolution the language "including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection; I think it is really an improvement.

Mr. MANN. That leaves it without doubt. Those amendments are the only ones to be voted upon.

Mr. HARDWICK. I agree with the gentleman on that. I think it has the effect, anyhow, but I believe it is an improve-

Mr. MANN. I think likely it would have that effect, but it gives an opportunity for controversy, which might lead to

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will submit the request, will have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Illinois a request to submit?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out of the resolution these words, in the latter part of the reso lution, "including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union," so there will be no question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to adopt an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "including those adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The agreement to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will not preclude, will it, a vote in the House on any separate amend-

Mr. MANN. Not on any amendments that are not agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. You have a perfect right to have a separate vote on any amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I see no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recog-

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman can get this through by unanimous consent, I do not want to lose the floor for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not lose the floor. He is in control of this resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE. To reserve the right to object in order to ask question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MOORE. We could not hear all of the conversation that took place between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick]. Some of us on this side of the House are interested in this bill. As I understand the request now, it is proposed to protect the right of amendment when the bill is read under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the rule provides that when the bill is reported back from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments to final passage. The proposition is to leave it in that shape.

Mr. MOORE. That means after the bill has been read and opportunity to amend under the five-minute rule has been afforded to every Member of the House?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Mr. MOORE. Very well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MOORE. Will acquiescence in this request for unanimous consent deprive us from discussing the rule any further? The rule has been changed since last night.

The SPEAKER. Oh, the Chair thinks not.
Mr. MOORE. Very well.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARD-WICK] is recognized.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, how much time do the gentlemen on the other side wish for the discussion of this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick], I will say that the report on this rule is a harmonious one from the Committee on Rules, and I have no requests on this side of the House for a discussion or a criticism of the rule; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania informs me that he has had no requests.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have had no requests on this side. Mr. CAMPBELL. And I am not disposed to take any time in the discussion of the rule at this time.

Mr. GARDNER. I would like two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts will take a little time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say this to the gentleman: Suppose I demand the previous question on the passage of the resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That will leave all the time demanded on this side.

Mr. HARDWICK. I then demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The understanding of the Chair is that debate has not yet been commenced?

The SPEAKER. Yes. This is parliamentary talk, and the Chair does not think it is general debate. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] moves the previous question.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Georgia to yield to me now?

Mr. HARDWICK. I withhold just a moment for a state-

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In reporting the resolution that has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] he undertook to say that he thought there was no opposition to the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. With pleasure.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did make that statement, and in justice to the gentleman from New York I wish to Mr. GARDNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. If this is debate, it will destroy the 40 minutes?

The SPEAKER. Of course it will.

Mr. HARDWICK. I withhold the motion temporarily, retaining the floor so that the gentleman may make a statement.

Mr. GARDNER. You can get it in the 40 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement without destroying the parliamentary situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAR-RETT] asks unanimous consent to make a statement without destroying the parliamentary situation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In presenting the resolution yesterday afternoon I did state that I did not think there was any opposition in the Committee on Rules to the adoption of this resolution.

this resolution.

It was inexcusable in me, Mr. Speaker, to make that statement. That is to say, my memory was at fault. I ought to have known, as I did know if I had thought, that if there ever was a persistent, well-drawn-out, vigorous opposition to any-thing on earth it was the opposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfordle] to the adoption of this rule. [Applause.]
I regret exceedingly that my memory lapsed for a moment and that I thus placed the gentleman from New York in an erroneous attitude in regard to that. [Applause.]
Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] demands the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the aves have it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-FIGURE SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfoold] demands a division. Those in favor of the previous question will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and one gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-one gentlemen have arisen in the negative.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 101 and the noes

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. Levy] will not do that.

Mr. LEVY. Yes; I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the previous question will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 102, answered "present" 7, not voting 86, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The previous ques tion is ordered. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] for

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is opposed to this rule?

The SPEAKER. He stated that he was not.

Mr. SABATH. I am opposed to the rule. Am I not entitled to the 20 minutes on the other side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that simply because a man is opposed to the rule, whether he is a member of the Committee on Rules or not, that would entitle him to control the time against the rule.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] whether he will yield to me a part of his time, or else that part of the time in opposition to the gentleman from Georgia be accorded to me as a matter of right. I am one of the Committee on Rules, and I think that being opposed to the rule I am entitled to control a part of the

Mr. HARDWICK. I think we can settle that. I am perfectly willing to yield half my time to the gentlemen on this side who oppose the adoption of the resolution, and I understood that the gentleman from Kansas, having control of the time on that side, would adopt an equally liberal policy. In fact, the gentle-man from Kansas had agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath]. So I think the time will be fairly divided. Of course, if gentlemen want to insist on their rights as members of the committee, then the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], who is opposed to the rule, is entitled to control the time in opposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the proper conduct of a matter like this is that if anybody on the Committee on Rules is opposed to the resolution, and there is only one on the Committee on Rules who is opposed to it, he ought to be recognized to control the time in opposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would not have the Chair make a ruling here that would establish any other precedent. I think that is the correct procedure in the House. If the gentleman from New York insists upon controlling half of the time, I shall not claim to control the usual time allowed to the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was of the impression from the statement of the gentleman from Kansas that it was a unanimous report, and his mind was attracted to something else at the time when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I did make the statement that it was the unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, but I made it inadvertently, for I knew that the gentleman from New York was opposed to any rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will settle the matter by recognizing the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to control 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-FOGLE], a member of the Committee on Rules and opposed to the rule, to control 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, what will become of the requests on this side for time that have been made of the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. They will have to make their requests of the men that control the time; the Chair can not control it. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized for 20 minutes in favor of the rule and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] for 20 minutes in opposition to the rule, and the time is running. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in support of this rule that no one can complain that it is unfair. The rule simply provides that there shall be seven hours for general debate on this bill and then that the bill shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the five-minute rule, without limitation either as to the length of debate or the number of amendments that may be offered and considered. I make the statement here and now, without fear of successful contradiction, that no immigration bill and few bills of any character have ever been presented to this House of Representatives under more liberal terms. The rights of the minority under this proposition are safely protected by an opportunity for full and liberal discussion and for amend-

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if this rule be adopted by the House of Representatives, the majority on this floor will work its will about this bill and every amendment that is suggested to it, without artificial restraint. We ask you what can be fairer? We ask you what can be more just to men on all sides, of all views, of both sides of this Chamber than this rule? Certainly the minority in any legislative body can have no cause of complaint if they are given as liberal opportunity for discussion and for amendment as they are given full and free opportunity to debate and suggest amendments here. That is provided in this rule.

As to the bill itself, I shall say little. It presents an issue that we are all familiar with. It presents an issue that we have voted on many times in this body. It is substantially and practically, with very little change, the Burnett bill that we passed during the last days of the last session of the preceding Con-Our record is made up on it. The older Members in this House have voted on this measure, our views are known of all men, and so it seems to me that there is little reason for discussion at the present moment of the merits of the bill. We are going to have the most liberal discussion of the bill itself after the rule is adopted.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. This rule proposes to allow seven hours of general debate?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman indicate how long the debate is to run; that is, how many days?

Mr. HARDWICK. That would depend upon how long the House will sit in session.

Mr. MOORE. If we should sit until 8 o'clock to-night, that would be seven hours, and then it would probably take all day to-morrow to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARDWICK. After we finish the general debate we still have consideration under the five-minute rule. It is a bill that is quite lengthy, containing 57 pages. Although it is largely a codification of existing law, still it is to be considered in the form in which it is presented. My own judgment is-and, of course, it is a mere guess-that we can not get through the consideration in Committee of the Whole in less than two days.

Mr. MOORE. Can we have an understanding that there will be no vote on it to-morrow?

Mr. HARDWICK. It would be impossible for me to make any such agreement. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Burnett, is in charge of the bill, and he will perhaps be able to answer the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Let me ask the gentleman, Is it proposed under this rule to give consideration to the bill on Monday next? Mr. HARDWICK. My own judgment is that it would be entitled to be considered on Monday.

Mr. MOORE. Even if it does cut out the Unanimous Consent

Calendar?

Mr. HARDWICK. If we were operating under general rules it would be different, but when the House is operating under a special rule, even though it does not provide for a continuing consideration, it is my judgment that the general rules are dispensed with until the special order is exhausted.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know whether that coincides with the judgment and opinion of other gentlemen, especially the Speaker of the House?

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman from Massachusetts will have to ask the Speaker as to that point.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. It happens that the gentle-man from Massachusetts has done so. If the immigration bill is not concluded by Wednesday, will it have precedence on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. HARDWICK. It can not, under an express provision in the rules. That is the only exception, I think, which can be made to the statement that I have just made.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes.
Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the centleman from Control and

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia did not quite answer my question. I was trying to get an understanding with him.

Mr. HARDWICK. But I can not give you the understanding that you are asking. The gentleman is interrogating the wrong man. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] in charge of this bill will have to make whatever agreement is made upon that subject, and as he is going to speak later on the subject of the rule, I will ask the gentleman to press his inquiry of that gentleman at that time.

Mr. MOORE. Very well. Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 15 minutes. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I admit that the rule brought in by the Rules Committee is a fair rule, and if the bill were as fair as the rule I would not object to it. However, I do object to the Rules Committee bringing in a special rule on this bill when, in fact, there is no general demand for this legislation. The Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party has gone on record on the subject of immigration legislation, and the last Democratic platform, which contained specific reference to this question, contained the following:

We condemn and denounce any and all attempts to restrict immigration of the industrious and worthy of foreign lands.

Through the veto message of President Taft during the last administration the Republican Party expressed its views on this subject and went on record as opposing such unfair legislation.

I do not believe that we should consider this bill now, when there is pending other important legislation which should be speedily enacted into law. It was only a few days ago that the President of the United States called our attention to several measures which he deemed of great importance and which he urged should be passed at an early date, yet the Committee on Rules has not seen fit to bring in a special rule for the purpose of considering any of the measures recommended by the President.

There may be some gentleman rise later on and state that there is a demand for this legislation. If such a demand exists, and this I do not admit, it comes from professional restrictionists who have been clamoring for years for the enactment of such a measure; but the country at large and the great mass of the people are not seeking this legislation; they are per-fectly contented with the existing conditions. The restrictionists may say that this legislation is necessary on account of the volume of immigration now coming to our shores; but, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this great volume of immigration that we have been receiving has been a blessing to this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Sabath] who has just taken his seat had not addressed the House in the vein in which he did, I doubt if I should have taken the time to say anything on this rule. He read from the Democratic platform a provision which pledges to the country that the Democratic Party will not restrict the immigration of those who are worthy and industrious and come to our shores to find employment. I call his attention and the attention of the House to the fact that at the time that platform was written the country was enjoying the fruits of Republican policies, and that the labor of our land was all employed at the highest wage that labor had ever received. To-day we find ourselves in an entirely different situation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CAMPBELL. Not now.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. CAMPBELL. We to-day have a Democratic administration and are living under Democratic policies, and millions of our laborers are without work. Therefore the proposition to restrict immigration is a very proper subject of consideration for this House at this time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] says there is no demand for such legislation. He evidentally overlooked the fact that the miners' convention, which is now in session in Indianapolis, declared a few days ago that not only this bill, but a bill absolutely prohibiting all immigration should be enacted into law; and I am not sure that that is not the thing that should be done. We should at least prohibit all immigration that comes to our country to find work until we get rid of this Democratic administration, with its policies, so that we can give employment to all our own laborers at good After that we might well admit such others as are needed in the industries of our country to keep up the number of men necessary to supply the demand for labor. This was the condition during the last Congress, when this bill was under consideration before. Every industry in the country was demanding more laborers. To-day practically every industry in the country is laying off laborers.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a very brief question.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I put the question only because the gentleman from Kansas is a careful gentleman. and usually has authority for any statement that he may make. I would like to inquire what authority, if any, he has for the statement he made about the million men that are unemployed in this country?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the reports that occur daily in the newspapers from Chicago, from Indianapolis, from Cleveland, from St. Louis, from New York, from the Pacific coast, from all over the country that hundreds of thousands of men are out of employment, amounting in all to millions.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. But the gentleman has no information from any official source like the Department of Labor, from the head of the Department of Labor?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; the Department of Labor up to the present has not published the number of men who are out of employment. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The head of the Department of Labor is not giving out official reports on the unemployed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore.]

Mr. MOORE, Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of these three minutes in an endeavor to come to an arrangement with the chairman of the committee as to the manner in which this debate shall be conducted. I have no special fault to find with the rule, although, being a gag rule in a mild form, I shall vote against it on general principles. It limits debate on a great public question. Seven hours have been allotted by the generosity of the gentlemen of the Committee on Rules, and I assume at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I would like to ask-

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May I interrupt the gentleman for a second?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, no; the gentleman from Alabama insisted on only four hours. It is the gentleman from New York who insisted upon the much longer time of seven hours.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman finally got the seven hours. Mr. MOORE. I am very glad to be corrected; and I notice that the gentleman from Alabama is silent and does not answer the charge. They sought to get through in four hours rather than seven. Now, the question I desire to propound is this: If this debate runs seven hours to-day, we will run until 8 o'clock to-night. If we undertake to pass this bill to-morrow, we will probably have a night session, and we will have to have a quorum in order to pass the bill. Now, can we have an under-standing with the gentleman, without further complaint about the rule, that we shall have no vote on this bill until Monday?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman, I would not want to make an agreement of that kind. I hope we will be able to get through with this bill tomorrow. It is evident there is at least one gentleman here who expects to try to obstruct all progress-I mean by filibusteringand I hope

Mr. MOORE. Name that gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman who made the motion a while ago

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker—— The SPEAKER.. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor; does he yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama—— Mr. SABATH. May I suggest—— Mr. MOORE (continuing). To further answer my question. The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields to the gentleman from Alabama

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me for a moment, I think it is important we have an understanding. if we can reach one, because there are some of our colleagues here who want to use to-morrow afternoon and may be compelled to stay here to-night until midnight and be compelled to stay to-morrow night until midnight, and that will be unfortunate and very unprofitable. If we can reach an arrangement, if the gentleman will agree that the vote pass over until next

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit? How will it suit the gentleman to agree upon an hour when this bill will be voted upon, instead of asking for an agreement for a time when it will not be voted upon?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. And the question is unanswered.

Mr. BURNETT. I will not agree to the gentleman's proposition; I will agree to the other to have a vote taken at a time which may be agreed upon.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I would like to grant the request, but I can not in view of other arrangements.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement of my colleague from Kansas that there are millions of men out of employment in the country and that a state of panic exists, I want to quote from two Republican papers.

The extracts I shall read relate to a statement made last December by the Republican leader [Mr. Mann], but as the gentleman from Kansas makes a similar charge, these extracts from Republican papers may be considered as replying to both:

[From the New York Press, Dec. 17.]

If Representative Mann really said, as he has been quoted, that business men are "nearly scared to death" and that the country is now in the midst of an industrial and financial panic, he went a great deal further than any facts warrant—a great deal further than anybody, even in the game of playing politics, ought to go. * * Industry and commerce knew the tariff change was coming long before it arrived, and they generally prepared for it.

[From the New York Evening Mail, Dec. 20.]

Though Representative Mann in his desperate search for an elixir to rescue the Republican Party from its state of noxious desuetude cries "panic," America receives the outburst without ceasing for a moment its tremendous industrial activity. * * * America is still a growing concern.

[Applause.]

Mr. MANN. You will find men out of employment just the

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan].

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this rule is centered in the allowance of seven hours for general debate. I was amazed at the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Rules that this was a liberal allowance for a discussion of this bill,

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANAHAN. I can not yield. My time is too limited.
Mr. HARDWICK. I just wanted to state to him it was a matter of agreement.

Mr. MANAHAN. It was a matter of agreement, which I am advised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfold] was a sort of compromise agreement, because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in charge of the bill, wanted to limit the debate to four hours. And I say that that disposition on the part of the gentleman from Alabama shows conclusively that as chairman of the committee in charge of this bill he dare not permit a generous time for this discussion. [Applause.]

But when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] or the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] says that seven hours is a liberal allowance, it shows that he has not the faintest conception of the mighty issues involved in this bill. And when he says that the Members of this House are familiar with this question he insults the intelligence of every Member here. There are not 10 men in this House who have studied economic conditions as they should study them in order to pass upon this bill. The insanity statistics, the illiteracy statistics, in the United States and in the different States, the character of the races affected by this restriction, the effect on labor and cost of living conditions which this bill will impose upon the people have not been studied by gentlemen in this House, and they are ignorant upon these questions. [Applause.] bill violates every principle of justice and reverses the highest principle of asylum which has ennobled this Nation during its whole history. It is absurd to limit the debate in opposition to it to three and one-half hours. A full debate would defeat the literacy test in this measure, as it should be defeated.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I think when we conclude the general debate the number of Members present who will listen to it will convince anyone that the seven hours are amply sufficient.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?
Mr. LENROOT. I have but a limited time.
Mr. MANAHAN. My question is this: Does not the fact that they will not be here and listen to the debate on this question conclusively show that they do not appreciate the importance

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield further than that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman favor the initiative and referendum?

Mr. LENROOT. I rise particularly to speak to the question raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick], as to the interpretation of this rule. It was my understanding that there was to be an amendment to this rule eliminating Wednesdays and Mondays in the consideration of this bill. The misunderstanding probably was my own. It is not in the rule, and I want to suggest, and I shall not argue it now, Mr. Speaker, that before finally coming to a conclusion as to the proper interpretation of this rule I think the Speaker will be convinced that if consideration of the bill upon Mondays is permissible the same will be true of Wednesdays.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield within the three minutes. Mr. MANN. It is conceded that this rule will not bring this bill up on either Mondays or Wednesdays?

Mr. LENROOT. If it is-

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the gentleman would let it go that way. It was argued otherwise.

Mr. MANN. You said Mondays.

Mr. HARDWICK. I said Wednesdays.

Mr. LENROOT. One other thing in reference to this rule itself. I am in favor of it. But on the 21st day of January I received a letter from the chairman of the Immigration Committee, reading as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1914.

MY DEAR SIR: As soon as the Post Office appropriation bill is out of the way a rule will be reported making House bill 6060, the immigration bill, in order. Seven hours will be allowed for general debate, and it will then be taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule.

I urgently request you as a friend of the bill to be present during its consideration. consideration.
Yours, very truly,

JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. Speaker, when I received the letter from the distinguished gentleman, the Committee on Rules had not met for weeks, and am a member of that committee. And we have come to this point, apparently, namely, that partisanship is carried to such an extent that the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules meet in committee caucus and determine every question before that committee. I have been a member of that committee, Mr. Speaker, for three years, and three weeks ago was the first occasion when there had been any partisanship of this nature exhibited on that committee, and it ought not to be exhibited on a bill of this kind. It is immaterial whether the Republican members would favor this rule in committee or whether they would have changed it if they could, the fact is you ought not to determine questions of this character in this way. plause.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

MURRAY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen who favor this rule seem to have taken the position that was suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], that there is in the country to-day such a condition of unemployment that a great emergency demands the exclusion of all immigrants.

I have not had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to travel through the larger parts of the country through which the gentleman from Kansas has probably traveled in his wanderings, but I have seen conditions in my own State of Massachusetts, and I have some clear conception of the real conditions existing up there.

During October last, particularly, I was called upon to go through the State—a great manufacturing State—and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], my colleague, will tell you that he saw, just as the rest of us saw, factories that had smoke coming from their stacks in the daytime and factories which had operatives, men and women, working in the ghttime. The times were so good that—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Kansas started a calamity howl as the basis for his speech. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes; surely.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts know that poverty has increased over 300 per cent in the month of December in the town of Worcester?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. No, sir. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas if he did not see that in some newspaper?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was reported in a Worcester newspaper. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. It is probably a Republican paper.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know whether it is a Republican paper or not, but it is reported in a paper published in Worcester, Mass. I have it here.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Well, there are Republican papers published in Worcester. The gentleman should not imagine that they have only Democratic newspapers in Worcester.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that if my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will tell the facts as he found them, he will say that there was a condition, certainly in last October and November, that made it impossible for him and his friends who supported him for governor to claim that there was any general unemployment in our State.

We are a great manufacturing Commonwealth, with boot and shoe factories situated in many parts of the State and with textile industries for the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods situated in many other parts of the State; and certainly after the tariff bill was put through a situation was presented that would have accentuated the conditions of unemployment if the terrible conditions that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] suggests were in existence in the land.

I deny that any emergency calling for the passage of this legislation now exists. The Committee on Rules ought not to report a rule of this kind without certain evidence of pressing need for this legislation.

There is no presentation of this evidence to this House, and I shall not give my vote in support of a rule the only purpose of which is to hasten the passage of an unwise measure which excludes good men and women who can not read or write. [Applause.]

If nobody wants to speak [laughter] The SPEAKER. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] to use some of his time.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have only a speech in conclusion.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to my colleague from New York, Mr. Cantor.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Can-

TOR | is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that anything that I can say will affect the judgment of the House, so far as the adoption of this rule is concerned, as has been plainly shown by the vote thus taken. But this is the first time since I have been a Member of this body that I have had the opportunity of voting upon a special rule reported by the Committee

I am opposed to special rules at this stage of the session. has been my limited experience in other legislative bodies that at the close of a session, or toward the close, when public business is unnecessarily delayed, it is proper then to introduce rules of this kind, so that legislation for the general benefit of all of the people can be passed. But in this session we have been here less than six weeks. This bill, under the ordinary procedure provided for by the rules, could be reached within a reasonable time, and I can conceive of no possible reason for this haste except the desire of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert], the chairman of the committee, to claim the credit of passing this bill and having it bear his name, and he can have that credit, which will come up hereafter to plague

This bill should not be taken out of its order and jumped over the heads of other bills, which I consider to be fully as important as this.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the economic phases of this question at this time, nor do I intend to follow the example that has been set by others upon this floor—to talk upon every other subject except the one under consideration. I believe in a closure rule. So far as I have observed, there is too much talk in this House and too little business. [Applause.] I have heard Members of this House-without criticizing them-I have heard Members of this House spend one hour on measures not under consideration, without paying the least attention to the business under consideration. That may be a part of the usual proceedings here, and of course that is the reason why Congress is in session during six or seven months in the year. SEVERAL MEMBERS. Twelve months.

Mr. CANTOR. Twelve months, I am reminded. That was pardonable in that session of Congress, because we had two most important bills before the extraordinary session of this Congress. But go over the history of past Congresses, when there was not legislation of that great and vital importance pending, and you will find sessions that occupied six, seven, or eight months. There is no reason why so much time should be consumed on legislation of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to special rules at this stage of the session, as I said at the outset. This bill is of great importance. There is some demand for it, as has been stated; but greater protests against it have arisen from all over the counand almost from the foundation of this Government down to this hour there have been vigorous protests against the passage of any such un-American measure as this. Yet year after year in Congress there has been the same old cry to pass it because of economic conditions, and yet the country has grown great and powerful. I am opposed to the adoption of this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I am mindful of the fact that no amount of debate will change the already formed determination of the House to pass this rule. But I desire to register my protest against it. There is no occasion for this unseemly haste. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] chairman of the Committee on Immigration, rushed this bill through the Committee on Immigration faster than I have ever seen any bill rushed through that committee. He held that committee together day after day, until one day he held it from 10 o'clock in the morning until 2 o'clock the next morning, only to continue the consideration of the bill at 10 o'clock of the same morning. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. MOORE. I wish to ask the gentleman, Did not that day after day" amount to two days only?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Practically that. Now, Mr. Speaker, we are told that there is a demand for this bill. Looking over the history of the country, we find that from the earliest times the cry of restriction has been raised. From time to time every foreign class and nationality was decried and their exclusion asked without rhyme or reason. It was reserved for two Presidents of this country—President Cleveland first and President Taft afterwards—to veto these very restrictive measures as the pending bill provides. The Congress of the United States, called upon under the Constitution to determine whether the bills should pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, determined that the bills should not pass. While other and greatly more important measures are awaiting our attention there is no reason for the Rules Committee to give this special privilege to those in favor of restriction.

It was said by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell.]

that he had hoped that we would get rid of a Democratic administration. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, if we pay attention to the messages sent in by the President who now presides over the destinies of this Republic, President Wilson, and give our first attention to legislation along the lines which he suggests, if we give consideration to the real important, burning issues of the hour, we ought not take up this immigration measure now in preference to all these other important, pressing matters. It may well await the orderly procedure of the House under the general rules that this House has enacted. [Applause.

Mr. Speaker, seeing no purpose whatever in rushing through this measure or in giving it preference over the measures that claim the attention of statesmen of the land, measures intended for the betterment of the conditions under which this country now labors, I shall cast my vote against this special rule. [Applause.] I reserve the remainder of my time.

[Applause.] I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute. If no gentleman desires to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I was just suggesting that the gentleman can not reserve his time. We are entitled to conclude, and we have but one speech.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York wishes to use his one minute remaining, the Chair will recognize him to give the time to somebody.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to utilize that one minute just to ask a question.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if in addition to the vetoes by President Cleveland and President Taft he might not also add utterances of President Wilson as opposed to this kind of legislation?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he predicates the necessity for this bill on the condition of unemployment in the country under this Democratic administration? [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, if my time has not expired-

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman quit, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray] used up the rest of his time. Mr. HARDWICK. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a question to undertake to bandy political epithets in its discussion. It is a question that rises away above party issues. It is a question upon which Democrats and Republicans agree and may disagree, and therefore in the discussion of this rule, which is the only question before the House, I decline to be brought into any controversy of that kind.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CANTOR] has spoken of the fact that we have several months ahead of us. Gentlemen here well remember last year when he had months ahead of us and were trying Wednesday after Wednesday to get up this bill on Calendar Wednesday, how one kind of an objection, one kind of a scheme of filibustering after another, was resorted to until the bill had to go over into the short session.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter that demands action now. [Applause.] That is why we want action now. If gentlemen would read the statements of Mr. Morrison before the Committee on Immigration in favor of the bill in that unseasonable hour that the gentleman from New York spoke of at 2 o'clock in the morning, they will realize the necessity of immediate action. Mr. Speaker, I could not have held the Committee on Immigration together if they had not wanted to stay. The gentleman from New York does me too great an honor. were seven Democrats and several Republicans willing to stay there and battle for the demands of labor until the wee small hours in order to get this bill before the Congress of the United States. [Applause.] That is why we were there. Mr. Morrison, in his statement, introduced a record showing that in the last four months 639,482 aliens have come into this country.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. I can not yield; I have only five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I only had two.

Mr. BURNETT. Let me say about this rule that it is the gentleman from New York's rule, and it is infinitely fair. Gentlemen opposed to this bill are to have three and a half hours, and yet a little while ago there were 238 voting in favor on our side and only 132 against us; and yet you are to have one-half of the time. Gentlemen, your mouths are certainly Mr. Morrison showed that there was an immediate necessity for this measure, and there has been a great cry and need for it for years. Last year 1,400,000 aliens came in; the year before more than a million; and last year and during the last six or seven years there have been seven or eight millions coming to this country. Within the last four months over 600,000 have come in. The gentleman from Colorado the other day, in discussing the conditions out there in that strike, showed that these very conditions were brought about by the importation of that class of labor which this bill seeks to keep

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] said that there is no demand for it. I call his attention to the fact that the Federation of Labor, with 3,000,000 members, every year and for several years has demanded the passage of this bill. I call his attention to the fact that for the last five years the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of the South and West have demanded it by resolutions and unanswerable arguments before the House Committee on Immigration. I have just received resolutions from the State Farmers' Union of Indiana and Illinois demanding it, and we have demands from all over the North and West and South that this legislation be passed, and that it be passed speedily. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that more than 500,000 members of the great patriotic organizations of the country, and hundreds of thousands who belong to no organization. who belong to no organization, are knocking at the doors of Congress, just as they have been knocking for years, and been refused, until last year, and then it was vetoed by a President who only received the electoral votes of two little States in the November election. [Applause.]

Now the gentleman from New York says that this bill is in conflict with the statement of the present President of the United States.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How about President Cleveland?
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I hope I have time to call attention to the fact that when President Cleveland vetoed the bill in 1897 there were not as many people coming from all Europe as to-day are coming from southern Italy. In regard to the statement of our President, Mr. Speaker, in answer to questions that were propounded to him in New York, he said that those that came here induced and incited by the steamship companies to come here ought to be kept out, and this bill keeps out that very class of people that the President of the United States said ought to be kept out. [Applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] stated that there were 102 votes "against us" and thereby places me as one against this bill. Since I voted against the previous question a moment ago, the gentleman has no right to make such a distinction.

The SPEAKER. That has nothing to do with this matter, and it is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRYAN. I wanted to say that I am for this immigra-tion bill, including the literacy test, and I am not going to permit myself to be recorded against it.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. May I inquire whether or not under the terms of this rule Monday will be given up to the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on that when the time comes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. But it might have something to do with the vote that will be cast on this rule.

When debate The SPEAKER. The Chair can not help that. is over and that question presented, the Chair will rule. The Chair has not had time to consider it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the rule. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the proposition to be submitted.

The SPEAKER. The primary proposition is the substitute, and if that is adopted the vote will be on the original resolution as amended by the substitute.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is a committee substitute? The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, can we have the substitute reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the substitute.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the sub-

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask also that the Clerk again report the original resolution?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the original resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported House esolution 378.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute. The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended by the substitute.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays,

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 108, answered "present" 3, not voting 98, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. Under the resolution the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6060, the immigration bill. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the immigration bill, with Mr. Hav in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6060, the title of which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows: A bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States. The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have order, and I would like to state at the outset that I understand it has already been the announced policy of some gentlemen to keep a quorum here, and I hope that Members will be here, because it is apparent from what occurred a little while ago that one gentleman, at least, will resort to filibuster. So I hope the gentlemen will be near enough, if the point of no quorum is made, to be here without having a call of the House and delay us half an hour every time. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? Mr. BURNETT. I will. Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I trust the gentleman's criticism is not directed against any of the members of the Committee on Immigration or any of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BURNETT. I have not seen any indication of that kind, Mr. Speaker, either by members of the Committee on Immigration or of the Rules Committee.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire further to state, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we may get through with general debate on this bill to-night. It will only hold us here until something like 9 o'clock, or a little after, and by doing that we can be able to get through with the bill to-morrow—that is, the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule—and I very much hope that gentlemen will be patient and stay with us until this matter is concluded to-night, so far as general debate is concerned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman, is there such pressing necessity that the House should stay in session to-night for general debate on this bill?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, the necessity is that the bill ought to be passed, and if we do not get in to-night and to-morrow, why then, if the Speaker rules that we can not come in Monday, we will go over until Tuesday; and then, if the same tactics were resorted to that were resorted to a while ago, that may carry us over until Thursday. Gentlemen are called away; there is a committee going to leave here in a few days—10 men—to make investigations that have grown out of conditions that never would have been, perhaps, if this bill had been adopted in 1906, when we tried to pass it here.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not also constituted.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not also essential that the House should get through with its work within a very reasonable time, that these bills must be passed and the business of appropriations must be carried through?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And is it not a further fact that appropriation bills are now ready to be reported into the House which are to be passed? In regard to this matter of seven hours' general debate, gentlemen who are interested in it ought to remain here a sufficient length of time to get through with it in one legislative day.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, it is rather early in the session to have protracted night sessions. I have no desire to delay the final disposition of this bill. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to help expedite it, and hope we may soon get through with the work of the session; but I do not see how the gentleman can expect to have the House remain in session this afternoon and to-night, probably without a quorum, if he proposes then to keep the House in session again to-morrow night until maybe Sunday morning in order to pass the bill. I wondered if it is practical to get some kind of an understanding.

Mr. BURNETT. I shall ask the House when we adjourn to-night to adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, and in that way we will utilize another hour of time.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows at this stage of the session committees have a good deal of work in the morning, and I do not know how far that may interfere with the work of committees.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

Mr. BURNETT. I do. But first, a parliamentary inquiry. I trust it will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no control over it. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is now

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it shall not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is proceeding under the rule, and so is the committee.

Mr. MANN. This is not general debate.

Mr. HAMILL. Since this is probably the most important bill of the session in a sense, since it involves the fate of the Democratic Party, is there any particular reason that the Republican chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], should want to hurry this bill through in seven hours?

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to know what the gentleman means by that question.

Mr. HAMILL. I mean precisely this: I want to know who is the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]?

Mr. BURNETT. I regard that as an infamous insult, and resent it as such. Now, sit down! I do not propose to be interrupted by anyone who does not know the amenities of this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HAMILL. I want to ask the gentleman a respectful question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] will take his seat.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Alabama to say he wanted to go on with general debate to a later hour than usual and begin at an early hour in the morning.

Mr. BURNETT. General debate to-night and to meet at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall insist on a quorum being here if the committee desires to stay longer than 6 o'clock, and if it desires to meet before 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think we can reach no agreement in regard to this matter, and therefore I yield to my colleague, Mr. SABATH.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? And is the gentleman now debating the bill? Because, otherwise, the Chair would be compelled to hold under the rule-

Mr. BURNETT. I am not debating the bill, Mr. Chairman. Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee the following question: If there is no point of quorum raisedand it is not my intention that anyone on this side should raise the point of no quorum-would the gentleman still insist on going on this evening until all of the time given under the special rule is consumed? I ask that for this reason: There are several gentlemen on this side who desire some time and who desire to speak in opposition to this bill, and it is absolutely impossible for them to be here to-day. I was under the impression that ample opportunity would be given them to-morrow, and one or two of them have left, and if we should go on and consume all of the time they will be precluded from making their remarks against this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to proceed-and I answer that question by stating that several gentlemen made the same request of me and I told them they must stay if they wanted to get into the debate, because we wanted to get through with the general debate to-night. I must ask the Members, if they will do so, to remain with us, so that we can keep a quorum in order to conclude general debate to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MOORE. An hour has been accorded the gentleman without any understanding as to the division of the seven hours fixed by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will see that both sides get an equal part of the seven hours accorded for debate.

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. What does the Chair mean by "both sides"?

There are three sides to this question now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is a bill pending on which the gentleman will either vote "yea" or and gentlemen are either for it or against it, and the Chair will recognize gentlemen who are for it for three hours and a half and the gentlemen who are against it for three hours

Mr. MOORE. May I make a further parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] as being in control of the time up to date. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama for one hour, and the gentleman from Alabama can use that hour himself or yield it to other gentlemen if he so desires. Mr. MOORE. Well, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

BURNETT] represents one side. May I—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thoroughly understands that. Mr. MOORE. May I ask the Chair who represents the other

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself and other gentlemen are on the other side, and the Chair will recognize one of those gentlemen for one hour after the gentleman from Alabama gets

Mr. MOORE. Then we are to go on with the understanding that several gentlemen represent the other side as named by the Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not depart from the rule. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided under the rule, and that one half be controlled by myself and the other half be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that would be very agreeable to the Chair, but that it can not be done in the Committee of the Whole. It will have to be done in the House.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair hold that the rule did not provide for the division of the time?

The Chair did not hold anything of the The CHAIRMAN. The Chair held that three and one-half hours of the time devoted to general debate would be yielded to gentlemen in favor of the bill and three and one-half hours yielded to gentlemen opposed to it. The Chair will undertake to do that. The Chair thinks he has fully answered the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, another parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Since a number of applications have been made to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for time in which to discuss this bill, may I ask the Chair whether I shall come direct to the Chair to obtain that time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOORE. Then we are left out in the cold, so far as an opportunity to debate this question is concerned?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry,
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] can not take the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry, anyhow, after he has been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is correct.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we do not want to quarrel among ourselves unnecessarily. As I understood, the Chair stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] would be recognized for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr.

BURNETT] yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The Chair stated he would recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] for one hour in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not state that.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood the Chair to state. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intends to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be called at the expiration of half an hour, and then I can yield my time, can I? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has control of his time, and can do what he pleases with it.

Mr. BUP.NETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, at the end of that half hour, when I had reserved the remainder of my time, would a gentleman on the other side have a half hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some other gentleman on the other side at the end of an hour. Then the gentleman from Alabama, at the conclusion of that hour, if it is all used up, can use the balance of his time.

Mr. BURNETT. I can use the rest of my time after some other gentleman's time has intervened?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If, for instance, at the expiration of an hour, allotted either to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] or to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], the speaker on the floor, under arrangement with either of the gentlemen controlling that time, should not finish, and yet have an agreement to continue on, would not the Chair recognize that gentleman in order to finish his remarks? You see, he might have, for instance, 15 minutes to go on. The Chair, under the proposition already made by him, would cut that 15 minutes in half, possibly, and thus interrupt the orderly speech of whoever occupied the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not cut a gentleman off while he was debating the question if he had the time yielded to him. The Chair can only recognize a gentleman for the time that has been yielded to him either by somebody who has control of the time or by the Chair himself.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Precisely; but if, for instance, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] yielded, say, 15 minutes to some one, and within those 15 minutes the hour that the Chair had allowed expired, then the Chair would recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] again, who was opposed to the gentleman from Illinois, and then through until it became the turn of the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not yield to the gentleman 15 minutes of an hour. The gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. BURNETT] will proceed.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, this bill is essentially the same as the bill that passed this House and passed the Senate last year and was vetoed by President Taft. The only material difference is the exclusion of a class not embraced in the other bill. This bill, after providing for the exclusion of anarchists and others who are also deportable if they should come in, adds to the excludable and deportable class those who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property. That is to keep out a class of people who come teaching and preaching a species of anarchy that probably is not embraced under the law as it now stands.

I desire to call attention to the material changes that this bill makes in the existing law. As I have stated, it is substantially the same as the bill that we passed last year, but it makes considerable changes so far as the existing law is con-

Under the existing law the head tax is $4. By this bill the head tax is increased to $5.

Under the existing law stowaways-those who may be stowed in the holds of vessels-under the rulings of the department, can steal in and can not, perhaps, be deported after they have come in. This bill embraces them among the general class of the excludable and deportable. However, we make an exception in favor of those people that where they come in in that way and the case is not a bad one it is left in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor to permit them to come in just like other immigrants, if they are admissible under the law governing other im-

We provide also for the exclusion of those who come in by advertisement. The law is considerably enlarged and strengthened in that respect.

We add to the excluded class those who can not become eligible to become citizens, unless otherwise provided for by treaties We think that will reach a class of those and conventions. We think that will reach a class of those who are coming into the Pacific coast—Hindus and other Asiatics who ought to be kept out.

We have also the literacy test, which is the real bone of contention in the entire bill. In fact, I have had intimations from gentlemen opposing the bill that with that left out they would be willing to take the rest of the bill. In my judgment that is the part of the bill that is the most essential and necessary.

Heretofore skilled labor has been admitted, but in this bill we make an amendment. The law as it now stands says that skilled laborers are to be admitted where skilled labor of a like character can not be found in this country. We make the same exception in favor of skilled labor in this bill, but we allow the question to be tried first as to whether skilled labor of like kind is found here before the skilled laborer is admitted. In practical execution it was found sometimes that skilled laborers would come to this country, and then the question would have to be gone into and decided as to whether there really was skilled labor of like kind in this country to be had, and if it was found that there was labor of that kind to be had those laborers were deported after having been brought here and put to great expense. We have changed that so as to permit a trial or a hearing upon that question in advance, and we allow anyone who feels aggrieved by the decision of the Department of Labor to appeal to the courts of the country within a certain time in order to have that question adjudicated.

The wives and minor children of citizens are admitted, even if they are aliens, which is a change in the law.

Penalties are imposed upon transportation companies for assisting immigrants. We have laws and regulations against the assisting of immigrants, but in some cases there are no penalties and in other cases the penalties are not regarded as high enough. We have changed the rule in regard to the admissibility of alien insane. They have been excludable heretofore, but there has been no penalty upon the steamships for bringing them in. By this bill we penalize the steamships for bringing in insane aliens. We have increased from $100 to $200 the penalty for bringing in many other inadmissible aliens.

We have added a penalty for harboring those who are inadmissible by transportation companies and others.

We provide a penalty of $25 for bringing in aliens who are so afflicted as to affect their ability to earn a living. excludable aliens, but sometimes the defects are such that we thought possibly there ought not to be so heavy a penalty for bringing that class, and hence the penalty has been placed

A penalty of $100 is imposed for bringing in those who are unable to read and who can not become citizens by naturalization. That penalty was not made so large as the penalty for bringing in insane and diseased people.

Section 11, page 19, provides for inspection by inspectors, matrons, and surgeons of ships carrying immigrants. The whole committee was unanimous that that was a wise provision, although it has aroused the ire of some of the nationalities on the other side. We have received protests from several Governments through the regular channels against this provision. We guard it very carefully. We do not allow conditions to arise under the law so that there would be a confusion of authority. The inspectors and surgeons and matrons must be permitted to go through and examine the condition of immigrants on the ships, but they have no authority to go as far as to order If they had the power of making and enforcing orders changes. on the ships, we thought there would be confusion of authority between our inspectors and surgeons and those employed by the steamship companies or put on the ships by other countries. Hence we believe that while there is objection by some countries to this provision, it is wise to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and that the discretion will not be abused.

Section 16 provides for more competent inspection and for inspectors searching vessels. It also gives the inspectors power to require the attendance of witnesses. They are not allowed to issue subpænas or exercise proceedings for contempt, but if the witnesses refuse to come in response to request they can apply to the courts of the country for process to secure the attendance of witnesses

We provide more effectively for the deportation of those who are excluded, and put a higher penalty upon the steamship companies for refusing to deport them after this Government has ordered that it shall be done.

Another very wise provision is for interior immigrant stations. The Secretary of Labor at his discretion may establish other interior immigrant stations and provide an inspector to accompany aliens arriving at the ports of this country to the interior stations. That amendment was made because we found in many cases ignorant aliens and alien girls coming here from abroad and starting on a long journey into the interior would fall into improper hands and have trouble on the way. found that those who got in from the borders to reach interior stations were often abused or defrauded, and by this amendment the Government protects them in a way that they could not have under the law as it new exists.

We have also several sections providing for vessels furnishing lists of alien seamen and for the deportation of deserting seamen. It was found and so held by our court that when alien seamen were employed on ships and came to this country in the ships they could go ashore and desert those ships and get in without any kind of inspection and escape restrictions in that way. Hence, in order to meet that trouble we provide that the steamships must furnish a list of the members of the crew and that they shall furnish a list of those who go ashore and lists of those that have departed, and if anyone has deserted the ship within their knowledge they are required to furnish a statement thereof. We found that some of the smaller steamship lines were engaged in traffic of that kind, employing men on the other side in menial positions, allowing them to come to this country as a part of the crew of the ship, and when they got here, perhaps paying a consideration to get here, they were people that would have been deported, but coming in in the way they did and deserting, mingling with the masses of our people, in that way escaped detection and were let in.

Those are the principal changes that we have made in the bill outside of the literacy test.

Now I desire to read and briefly comment upon the literacy test. It is:

test. It is:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yildish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertalning whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips, of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the rilp in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt frem the operation of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign continguous territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an attack upon the moral character

Mr. Chairman, this is not an attack upon the moral character especially of the men and women who can not read. I know that all over this country there are hundreds and thousands of good men and good women that are illiterate, and especially in the section of the country from which I come, because we have not yet arisen entirely from the depleted condition in which my people were left at the end of the Civil War.

Mr. Chairman, that is not the proposition involved, but the commission that was appointed seven years ago to investigate this question arrived at the conclusion, every member of that commission, including Mr. Bennet, of New York, himself, who dissented from the manner that the majority of the commission thought we ought to provide for restriction, that there should be substantial restriction. The commission reported:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole, and therefore demand legislation which will at the present time restrict the further admission of such unskilled labor.

It is desirable in making the restriction that—

(a) A sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present supply of unskilled labor.

(b) As far as possible, the aliens excluded should be those who come to this country with no intention to become American citizens or even to maintain a permanent residence here, but merely to save enough, by the adoption, if necessary, of low standards of living, to return permanently to their home country. Such persons are usually men unaccompanied by wives or children.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman will the

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BURNETT. I desire respectfully to decline to yield until I have concluded this statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the commission then names several methods that could be adopted for that purpose, and concludes:

All these methods will be effective, in one way or another, in securing restrictions in a greater or less degree. The majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

Mr. Chairman, we have not included the writing test, because make very little difference in the number coming; but the commission arrived at that conclusion, and that is the common sense of the proposition-that the unskilled class of labor that come here with low standards of wages, that come here with low standards of living, could be kept out more feasibly by a literacy test than by any other test or provision.

Chairman, whom would this bill exclude and whom would it let in? It would not keep out the splendid German people that come to this country, the magnificent Scandinavians, who have built up the great Northwest. Not one in a thousand of these would fall under the ban of the reading test. not keep out the English or the Irish, the Welsh, or the Scotch. The record shows that less than 1 per cent of those great nationalities would fall under the rule and be excluded. not keep out 2 per cent of the Germans or the Hollander, it would not keep out 1 per cent of the Bohemians, it would not keep out the Frenchman or the Switzer; but, Mr. Chairman, it would strike down fifty-odd per cent of those from southern Italy, from along the borders of the Mediterranean Sea, from Sicily, and the islands of the Mediterranean.

Oh, but some gentleman says this bill would not keep out the leaders of the Black Hand. That is true. We have never contended that it would. There are other laws that we have to meet that. That is a mere pretext of gentlemen to say that it does not strike at the really dangerous element of the country; but it will keep out those who are the dupes and tools in the hands of the Black Hand leaders. It would keep out those who, at Lawrence, Mass., during the strike last year, were following the flag of Black Hand leaders, the followers themselves unable to read their own language-those who had inscribed upon the banners by the leaders they blindly followed "No law, no God, no master." That is the class at which this bill is leveled. It would keep out about 30 per cent of the Poles, about 40 per cent of the Greeks, some 60 or 70 per cent of the Turks, and the other day I received a letter from Dr. Wightman, of Providence, R. I., who, I believe, is at the head of the State charities there, and an expert on insanity, which letter I shall put in the RECORD, in which he says that recently hundreds of Turks and Kurds-and in reply to an inquiry of mine as to what the Kurds were, he said they were the people from Kurdistan, and similar to Turks-were coming there while hundreds of good men were out of employment, taking the jobs of men who wanted to toil, but who were not willing to labor at the standard of wages paid to those people, and he says the literacy test would not only keep them out now, but it would do so for the next thousand years.

The other day one of the great leaders of the Federation of Labor, Mr. Morrison, the secretary of that federation, stood before our committee pleading for this bill, and he said:

Mr. Chairman, I speak not only for the natives, but I speak for thousands of men of every nationality who believe that our first duty is to take care of those whom we already have.

Our sympathies may go out across the sea, as he so well said. My friends, the old saying that charity begins at home cer-tainly ought to pervade the minds of the American Congress. Who are asking for this bill? Thousands and thousands of men like him who want to better conditions in our own land; thousands and thousands of men who follow the plow in the West and in the South; thousands and thousands of men who belong to the patriotic organizations of the country; thousands and thousands of men who belong to the National Grange and the National Congress of Farmers of the North. All over the coun-try you hear the cry for this needed legislation coming up, and, Mr. Chairman, you scarcely hear opposition to it except from these who themselves by their environment do not dare to vote for this bill, no matter how much they believe that it is right.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Just for a question.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman from Alabama conferred with his colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] as to the extent of opposition to this measure in Massachusetts?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have not. No doubt the gentleman will take care of himself in regard to that. I decline to yield further, because my time is almost up. How much time have I remaining?

much time have I remaining?
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining of the half hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, without taking this out of the gentleman's time, everybody knows that where debate is fixed like this it is desirable, if possible, to have it within control. Mr. Chairman, we have not included the writing test, because the record shows that only a few thousand a year who come in are able to read and are unable to write, and hence it would the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] an hour and threequarters and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] an hour and three-quarters. If the time can be so controlled, it is much more satisfactory.

Mr. BURNETT. It would be satisfactory to us, sir.

Mr. SABATH. Personally I am perfectly satisfied that the time should be so divided.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended two and a half hours beyond the one hour to which he was entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended two and a half hours beyond that to which he has been already recognized. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not desire to object if the committee has that power after this rule has been adopted; but it occurs to me,

Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MANN. The committee has power to extend the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the committee would have power to extend the time of the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of the gentleman from Alabama, no question about that; but as I understood the gentleman's request—

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I understand, of course, it is part of that agreement that the gentleman may yield to other gentlemen if he so desires.

Mr. MANN. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. That is the rule, but I thought probably the gentleman's unanimous consent might change that.

Mr. MANN. That is part of the rule.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I know, but the gentleman is preferring a unanimous request.

Mr. MANN. By extending the time it gives him the right to

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I only want to get this correct as to precedents, because if we violate the rule in one instance-

Mr. MANN. I am not going to violate the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the request now is that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended.

Mr. MANN. That is it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to that, of course, but the gentleman made some other suggestion.

I hope nobody will object; the other comes later. Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I have unanimous consent that this be not taken out of my four minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to reserve the right to object for a

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to understand the proposition. This extends the time of the gentleman from Alabama how much?

Mr. MANN. Two hours and a half beyond the hour to which It gives him all the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. In order, as I understand, that I may yield it to those who desire.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it extend the time beyond the seven

Mr. MANN. It does not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]? [After a pause.] Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman— Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] may be extended three-quarters of an hour beyond the hour to which he is now entitled, he having been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, the gentleman has not yet been recognized.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] said he would reserve his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for one hour, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that that time be extended three-quarters of an hour. Is there objection? [After pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] have his time extended three-quarters of an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks that the time of his colleague [Mr. Sabath] be extended three-quarters of an hour. Is there objection? pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time. Mr. BURNETT. I desire to proceed for the remainder of my four minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time's

Mr. BURNETT. I desire at the expiration of four minutes to reserve the time.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an extreme measure. It is a conservative bill; but if gentlemen continue to play with this subject as they have been trying to do for years the time will come when it will be more serious to them and to this country than it now appears to be. Already labor organizations are, some of them, going much beyond what we are asking for. Just the other day the United Mine Workers of America passed a resolution at Indianapolis demanding that all immigration be stopped for the present. They asked for laws to prohibit all immigration until all surplus laborers in the United States are fully employed.

Mr. Chairman, this bill strikes at those who come here for the purpose of beating down the price of labor, who come here for the purpose of establishing low standards of morals and living. and to drive out, as Mr. Morrison says, those who desire to make an honest living and maintain their families in decency and self-respect.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] the other day portrayed the conditions in that State when he spoke of the old miners being driven out, those who were Scotch and Irish and English and Welsh, as well as Americans and that class of people, by the south Italians. They, in turn, are being driven out by the Mexicans, and 90 per cent of the Mexicans would fall under the ban of this bill.

Last year every Member from Kansas on this floor received a letter from a gentleman connected with one of the great railroads in that State asking them to vote against this bill, because they said they had to have those Mexicans as laborers. places do they take? They take the places of Americans and former immigrants from the other countries of Europe.

This bill is not aimed against the Jews, as I have said before, because we allow them, if they can read their Yiddish or Hebrew, or if they are fleeing from religious persecution, to come in. A distinguished Jew from the East Side, New York, said last year to me that there is not 1 per cent of the Jewish people but that can read their Yiddish Bible. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has preceded me, the chairman of the committee, has called your attention to some of the changes in this bill. However, he has omitted to state one very important change in the very first section of the bill—on the very first page. The change which he has omitted to state is that which designates or defines the work of an alien

This bill provides that the immigration laws shall apply to all aliens and it defines an alien as any person not native born or a naturalized citizen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have in this country thousands and thousands of honest men of foreign birth who, on account of the harsh naturalization laws, have been unable to become citizens of this country, although residing here for many years. Frequently these men who leave in the country from which they have emigrated a father or a mother or other relative are obliged to return abroad for a short time, possibly to see their parents for the last time and to bid them good-by before they set out on that long journey from whence none of us return. It matters not whether these people have resided in this country for 5, 10, 15, or 20 years, Mr. Chairman. If this bill should become a law, upon their return they would be subjected to the same regulations as those immigrants upon their first journey to our shores

Mr. GARDNER. Is not that the law now by interpretation in the case of Lapina versus Williams to-day

Mr. SABATH. Well, I do not think that the Supreme Court has gone that far. But that is one of the changes that has not been explained to you by the chairman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] states that organized labor and the patriotic orders of America and other organizations demand this legislation. I maintain that the demand for this legislation comes from sections of our country to which immigration does not go.

I am convinced that whatever demand there may be appears only in certain sections of the country where it has been artificially created, and where the citizens are not familiar with the great benefits derived from immigration.

The prejudice against immigration which exists in the minds of many of our citizens is the direct result of the campaign carried on by a well-organized lebby maintained in the Capital at a great expense by the Restrictive Immigration League, aided and abetted by the Junior Order of American Mechanics and the Patriotic Order of Americans. The views of these organizations on the question of immigration are the same as those of the old American Protective Association, whose members were known also as the Know-nothings.

True, the Farmers' Alliance and the American Federation of Labor have gone on record as favoring the passage of this measure, but neither organization submitted the matter to a referendum vote in order that the true sentiment of the rank and file of these bodies might be ascertained. Had they done so I am confident that the recommendations of the officials would have been reversed.

It has been stated repeatedly that all of these immigrants go to New York and to the other large centers. Have we heard any demands from these centers to which the immigration does go? Have we heard that demand from the city of New York, or from the city of Chicago, or the city of Cleveland, or the city of Buffalo, or the city of Boston, or the city of San Francisco, or any of those other centers?

No. Mr. Chairman, the demands are made from men coming from sections of our country that have not been blessed with immigration. Every section of our country that has received immigration is perfectly satisfied and willing to receive more

Oh, yes, we are told that the labor organizations are on record, and that they demand this restricted immigration because labor has suffered in consequence of that immigration. For the benefit of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and other gentlemen who are advocating this measure I desire to call his attention and the attention of the House to the following

During the last 10 years it has been admitted that immigration has been larger than ever before in the history of our Nation, and yet, notwithstanding that fact, Mr. Chairman, the conditions of labor have improved and the wages of labor have I have here a short statement that I desire to read, increased. and I will take not only the figures from 1900 down to the present time, but I will go back to 1890 and compare them with the figures of 1912. Let us see what the statistics show.

In silk industries the hours of laboring men have decreased

5.8 per cent and the wages have increased 18.8 per cent.

In the lumber manufacture the hours have decreased 3.8 and the wages have increased 29 per cent.

In millwork the hours have decreased 5 per cent and the increase in wages is 33 per cent.

In the furniture-manufacturing business the hours of laboring men have, from 1890 to 1912, decreased 7.3 per cent and the wages have increased 34 per cent.

In the boot and shoe industry the hours have decreased 6.4 and the wages have increased 34.8 per cent. In the hosiery and knit-goods industry the hours have decreased 7.9 and the wages have increased 36 per cent.

In the woolen and worsted industries the hours have decreased 6.3 and the wages have increased 49.7 per cent.

In the cotton-goods manufacturing establishments the hours have decreased 8.1 and the wages have increased 61 per cent.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT | may say there are railroad organizations in this country that are on record against immigration, and that this immigration has brought about conditions that are unbearable in that line of industry. Now let me, in the brief space of time that I have, call your attention to the following figures:

In 1892, before this so-called "undesirable" immigration commenced to come to our country, the section foremen were receiving $1.76 per day. To-day they are receiving $2.07 a day. The carpenters were receiving $2.08; to-day they are receiving $2.54. Other shopmen were receiving $1.72, and they are now receiving $2.24. The trainmen, who had been receiving $2.29, to-day are receiving $2.88. Firemen who were receiving $2.08 in 1802 are now receiving $2.94. Mechanics who were then receiving $2.08 per day are now receiving $3.14 per day. Engineceiving $4.16 per day. Now, I ask you in all fairness, have the laboring people of this country suffered from immigration? You must all admit that they have not. The conditions of labor have improved steadily; and I say to you, coming from the largest labor center in this country—

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman know that that increase in wages has been largely due to organized

Mr. SABATH. Yes; it has; and if it had not been for the foreign element we would not have organized labor in this country. [Applause.] Samuel Gompers, the great labor leader, came here as a foreigner. The present Secretary of Labor, the Hon. William B. Wilson, was born abroad. The majority of the members of the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor, the men who have aided and assisted Mr. Gompers in the organization and perfection of that great body, are of foreign birth. If credit were given to those who deserve it, we would find that immigrants have been instrumental in the organization and development of practically all of the great labor organizations of the present day.

Mr. HENSLEY. The gentleman does not mean to intimate that Secretary Wilson would have been embarrassed at all by this law, does he?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether he would or would not. The chances are that he might have been, because I do not know what his financial condition was when he came over. I know that I would have been embarrassed and that I could not have landed if the law that you propose now had been in force in 1882. I did not possess $25, nor did I possess, perhaps, some of the other qualifications that some of the gentlemen now desire these immigrants to possess. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman intimate that there is $25 requisite in this bill?

Mr. SABATH. That is the rule of the department which is being enforced.

Mr. BURNETT. That is not in this bill.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Alabama knows it is being enforced.

Mr. BURNETT. No; I do not. Secretary Wilson voted for this bill at the last session, foreigner though he was, did he not? Mr. SABATH. I think he did; but if he had taken the time that he ought to have taken to study the conditions of this bill carefully, I do not believe, from what I know of him, that he would have voted to deprive others of the same opportunity that was accorded to him.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says he does not know the financial condition of Secretary Wilson when he came over here, and whether he could have come in under this bill that is now pending. Does this bill make any change from the present law, so far as financial qualifications are concerned?

Mr. BURNETT. Not a bit. Mr. SABATH. It does in this way: It increases the head tax. When Secretary Wilson came over here there was no head In this bill you have increased the head tax from $4 to $5. Mr. LINTHICUM. Was not the head tax increased in a previous law, which is now on the statute books, to $4?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; but this bill provides for a head tax

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is an increase of $1 then?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. I must hurry on, for my time is limited. If I had the time I am sure I could answer all the questions that the gentleman could ask, and I feel confident that before the gentleman would get through asking questions he would feel that he ought to vote in the interest of the unfortunates who are endeavoring to come to our shores and partake of the benefits and blessings of this free country of ours.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that the present-day immigration is not the same immigration that we received years ago; that the Englishman, the Welshman, and the Frenchman are not coming; and that this new immigration is not of the same standard. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that within the last 15 or 20 years the new immigrants have demonstrated to the country that they are as good as those that came to this country a hundred years ago. One of the gentlemen said the immigration we received a hundred years ago was first class. For his and your benefit I will read a part of the report which was made en the question of immigration from the managers of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism in New York City, in 1819, nearly 100 years ago. What did they say? They said in part as follows:

men who were then receiving $3.08 are now receiving $4.79. First, as to the emigrants from foreign countries, the managers are compelled to speak of them in language of astonishment and apprehension. Through this inlet pauperism threatens us with the most overwhelming consequences.

Again, later on they say:

Again, later on they say:

This country is the resort of vast numbers of those needy and wretched beings. Thousands are continually resting their hopes on the refuge which she offers, filled with delusive visions of plenty and luxury. They seize the earliest opportunity to cross the Atlantic and land upon our shores. What has been the destination of this immense accession to our population, and where is it now? Many of these foreigners have found employment, some may have passed into the interior, but thousands still remain among us. They are frequently found destitute in our streets; they seek employment at our doors; they are found in our almshouses and in our hospitals; they are found at the bar of criminal tribunals, in our Bridewell, our penitentiary, and our State prison. And we lament to say that they are too often led by want, by vice, and by habit to form a phalanx of plunder and depredations, rendering our city more liable to increase of crime and our houses of correction more crowded with convicts and felons.

That is what those gentlemen had to say about the immigration that came to our shores nearly 100 years ago, and which the gentleman from Alabama spoke of so highly.

Mr. Chairman, the objection to immigration is not new, as you will observe. The same class of people, yes, the same sections of our country that objected to these immigrants 100 years ago are found now again advocating and demanding restriction. I say to them, if they would have more immigra-tion, if they would receive at least a part of it, I can assure them they would not favor restriction. Immigration has been a great blessing and benefit to the country, and I feel confident that the immigrants that are to come will measure up with the old immigrants which helped to build up our country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in an effort to prejudice the minds of the American people the restrictionists have asserted that the foreign Governments are aiding emigration to this country. This is an unmitigated falsehood; these Governments, far from encouraging emigration, are doing everything possible to prevent it, knowing as they do that they are losing annually thousands of their best citizens. They maintain, and properly so, that emigration robs them of the young, healthy, and ambitious men and women, just the very kind they would like to retain within their borders.

Statistics will show that during the past 10 years over 80 per cent of our immigrants have been between the ages of 14 and 45. This clearly indicates that we are receiving immigrants in the prime of life, men and women who are producers, and who will create wealth. It has been estimated that to raise a child to the age of 14 years costs approximately $1,000; think, then, of the billions of dollars that these incoming aliens

In order to maintain the progress of this great Nation it is imperative that we do not further restrict desirable immigration. The industry of the country requires the labor of the foreigner, and the presumption that the immigrant is a competitor of our American labor is erroneous. On the contrary, the employment of immigrant labor creates a demand for a better grade of labor, and it is productive of better wages for the American workingman. The work performed by the immi-grant is that of the hardest kind, work of a character for which it is well-nigh impossible to secure American labor, yet work which nevertheless must be performed.

Some of the restrictions would have us believe that at present there is practically no regulation of immigration, and that, with very few exceptions, every individual who seeks admission is successful in his quest. For the benefit of these gentlemen and others who may have been misled by these statements, I would like to state that during the fiscal year of 1911-12 there were over 16,000 immigrants denied admission to our country, while there were over 1,000 deported who had been admitted on probation, as it were, and who were forced to leave because of circumstances arising subsequent to their admission.

I also desire to call the attention of these gentlemen to the fact that at the present time we exclude all idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons called contract laborers who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within one year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as having been induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; all children under 16 years of age unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe.

The supporters of this measure will tell you that by adopting the literacy test we will keep out a great portion of those coming from southern Europe, and that we will therefore secure more desirable immigration.

Mr. Chairman, literacy is not a test of character, of honesty, There are several European countries industry, or integrity. that make it impossible for their subjects to receive an education, but because of this fact are we to shut our doors in the faces of these people when they seek to enter this country in order that they may attain that which they have been deprived of in their native land? To assume such an attitude would be to place our stamp of approval upon the despicable practices of these foreign countries.

It is said that illiteracy is an objection. I can prove that the children of illiterate parents exhibit a keener interest in their studies, are more anxious to acquire an education, and receive higher grades than those whose parents have been more for-

In a bulletin just issued, Commissioner of Education Claxton states that

The least illiterate of our population are the native-born children of foreign parents.

And again, he says:

Illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among native-born children of foreign parents.

Mr. Chairman, due to immigration our country is the wonder of civilization. Its population is made up of all the people of the earth. We have here all races, all religions, all nationalities. They have come to us from all quarters of the globe, and we have the best. Only those with the courage to face away from their native country and the homes of their birth, their kindred and friends, to set out for an unknown land, where the language they spoke was not understood and with nothing to beckon them on but the beacon light of human liberty, are the ones who have sought to make this country their home. They aimed to establish themselves where the tyranny of monarchy, the oppression of caste, and the insolence of titled wealth would not place their heavy feet upon their throats. They brought with them their courageous hearts and adventurous spirits, their strong arms, their industries, and the culture, genius, and wisdom resulting from centuries of civilization in the lands beyond the seas, and they gave them here to us and we have become the wonder and envy of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that now, when our country prospers as never before in the history of our existence, that will not reverse the policies which have been instrumental in making it the leading Nation of the world, and that it will always remain an asylum for the oppressed and persecuted of all nations. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Byens of Tennessee having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title .

H. R. 9317. An act to regulate the payment of postal money orders.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 32) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan].

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the point has been made here that the enemies of this bill, in its literacy test, are hostile to the cause of labor. Now, I will yield to no man in this Chamber a higher regard for labor than I have. I will not concede that any man is a truer friend of labor than I am. If it would help the cause of labor to keep out the victims of the unjust laws of their countries who can not read, I would be tempted, regardless of the injustice of the matter, to favor this legislation. I will admit that my record in Minnesota has been such as probably would justify the charge that I am unfair in my advocacy of labor and unjust to the great corporations of that State.

In every great contest we have had up there for many yearsin the fight of shippers against the railroads for fair rates, in the contest of labor unions in every fight they have had, in the fight of the farmers against the grain combine of the States, and in every great contest where on one side was arrayed the forces of monopoly and on the other side the struggling toilers-I have been found consistently on the weaker side. The laboring men of Minnesota know, all the people of Minnesota know, that in every industrial conflict of public importance I have been on the weaker side—the side of labor. And when the chairman of the Committee on Immigration tries to stampede this House, tries to take advantage of the timidity of some Members on this floor, continually attempts to flaunt in our faces the statement that this is a labor bill and that those opposed to it are enemies of labor, he is unfair—unfair and unjust-especially to me; because I oppose this measure with all the energy I have, not as an enemy of labor but as a friend of labor. Nor will I yield to a single labor-union man a higher regard nor a deeper concern than I have for those who toil. I am a farmer's son, one of a race of toilers. I carry the marks of hard work, the awkwardness of the country, upon me. My heart is with the struggling poor. I confess some bitterness toward the hypocrites who cover wicked greed by a cloak of wealth and good-mannered respectability. I do not hate wealth or capital as such. I hate its abuse of power. I love labor because my father and my mother came here as humble immigrants and by hard work built a home. I am one of 12 children, and all that I have of character or education I owe to the labor and love of my immigrant father and mother. My devotion to the toilers is only the natural expression of myself. I am one of them. It has not been mere profession with me-an idle lip service such as you heard from the advocates of this bill; they talk loudly for labor, but it is all talk.

I have done things for labor. This bill only makes deceptive promises. What I have done for the poor entitles me to speak for the poor. In the contest against the transportation companies of the Northwest by the shippers, whom I represented, sweeping reductions in rates were secured which were confirmed in the famous Minnesota rate case, and which will save the consumers of my State over $3,000,000 annually. The great fight against the express companies for a reduction of their rates, which I tried for Sen. Sundberg, a Scandinavian immigrant farmer of my State, resulted in sweeping reductions which will be put into effect to-morrow all over the United States, and which will mean a saving to consumers of the country of not less than $25,000,000 a year. I tried the Pullman sleeping-car less than $25,000,000 a year. I tried the Fullman sleeping-car case, which lowered the price of all upper berths, without re-tainer or fee of any sort, simply as the people's lawyer and for the sake of justice. Further, I say this: I feel so keenly upon this subject of labor, and realize so fully the injustice which laboring men and women endure, that I would be tempted-I hope I would not yield to the temptation-to be recreant and unjust to the spirit of American institutions and to vote for this bill were any convincing reasons offered or any sort of proof made that labor conditions would be improved. I know proof made that labor conditions would be improved. that it is stated and claimed that the literacy test will help the cause of labor by reducing the total number of immigrants who come to this country, and that by reducing the number of immigrants you lessen the competition of laboring men and improve their condition.

I take issue with both propositions, and I will ask gentlemen who attempt to defend this bill to give something like a reason why this bill would actually result in restriction in number of immigrants in the face of the admitted facts that the steamship companies, for the purposes of traffic, are largely responsible for the incoming of the immigrants in such large number. No man with respect for his reputation or judgment will take issue with my statement when I say that the great trans-Atlantic steamship companies are largely responsible for the vast number of immigrants who come to our shores. Will this literacy test handicap these companies to any considerable extent in view of the profits they make annually from steerage passen-Certainly not. It will simply divert their efforts. Instead of seeking immigrants from the peasantry of Europe, the more rural places where there is a humbler and less educated people, they will concentrate their efforts in the great cities of the old country and still have their carriage capacity full of steerage passengers. The number will not be lessened materially, but the character of the immigrants will be lowered decidedly. Is there any question about that? I want to ask the advocates of labor what character of immigrants do they have most to fear-the peasantry of Europe who are more inclined to go to the country and fitted for agricultural work, those who naturally as time goes by become engaged in agriculture, or, on the other hand, do they most fear the city dwellers of the old world, the men who can meet this little test of reading It must be obvious that this test will exclude the humbler peasantry from the most oppressed portions of Europe, but permit the incoming of those who can meet the test, often the most vicious and dangerous men from the congested cities, always the least desirable character of immigrants. Therefore you do not by this literacy test improve the condition of labor at all so far as number of immigrants is concerned, but you do place labor in jeopardy by bringing men from the cities of Europe, who, because of their city dwelling and wrong conception of life, are more apt to be a menace to our institutions and a handicap upon labor than the farmers are. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. Yes. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will subscribe to the gentleman's statement in regard to his sincerity and advocacy of the cause of labor.

Mr. MANAHAN. I thank the gentleman for his indorsement. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Would it not be fair for the gentleman to state that the conditions under which we are living now make it practically impossible for these foreigners to get on the land, and there are only about 2 per cent who are able to go on the farms of our country?

Mr. MANAHAN. I also thank the gentleman for asking that question, and I will be very glad to answer. I will be glad also to answer any question that any gentleman may desire to ask. As to the suggestion about the number that go to the farm under the present economic conditions of this country, I will state that there is a great difficulty in diverting the incoming immigrants to the agricultural sections of the country, but making the point of this difficulty is begging the question, because if our social conditions are such, and if our economic conditions are such, and if our laws are such as to cause an unhealthy congestion in the cities of the country, the fault is ours and not the fault of the incoming immigrants. [Applause.] It belittles the intelligence and patriotism of this Congress if it has not the capacity to grapple with those great social and economic questions in a way that will solve them rightly and divert to the agricultural sections of the country the great streams of immigration which constantly flow in our direction and to our already congested centers. It would be well for the country if we had such intelligence and skill here as legislators as would bring about a change in our unhealthy economic conditions, a change in our methods of distribution, a change in our laws and social affairs so that the incoming immigrants, instead of congregating in great centers as they do now, to the hazard and jeopardy of all the people, would go out on the land and cultivate the land and produce crops for the hungry mouths of our Nation. [Applause.]

That is what we need. Instead of the blind and narrow point of view as expressed by the literacy test in this bill, the statesmanlike point of view of it would be to admit freely the humble tollers from the land of Europe who come here and are capable of assimilating with our people and who are sound in body and mind and to place them where they can live their lives for the betterment of themselves and their families and for the general upbuilding of the wealth of this Nation. That would be statesmanship, and when labor-union leaders take the narrow point of view that they can not better their condition as laborunion men except by putting an artificial restriction on the incoming immigrants, and when they fail to take into consideration the legislation necessary to change the laws which have been passed in this Capitol and which have permitted the intolerable monopolies of this country to grow, and when they fail to realize the need of controlling absolutely the great laws of taxation like railroad freight rates, which are nothing but transportation taxes, and the gambling in wheat and cotton, and stock watering and manipulation, and all that which tends to the congestion of money, and consequently people also, and immigrants as well, in the great centers—when they fail to grasp the larger issues, it is natural for them to make too much of the narrow point of view and become blind to their own best interests. Now, I say this with perfect respect. I have an affection for the great labor leaders of this country. They are heroic men. They have suffered abuse and wrong. I know Mr. Gompers and Mr. Morrison, and I know the other great leaders, Mr. Hayes, Mr. Wills, Mr. Fitzpatrick, and Mr. McNamara, who appeared before our committee. I respect their point of view, but I confidently make the suggestion that in their narrow point of view they are the victims of their own environment for years. What has that environment been? A constant uphill, heart-breaking fight for labor-union recognition and a decent wage for labor-union men.

Mr. OUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. Certainly.

Mr. QUIN. Does not the gentleman think a large element of this influx of immigration into this country has a deteriorating effect on the community in which they might be lodged?

Mr. MANAHAN. I do not; I think the opposite is true. I will be obliged to the Chairman to notify me when 25 minutes of my time is up. I will say why I do not. As I understand this query, it is simply this: Does not this incoming immigrathis query, it is simply this: Does not this incoming infinigra-tion have a deteriorating effect upon the body politic by the incoming of this great mass of immigrants? How can we de-cide that question? By any sort of theorizing? No; we must decide that question by consulting the records of this country, We decide it by measuring the effect upon the different communities of this country by the immigrants who have come. We decide it by comparing those sections of the country that have had a large influx of immigrants with those sectionswhich possibly the gentleman represents; I do not know-to which a very small number of immigrants have come, and when considered in that way and such a comparison is made I unhesitatingly assert that the salvation of this country, its virility, nobility, and power, has been largely from the immigrants who came in such great numbers from the lands across the sea. [Applause.] I do not hesitate to say

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I take it, from the remark the gentleman made a few moments ago, that the shipping interests now are inducing immigration here in large numbers. I am convinced that is true, and that the big manufacturers

Mr. MANAHAN. The gentleman's question?
Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And trusts are in collusion with them, and should not the laboring men be protected from this exploitation by these big business, shipping, and manufacturing interests?

Mr. MANAHAN. Certainly. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is not the best way to restrict that immigration, so that we can bring about a better con-

Mr. MANAHAN. No; and the gentleman from Illinois, as a labor-union man himself and because of his industry and zeal in investigating labor conditions, should know it would not protect laboring men in this country to restrict immigration of illiterates, for the simple reason that these great industrial trusts for whom the laboring men work do not concern themselves at all with sentimental reasons. It is just a matter of supply and demand with them, and they could and would exploit and enslave poor Poles or Jews or Italians or Greeks who could read a little just as heartlessly as they would exploit and enslave an illiterate Turk or Bulgarian,

The labor-union leaders have considered only one-half of this I will come to the other gentleman's question when I conclude this point. They have considered only one side of the question, and that is the objection I urge to their point of They have always, because of their experience, been confined largely to contests between union labor and nonunion labor men, and have had their minds entirely devoted to the question of maintaining the labor-union movement. At the hearing Mr. Morrison admitted in answer to my question that he had never considered the broader economic aspects involved in the question of immigration and restriction. He confided to the committee that as to the effect on labor of restricting the number tion of immigration and restriction. He confided to the committee that as to the effect on labor of restricting the number of consumers and therefore narrowing the market for the prod- finish this before I yield to another question. I say it is just as ucts of labor as restrictions to immigration would, and the effect on labor of shutting off and restricting the number of men who go to the farms to dwell or of draining the farms of farmer boys as the cities would if emigration were shut off to any great extent, he had not considered those aspects of the question at all. And right in this connection I desire to refer to the opinion and deliberate judgment of Mr. Louis F. Post, the Assistant Secretary of Labor of the United States, [Applause.] I know you will concede, gentlemen, that as a man of powerful scope of mind, broad and clear comprehension of every great problem of government, magnificent zeal and devotion to human rights, he has not a superior in the United States. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Louis F. Post, the Assistant Secretary of Labor, who has dedicated his life and splendid intellect to ameliorating the conditions of the humble men of the earth, stands uncompromisingly opposed to any sort of re-striction on good, sound, honest-minded men and women of He even criticizes in his own paper the hardened, Europe. artificial bureaucratic manner in which the department at present enforces the law. I believe in his wisdom; I would rather follow his judgment than that of the active leaders of labor unionism, and I say in this connection that the great rank and file of the laboring men of this country have never declared in favor of this bill. [Applause.] They have never had a refer-endum of any sort or form on this literacy test. The leaders, as I have shown, are divided, and the rank and file have never yet considered it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. Certainly.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman from Minnesota overlooked the fact that a few days ago the miners' convention, now in session in Indianapolis, adopted a resolution calling upon this Congress to prohibit altogether immigration until the labor of the country was employed?

Mr. MANAHAN. I can conceive that a convention of that kind, under the stress of the difficulties that are upon them, might be led astray by a few of their zealous leaders who had never considered both sides of the question; but I venture the statement that if Mr. Post or I had had an opportunity to speak before that convention and to tell them how these restrictions would affect labor and the cost of living and general prosperity the resolution would have been entirely different. to stampede a convention of that kind. assembled for other purposes, are considering special grievances, and are anxious, almost to the point of mental paralysis, as to the hopelessness of the long struggle for life. easy to get them to take a particular side of a question on the mere suggestion of a leader in whom they have confidence. Untrained men are so prone to consider only the obvious and direct effect of any law proposed. Their fear of competitors blinds them to the fact other toilers working in any other line of work are not competitors but customers.

Now, I take it to be just as important to laboring men to have a market for their product as it is to have employment, because if there is no market for their product they have no employment. In other words, it is just as hard upon a poor man who toils to be put out of his job because there is no market for the product of his toil as it is to be put out of his job by an immigrant. It is the same thing. He is out of his job in either event. Suppose in 10 years 10,000,000 immigrants come to this country. That means an increase of 10 per cent come to this country. That means an increase of 10 per cent of consumption upon the production of this country. It means that every manufacturer has a 10 per cent better home market for the products of his factory. Every man engaged in manu-facturing as a laborer knows there would be a home market for a larger proportion of what he produces by his labor. It helps, not hurts, tollers making things to enlarge their market by increasing population.

But that is only one side, and a lesser side, of this point of view. I wish to dwell particularly, because I represent a great farming constituency, on the effect of this bill ultimately, if it becomes a law man agriculture is this becomes a law, upon agriculture in this country. And, to my mind, our greatness as a people, our stability as a nation, our very existence as a forward-moving race of men in the long years to come depends very much upon the maintenance of happiness out in the open places of the earth, where food for the race is grown and where saviors of men are cradled.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. I regret that I can not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman has made an important to the laboring men to have a low cost of living as it is to have a high wage, because what the laboring man makes net at the end of the year is the gross income of his labor less the cost of operating expenses, the cost of living to him and to his family; so that any legislation that tends directly to increase the cost of living to the toilers of the city is adverse to the cause

Nobody will dispute that proposition. I repeat it, that any legislation that has a direct tendency to increase the cost of living by increasing the price of food or of anything else produced by agriculture has an adverse effect upon labor.

Now, then, it is true that in my own State of Minnesota not one-third of the tillable soil of the farms is cultivated, and even the farms that are under cultivation are not cultivated to anything like the full extent of their productivity. And why? Because of a lack of labor.

If the great farms of this country had the proper supply of labor, it would decrease the cost of living 25 per cent to the toilers in the towns and cities. The farmers could raise larger crops at less expense per unit and therefore sell cheaper. not that affect the cause of labor? Does it not mean anything to Suppose you were to keep out all immigrants. What would be The great industrial establishments and business the effect? enterprises of the large cities of the country will keep drawing more and more for their necessary help on the farmers of this country and increase the number of young men who come from the country to the cities. What will be the effect of that? The effect will be that some farms will be abandoned and other farms untilled. And what will be the result? Obviously the price of farm commodities will go up and up and up because of the tremendous pressure of consumption upon what they raise; and although this will not help the farmer, because of the high cost of his help, the consequence will be that the toilers in the towns will have a harder time than ever.

Why? Because they have done two things by restrictive legislation-they have cut off millions of men who would have been a market for their products, and they have cut off other millions of men who would go to the fields of this country and help produce the food they require to live.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan] has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANAHAN. Yes. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What is the effect of immigration in large communities on the standard of living in those communities?

Mr. MANAHAN. I forgot about that, and I want to make a statement right now in that connection. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. Burnett] to this fact, so that if he desires to answer me he may: Every single community in this country that has had a large influx of immigration has had a better manhood and a better womanhood than communities that have not had it. [Applause.] And I base that statement upon the extreme test of the gentleman's own bill. I take it that the chairman of the committee is very much obsessed with the idea that the true test of citizenship is the ability to read and write, otherwise he would not dwell so much upon it. He seems to believe that the ability to read and write is the supreme standard of good citizenship. Now, then, I took occasion to look at the district represented by then, I took occasion to look at the district represented by the chairman of the committee, who thinks so much of that test, and I found a singular thing. One of the counties in the gen-tleman's district, Cherokee County, has actually lost popula-tion in the last 20 years. Again, in Cherokee County the num-ber of illiterates—not the negro illiterates, but the native white illiterates—according to the figures taken from the census reports of the gentleman's own district, amounts to 20.2 per cent illiterate white natives. In Cullman County the percentage is 11. In Dekalb County the percentage is 12.3. In Etowah County, where the gentleman lives, the percentage of white illiteracy is 14.3. In Franklin County the percentage is 17.4; in Marshall County the percentage is 12.7; in St. Clair it is 13.5; and in Winston it is 12.6, making an average of approximately 13 per cent illiterates-a larger percentage of illiterates--living in the district represented by the gentleman from Alabama than the average of the illiterates of all the foreign-born whites in the United States. [Applause.]

per cent, showing that they are over 25 times as literate as the citizens of the gentleman's district.

Seventy-five per cent of the total population of Minnesota consists either of immigrants or the children of immigrants, and the illiteracy of the entire population of that State is exactly 3 per cent. Why, we would have just as much right in Minnesota to clamor for legislation, if it were constitutional, to restrict the coming into that State of the whites from the district of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] as he has to clamor for legislation to restrict immigration from Europe. [Applause and laughter.] And I say to him now deliberately, after studying the statistics of his State and the statistics of the States of other gentlemen who are in favor of this bill, which statistics I am prepared to give, that it would be a good thing for the mentally atrophied whites of those States if they had the advantage of coming into contact with the live, red-blooded southern Italian and Sicilians, because it would at least stimulate them to a little activity in their gray matter. [Applause and laughter.

I would like to say more on this subject, but I can not.

I will go into detail for a few moments, however, as to the population of Minnesota. I think it will be very interesting. population of Minnesota. I think it will be very interesting. I will give some of the larger figures. We had in 1910 in that State: Germans, 396,859; Norwegians, 279,608; Swedes, 268,018; Irishmen, 72,775; Russians, 30,277; Italians, 13,007; Scotch, 12,655; Hungarians, 8,560; Hollanders, 8,934; French, 4,482; Belgians, 3,161; Greeks, 1,840. These figures cover our immigrants and their children. We have also a good many other foreigners, and altogether they make a constituency of which any man has the right to be proud. [Applause I I invite a any man has the right to be proud. [Applause.] I invite a comparison of their character and accomplishments with any people anywhere on earth. I say with a great deal of pride that this virile and diversified constituency saw fit to send me here to speak for them and for the whole State by a vote of over 2 to 1 of the whole State, and I now do speak for them in this debate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANAHAN. I would like three minutes more, if I can have it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. MOORE. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes. [Applause.] Mr. MANAHAN. I desire especially to emphasize the comparison between my State and its citizenship and the work they have accomplished with the State, the citizenship, and the accomplishments represented by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Burnerr, now forcing this bill through Congress by the weapons of fear and prejudice. Of course, when I suggested on the literacy-test basis that Minnesota would have a better right to object to a migration of native whites from Alabama I did not imply that we would object, for our spirit is not mean or intolerant regarding our neighbors. We would be delighted to welcome the charming men and women of Alabama, even though so many of them can not read or write, because we have the faith born of experience that as soon as they came in contact with our vivacious, bright-eyed, delightful citizen-ship from the art and music loving countries of Greece, Italy, and Poland the inbred staleness of the South would yield, and I believe their children, at least, would make a fair showing. I called your attention to the fact that at least the first county named in Mr. BURNETT'S district has suffered a loss in populaflects the attitude of his constituents on this question. I am not surprised that as a people they are retrograding. They evidently think that the fewer people there are in a country the more wealth it will have, which is an absurd fallacy and easily disproved. Again referring to the census reports for comparison, I note that there are over 60 per cent of the farms of Alabama operated by tenants, while only 21 per cent of the farms of Minnesota—page 635, Minnesota supplement—are operated by tenants. The total value of our farm property is over $1,476,-000,000, while that of Alabama is only $370,138,000, although the farm acreage included in the farms of Minnesota is about twenty-seven million and odd thousand, while that of Alabama is twenty million and odd thousand.

Over one-half of our farmers are foreign-born whites, and it is significant that of our tenant farmers we have over twice as many who are native whites as of those who are foreign whites. In Alabama 57½ per cent are native whites and one-half of 1 per cent are foreign-born whites.

I do not know that the farms of Minnesota are more productive than the farms of Alabama. Assuming that they are equal in natural resources, it must be admitted that the difference in results is attributable to the superior qualities of husof the House to the fact that the percentage of native white bandry demonstrated by our immigrants. Not only have the illiterates of my State, the State of Minnesota, is one-half of produce for the benefit of the whole Nation, but likewise a wonderful capacity to assimilate and learn. On page 239 of the Census Abstract the following significant statement is made:

The lowest percentage of illiteracy, 1.1 per cent, was among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage, while among the native whites of native parentage the percentage was 3.7 per cent.

These are the figures for the whole country, and they show beyond question that foreign immigrants from Europe are more solicitous for the education of their children than the native whites of this country-three times as solicitous and earnest in the matter of education and good citizenship. Not only, are these children of immigrants diligent in acquiring education, but extremely proficient as well. The Italian children bring to the public schools very superior qualities of artistic perception which not only enable them to distinguish themselves in literary expression and all kinds of creative work requiring for its development a high order of imagination, but serve as a stimulus and incentive to the orderly minds of more deliberative nation-The world, of course, recognizes the scientific accuracy of the German mind and the brilliant capacity of the Greek and French, but it may not be generally known that the children of Scandinavian immigrants to this country have in consequence of their splendid capacity for hard work and great power of continued application won and maintained in our higher institutions of learning an unequaled general average of scholar-ship and attainment. The press reports of the Northwest dur-ing the past week have told the significant story of little Anna Nerll, who won first place in arithmetic for the whole city of Minneapolis. She is but 12 years old, but has completed the eight grammar grades in six years, and is spoken of by the educators of Minneapolis as being one of the best all-round pupils that the city has produced. She is the daughter of Norwegian immigrants whom radical restrictionists would have excluded from our shores if they could have done so.

Over one-third of a million of the thrifty and substantial German stock are scattered all over our State, and wherever they are are contributing every day to the happiness and wealth and the general good of the whole State. Over half a million of the enterprising and tireless Scandinavian race, who, with the same spirit of daring and adventure which made vikings of them in the olden days, did not hesitate to attack the difficulties of the boundless prairies of our far Northwest when many thought it was folly to do so, have not only subjugated a splendid empire of raw land, but have created all over it homes of prosperity and culture. And all the time this great people, while accomplishing this arduous work of subjugation, have steadily absorbed our best principles of government and our most progressive and enlightened ideas of political economy, so that now every reform and every movement for the uplift of humanity has their sure and uncompromising support. Our immigrants from Italy and Greece, as well as from Holland, Belgium, England, Scotland, Ireland, though less in number than the great races of northern Europe, have swung into the procession of progress and good citizenship and have not in any degree lagged behind.

We have another great people also, not enumerated in the census, but felt and needed in our civilization. Jews, of whom we have a large number in Minnesota. industry, integrity, sobriety, devotion to home and children, obedience to law and order, and genuine human fellowship, as well as in the domain of business and big enterprise, the Jews of my State have won the respect and affection of the men of all races with whom they live and work. The people of Minnesota are not selfish nor ungrateful, nor are they clannish or narrow in any sense of the words. Therefore I am sure that the people of Minnesota are not in sympathy with any purpose of denying to men and women in the old country who, as they and their fathers did, turn wistful eyes and hopeful faces toward our land the right to enter and make homes. They seek liberty and a fair chance. We do not own this country. It is God's country. We are only trustees, and trustees for the benefit of all the suffering men and women everywhere who love liberty and seek asylum. Let us not now prove that we are unworthy guardians of a great God-given trust. [Applause.]

Producers are always consumers also, and as the necessities of life are only produced by labor, adding to the number of toilers only lessens the burdens borne by each in producing the necessities for all the Nation. The whole trouble with conditions of labor lies in the distribution of the products of toil and the denial to him of a fair share in what he produces. Competition by other tollers is only a symptom, not the disease. That is all it amounts to. I do not hesitate to say that I am willing to place my views upon this question before any intelligent and untrammeled body of laboring men in the United States. I do not dread the verdict on my attitude on this bill in the slightest degree. Let us not yield to misguided fear or selfishness in passing a law that would belittle our boasted claims to nobility as a nation and weigh us down with the sin of ingratitude and the curse of greed.

It would be ingratitude crying to heaven for vengeance if the great people who now occupy this arena of human endeavor should now, after having themselves come from lands of op-pression across the sea, after having come with no more right than the humblest emigrant has to-day to come, having come and occupied this land and made good and enjoyed the bounties that nature offered and a just government afforded, it would be base ingratitude and a national ignominy to now selfishly shut the door in the face of the men whose only crime was to have been born under a flag that denied them an opportunity to edu-

I can not make myself believe that this great Nation of ours will ever bring upon itself such ignominy and disgrace as that, I can not make myself believe that our President—no; I will not say that; I will let the issue fare as it will, if Congress is blind enough to pass this bill.

But I do say this: That President Wilson not only expressed the true doctrine of the Democratic Party and all its best traditions, as well as the true spirit of Americanism, which he as a great philosophic historian and statesman is so well qualified to express, but condemned in advance the literacy test when, in reply to a query as to his attitude toward emigration from southern Europe made during the last campaign, he wrote

The Democratic Party can not, without forgetting its very origin, advocate an illiberal policy in the matter of immigration. The party may almost be said to have originated in opposition to the alien and sedition laws, by which the Federal Party sought to all but shut the doors against naturalization, and at the same time silence the criticism of our own people against their Government. America has always been proud to open her gates to everyone who loved liberty and sought opportunity, and she will never seek any other course under the guidance of the Democratic Party. I am in hearty accord with the ancient faith and practice of the party that has honored me by nominating me for President.

And further on in the same letter-

Sound and honest men and women out of every one of the great European stocks, who come of their own volition and make permanent homes for themselves, are welcome amongst us. No one can justly criticize our laws, if only those who are sound and honest are admitted. Debased men and men of unserviceable kind may come out of any race or stock, but America has enriched her genius and made it various and universal, as she has renewed herself out of the ancient peoples from Norway to Italy and the rich lands of the Mediterranean, who have made the literature and history of the world.

Not one word as to shutting out "sound and honest men and women" simply because they can not read. Not one word in favor of making any sort of restriction on the number of "sound and honest men and women." Had President Wilson in this campaign document, which his party distributed all over the United States, declared in favor of this literacy test in this bill, he would not have been elected, as he should not have been.

I do not question the sincerity of President Wilson's utterance on this question during the campaign. He doubtless expressed well-matured thought on the matter, and what man in the country was better qualified as a profound student and historian to express the spirit of our Nation? As a historian he had pondered on our marvelous development and genius as a people. He could not fail to see how much was due to the immigrant. He could not fall to see how much was due to the immigrant. He knew that many of the deeds executed by the leading families of our country during pioneer days were signed by the mark and not the signature of the maker, because he was illiterate. He knew that the test in this bill would have excluded from this country the father of Abraham Lincoln had he come to our shores an immigrant, because he was illiterate. He knew, as he so aptly says, that "America has enriched her genius and renewed herself" out of the ancient peoples from Norway to Italy. And as a philosophic statesman he knows Norway to Italy. And as a philosophic statesman, he knows now that it would be fatal to American genius for America to cease to be the asylum for the oppressed of the whole world, and to selfishly shut the door in the face of liberty-loving men and women. And as another great Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, well said 16 years ago in vetoing a similar bill:

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undesirable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of immigrants who with their descendants are now numbered among our best citizens.

Had this law been in effect from 1809 to 1911, inclusive, it would have excluded, as shown by the reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration-as well as a much larger number of Croatians and South Italians against whom it is claimed to be directed.

Had these 775,953 immigrants been excluded this Nation would be just that much poorer to-day. Every sound man and woman of a country is, if honest, an asset. There is plenty of room for them on the millions of acres of untilled land from the countless resources undeveloped, the boundless opportunities awaiting. Let us not yield now to either misguided fear or weak selfishness in passing a law that would belittle our best claims to nobility as a Nation and weigh us down with the sin of ingratitude and the curse of greed. The oppressed of foreign lands, the poor—aye, even the ignorant of other lands—need us and our institutions. Judged by the past and measured by eternal equity, we need them. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the position of chairman of the Committee on Immigration is an unenviable one, and it adds a new terror if he must be made a personal target on the floor of the House. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-METT] a little while ago exhibited some reasonable resentment when a Member on this floor taunted him by speaking of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] as the Republican chairman of the committee. For eight or nine years the gentleman from Alabama and I have sat side by side on these bills, and we have seen every device worked in and out of this House to prevent the question of immigration restriction from coming to a vote.

During that time, in spite of all its opponents could do, the question has come to a vote twice in the Senate and twice in the

When I had charge of the bill the gentleman from Alabama was practically Democratic chairman of the committee. He always acted as my right-hand man. Now that he has charge of the bill I try to reciprocate the kindness and assistance with which he backed me up when the Republican side of this House was in the majority.

But, as if it were not onerous enough for the gentleman from Alabama to be obliged to handle a bill which excites the prejudice and ill feeling of Members of this House, we find that his district must needs be made a subject of exasperating criticism. The gentleman who spoke a few minutes ago thought it necessary to hunt out the statistics of illiteracy of Mr. Burnett's district, as if those figures had some bearing on the question I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that when a Member of before us. Congress desires to render real service to his side of this question, rather than seek out the statistics of the district of the gentleman in control of the bill, he had better be on hand in committee when the vote is taken on the question of reporting the bill to the House. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the people of Minnesota, but they have never had a foe within their borders to lay waste the countryside, they have never seen the flower of their youth slain, and their fair domain was far outside the battle field. If the men of Minnesota had been through such an experience, I have no doubt that they would have borne themselves as well as did the men of Alabama, but afterwards they would have found it exceedingly difficult to educate their children.

THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

We are considering a bill 60 pages in length. It revises our entire immigration law, except in so far as the exclusion of Asiatics is concerned. This bill contains a clause known as the literacy test, devised for the purpose of reducing the amount of immigration into this country. Less than a single page deals with the literacy test, and yet the fate of this whole measure will depend on the attitude of Congress toward that single page. Eliminate that page and this bill would meet with universal approval in this House. The literacy test, if adopted, will reduce the volume of immigration. It is the only restrictive feature in the bill.

The policy of the American people for the greater part of our history has been to admit every able-bodied immigrant of good character. For a good many years, however, we have recognized the necessity of departing from that policy. ingly we have passed a succession of more or less inadequate laws designed to prevent the admission of laborers under contract and to hinder the introduction of immigrants who do not come here of their own initiative. Further than that we have never yet gone; but for many years past an effort has been afoot to secure legislation which will result in a substantial reduction in the volume of our immigration, even if we are obliged to exclude many desirable men and women.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact that the Representatives from Massachusetts years ago argued in the House and in the Senate that the immigrants ought to be kept out of this country then, having reference to the German, Irish, Scandinavian, Norwegian, French, and others?

Mr. GARDNER. It may be so.

HISTORY OF THE LITERACY TEST.

The efforts of those who desire this reduction have, for the most part, been centered on the passage of a law which requires an immigrant at least to be able to read in his own tongue. Such a bill has four times passed the Senate and three times passed the House. Twice it has reached the President only to encounter a veto. President Cleveland vetoed the bill in 1897. The House passed it over his veto, but the Senate upheld the President. President Taft vetoed the bill in 1913. This time the Senate passed it over the veto, while the House upheld the President.

THE ISSUE.

We are now once more face to face with the great problem. Let us not attempt to befog the issue by a discussion of details. The real question is this: Has the time come when we ought to restrict immigration for the express purpose of reducing the number of immigrants, good, bad, or indifferent?

If you believe that the country needs and ought to receive every able-bodied man and woman of good character, you will have no hesitation in voting against this bill. If, on the other hand, you believe that we are admitting too many immigrants every year, I shall have no difficulty in persuading you to vote in favor of this bill, even though you may think that some plan for restriction better than the literacy test ought to be devised.

I do not think that I exaggerate when I say that four-fifths of the argument against restriction is addressed to emotion and prejudice. I wish I could say that the entire argument in favor of restriction is addressed to reason. Unfortunately, a goodly number of our allies have sharpened our opponents' weapons by exhibitions of racial antipathy and narrow-minded religious intolerance. I believe, however, that the pages of the Congressional Record would justify me in declaring that most of the debate against restriction is founded on sentimental arguments, while most of the debate in favor of restriction is founded on economic arguments.

COMMON GROUND.

In order to clear the ground of unnecessary encumbrances, I am willing to concede the truth of statements made on this floor to the effect that the foreigners who came to us between 1820 and 1870 have been successfully assimilated and that the immigration of that period has proved a blessing. I also concede that much of the immigration which comes to us to-day is likely to prove a blessing. I am also prepared to admit it as my belief that there is an annual shortage of labor on farms at certain seasons of the year and an occasional shortage of labor in other industries.

STATISTICAL.

Before embarking on my argument, I invite your attention to a few figures. It appears from the report of the Commissioner of Immigration that 1,427,227 aliens were admitted to this country in the year ending June 30, 1913, and 611,924 aliens departed from this country during the same period, leaving a net increase of over 800,000 in our population.

The report of the Commissioner of Immigration shows that of the aliens over 14 years of age admitted last year, 300,108, or about 24 per cent, were unable to read in any language. ratio of illiteracy varied from 45 per cent, in the case of Lithuanians, down to less than 1 per cent in the case of English, Irish, Scotch, and Scandinavians.

So you see that this bill, if passed, will exclude 45 per cent of the Lithuanians, over 40 per cent of Sicilians, and less than 1 per cent of the English, Irish, Scotch, and Scandinavians.

The report of the Commissioner of Immigration also shows that from September 30, 1819, down to June 30, 1903, a period of nearly 84 years, 21,095,614 immigrants came to this country, whereas during the 10 years from June 30, 1903, to June 30, 1913, no less than 9,713,330 immigrants have arrived. of it! Nearly one-third of all the immigration of the last 100 years has arrived since June 30, 1903.

The Canadian and Mexican figures are necessarily very incomplete. The proposed literacy test would affect Mexicans to a very marked extent. It would scarcely touch immigrants from Canada.

HISTORIC ARGUMENT.

So far as I understand it, the historic argument in favor of unlimited immigration is this: Time has proved that it was a wise policy to admit an unrestricted flow of immigration from foreign lands when this country was unsettled and when we had thousands of square miles of arable land to give away; therefore, it must still be a wise policy to admit an unrestricted flow now that the country is settled and no free available land remains

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. GARDNER. I will.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Was not it argued then that this foreign immigration, composed of various nationalities that now are said to have been good and desirable acquisitions to the State of the gentleman, were a menace to the peace and happiness of that Commonwealth?

Mr. GARDNER. Now, does the gentleman refer to the arguments of the Know Nothing Party in the fifties?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have reference to the persistent argument made by Representatives of the State of the gentleman in the House and Senate against the influx of immigration that came in years ago which the gentleman inferentially said was good immigration and which was then claimed to be a menace to the peace of the country.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for one brief ques-

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Do I understand the gentleman's position to be that the country has now come to a place in its history where we must shut the door of hope against the deserving strugglers of the Old World who want to seek our shores?

Mr. GARDNER. Why, certainly, we must shut the door of hope against some of them. That is the whole contention, as I have tried to point out. In case I have not made it clear, let me say so again. I believe that we must pass legislation which will cut down the volume of immigration, even if in cutting it down we are obliged to exclude some worthy, healthy, desirable men and women.

Mr. HARDY. I would like the gentleman to permit me to see if I understand him. The gentleman's position is that to worthy, deserving strugglers, any and all of them, we are ready to shut them out from our doors?

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman ought not to try to put words like those in my mouth. The gentleman knows perfectly well what I am aiming at. He can not make me say—

If the gentleman declines

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman pleases.

Mr. HARDY. Permit me to say in all frankness-I do not want to trespass on the gentleman or to misunderstand or mis-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HARDY. Excuse me.
Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman's position is, regardless of worth or lack of worth of the immigrant, immigration should be restricted. Is that right?

Mr. GARDNER. I think that the gentleman understands my position.

THE DEMAND FOR LABOR,

How about these claims as to the necessity of vast supplies of labor to develop the Nation? To be sure, in times of prosperity we could give employment to hundreds of thousands more Europeans if we could only get them to work cheap

If we were only willing to admit the Chinese, we could employ millions of them building railroads, factories, and all manner of good things. If some one could only import a race which would work for even less than the Chinese, every cent of capital and credit in the world would be commandeered for the promotion of enterprises on which they would be employed. demand for their labor would be almost inexhaustible. But how about the rest of the workingmen in the country? Where would they find their jobs? A few of them, of course, would become foremen and shopkeepers, but how about the vast majority?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I yield to my colleague. Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that notwithstanding the great influx of immigration the wages of our laboring men are higher

Mr. GARDNER. I am coming to that.
Mr. SABATH. Wages are higher, are they not?
Mr. GARDNER. Yes; and they would be higher still had it not been for the immigrant.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think they ought to be?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Every year at certain seasons, when we hear of the demand for farm labor, gentlemen on this floor will pull long faces and solemnly express an opinion that a proper distribution of immigration would solve the problem. I venture to predict that until the employing farmer can offer a steady job to all whom he employs we shall never be free from this cry as to the shortage of farm labor. As to distribution, for eight years we have had a law intended to encourage it. South Carolina has tried it. She imported direct some 700 immigrants. All of them left her. Distribute men to your heart's content. They will not stay distributed. They will go where natural forces draw them.

If I were to tell my manufacturing friends in Massachusetts that competition does not lower prices, they would start to discourse on the incapacity of Members of Congress. very manufacturers will turn around and tell me that immigration has no effect on wages in the textile industries. they may be right; but if so, labor is the only commodity in the wide, wide world whose price is not reduced by competition. To be sure, in flush times, the effect of immigration may only be to keep wages from rising as fast as they otherwise might. When two jobs are looking for one man, no amount of immigration will lower wages; but wait until two men are looking for one job and then see what happens.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield for just a minute?

Certainly. Mr. GARDNER.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Does not the gentleman recognize that there are many men at all times, no matter under what administration, out of employment and seeking work, and are not the labor unions keeping up the price of labor?

The labor unions can not keep up the price Mr. GARDNER. of labor unless existing conditions make it possible. Labor unions or no labor unions, when men are for a long time out of work they are bound to have a try at getting away with somebody else's job, even if they cut under the union scale in doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. To sum it all up, Mr. Chairman, 1,400,000 people came into this country from abroad last year—1,400,000 men and women thrust in a single year into our labor market as present and future competitors.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Chairman-Mr. GARDNER. I can not yield.

To be sure, many of them were birds of passage, who competed with our people only for a season. Six hundred thousand aliens returned home, but 800,000 remained as a permanent addition to our population.

They are good men and women, I dare say, but they are used to a poor standard of living. They are willing to accept a poor standard of living. They are willing to go to work for less wages than our own people ought to work for. Do you think that American workmen can raise their standard of living while we are admitting each year over a million competitors to cut it down? If you know anything about workingmen's problems, you must realize that it is hard for them to maintain their present standard of living. Of course it is hard. In the last 10 years we have admitted 10,000,000 people to help keep it down.

Some one has convinced many of our foreign-born voters that they want their cousins to come over here. All right; let the cousins come; but do our foreign-born voters want 1,400,000 cousins every year? Is not 700,000 a year quite enough for us to assimilate and educate up to our standard of living?

You, sir, sitting in the gallery listening to this debate, are earning $12 per week. You would like to get $14 per week. You think that you are worth it, do you not? How do you expect to get $14 a week, if we admit 1,400,000 cousins a year who are willing to take your job at $10 per week?

We legislators are not merciless; we have the deepest sympathy for the alien who has never had the chance to learn to We wish him well; nevertheless, we are not sent here to legislate for him but for our own people.

If an immigrant is afflicted with undeserved disease our pity goes out to him; but we think of our own people for whose health we are responsible and sadly we close the gates.

Likewise if an immigrant is poor and ignorant and desires to better his condition our pity goes out to him as well and to the extreme limit of safety we welcome him; but when the poor and the ignorant come to us in such numbers that their poverty and their ignorance become a menace to the welfare of our own people, then we conceive it to be our duty to stem the tide. The hour has now arrived not to close the gates but to narrow the passage and control the flood.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is always a difficult matter to disagree with one who may have attractive personal charms and an attractive way of presenting them, and of course it is especially painful to disagree with a Gardner from Massachusetts, like my colleague, who presents the old doctrine with up-to-date allusions, with up-to-date references, and present-day statistics.

Mr. Chairman, there has always been a Gardner in Massachusetts to raise this restriction-of-immigration cry. It is no new story to those of us who come from the Old Bay State. I have here the inaugural address of the governor of Massachusetts in 1855, when Henry J. Gardner was sworn in as governor of our State. He had campaigned through that Commonwealth on the very same doctrine of restriction and exclusion that our colleague to-day expounds. I cite to him and I cite to all of you that governor's address.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. That gentleman was elected governor, was he not? [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes; and I am going to tell my colleague about him in a few minutes. And it is most significant that one Gardner was elected governor of Massachusetts on this issue in 1854, while the present-day Gardner was defeated last fall on this issue. [Applause.]

The gentleman from the sixth district of Massachusetts points to the fact that fourteen hundred thousand of somebody's cousins have come here in one year. Why, the extent and the kind of immigration in his day were the causes of complaint of Gov. Gardner in his inaugural address, because, on page 978 of "Acts and Resolves" of 1855 the governor begins his discussion of the immigration problem by referring to the immigration to this country by 10-year periods. He points out the fact that from 1790 to 1800 the immigration was small; that from 1800 to 1810 it was small; that from 1810 to 1820 it was small; but he points to the fact, appalling to him, that from 1840 to 1850 it was 1,542,850. The reason for that high tide of immigration is clear to anybody who will stop to reflect upon conditions. I do not know just how much of that immigration was from Ireland, but I know that the largest part of it was from the Emerald Isle, because of the conditions in that faminestricken country in that period from 1840 to 1847, when thousands of Irish mothers and Irish fathers fled to the Old Bay State, the refuge and the asylum that was held out to them from across the seas. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] bewail the fact that to-day the Irish do not come. These gentlemen and others like them have a bitter complaint because the Germans are not crossing the seas. "If we could get the Irish," say they; "if we could get the Germans," they, "there would be no desire to restrict; but the immigrants are coming from southern Europe; they are coming from darkest Russia; and this terrible horde must be kept out.

I defy any of them, no matter if he may have the ingenious skill of my colleague [Mr. GARDNER], no matter if he may have the adaptability to turn a point his own way possessed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], to present any new argument, to present any new cure, that was not discussed. seriously agitated, and written into law in that period in Massachusetts from 1855 to 1856. Do you know what they recom-mended? Let me remind you of the recommendations that those men made: They recommended an amendment to our Constitution prohibiting the exercise of the elective franchise to all of alien birth, qualified by naturalization, till they had resided in the United States 21 years.

They recommended that no person should be permitted to vote who could not read and write the English language.

Do you know that they disbanded military companies which had enrolled among its members persons of foreign birth? Do you know that they officially declared it was not safe, it was not wise, it was not statesmanlike, to have any such men in these militia companies?

Do you know that they made all sorts of attempts at restrictive legislation, and they made it an offense punishable by fine for any clerk of court in Massachusetts to issue naturalization papers to any man of this alien class? "You do not mean it," say you. "They did not go as far as that!" Yes; they did; and God only knows how far they would have gone if it had not been for a single thing. My colleague [Mr. Gardner] has re-ferred to the terrible calamity of the Civil War. It was a terri-ble calamity, and we all know it. Soon after these days of 1855 and 1856 there came the call to arms, and it would be to you but the repetition of a familiar story to tell the history of the Irish and the Germans and other "despised allens" in that war—men who were not wanted in times of peace, but who were most welcome recruits in time of war. [Applause.] Let me just give you some statistics on that line. A study carried on from official records of the nativity of 337,800 soldiers shows that 203,622 were born in the United States and 134,178 were foreign born. Of the 134,178 foreign-born soldiers, 19,985 were born in British America, 14,000 were of English birth, 12,000 were born in various countries other than those named, 36,000 were born in Germany, and 51,000 were born in Ireland. This makes it evident that 38 per cent, practically 2 out of every 5 soldiers of foreign birth, were Irishmen; and of the 2,800,000 enlistments in the United States service, 15.1 per cent, or 432,518, were natives of Ireland. [Applause.]

That is what turned the tide, not of bigotry-I will not style it that way. Those of us who have read this page of history always thought it was. Perhaps they had economic reasons. Gov. Gardner in 1855 said he was doing it all to protect the American workingman. Gov. Gardner in 1855 said he was doing it all to keep up wages of workingmen and that this kind of competition would lower the scale of American living. Gov. Gardner in 1855 said that the country had reached a point in development where it could not stand this influx of immigration. By the census of 1850 they had in the United States 23,000,000 people, and probably they had 25,000,000 people in 1855, when this agitation was on. To-day we have 100,000,000. They had 36 States and we have 48. They thought in 1855 that they had reached almost the limit of development; that the farm lands were gone; that manufacturers were reaching the limit of their production; that the mines could not yield much more from the bowels of the earth. Were they right? What say you? I do not believe you, Congressman Gardner, are any more right to-day in your predictions as to the limit of production than Henry J. Gardner, the governor of Massachusetts, was right when he had statistics and arguments to prove his case in 1855. Your outcry is not directed against the Irish. They won their right in the Civil War. Yours is not directed against the Germans. But you say to-day, "Are these Irish to be compared with the scum of the earth that is coming from southern Europe?" I assert that the present-day immigration is not nearly so bad as men say it is, and I know it never could be as bad as some men said the Irish immigration was.

I know that the children of these foreigners make splendid pupils in our public schools; I know that the Italian-American and the Jewish-American elements in Boston and Massachusetts are distinctly valuable to the city and the State; and I am sure that the call to arms would find them loyal Americans, just as the Irish and the Germans proved to be. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman forgets that he is not giving the statistics of the number of square miles of unoccupied arable land in the United States.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. All right. Let us get at it There are less than 100,000 people in the State that way. of Nevada, and the gentleman knows it.

A Member. Forty thousand. Mr. GARDNER. Is there any arable land for free distribu-

Mr. KEATING. I should like to ask my colleague from Massachusetts if he has read the report of the agricultural commission appointed by the State of Massachusetts, which report was referred to in the morning papers?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I have not done any more than to see a reference to it in the morning papers.

Mr. KEATING. The statement was there made that these foreigners were taking up the abandoned farms of Massachu-

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows that these Italians from southern Europe are going on to the farms in Arlington, Medford, Malden, and Chelsea, right outside of Boston, wherever they can get them.

Mr. GARDNER. That is true to a certain extent.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The sons of the Gardners are not occupying those farms. The Gardners and the rest of them abandoned those farms. [Laughter and applause.]

These poor Italians are getting out of the congested sections of the city, and you know it.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts, Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Has not the gentleman forgotten the point that we wanted him to elucidate, and that was whether there were not hundreds and thousands of acres to be given away to immigrants at that time? Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Let us go at it that way. have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of the Alaskan railway bill. We are proposing to spend $35,000,000 for that project. Can you tell the limits of development that will come as a result of that expenditure? I do not know what there may be to these plans and developments of that western country through irrigation and reclamation, but I am young. I have enthusiasm and optimism, and I do not think we have reached the limit of development, but if the gentleman will reflect perhaps he will reach the conclusion that we have not reached the limit of development. They referred a short time ago to the United Mine Workers; and I tell you frankly that am afraid some young Irish-Americans believe in restriction; but I can not understand how any man familiar with the history of his people, of his State, like Massachusetts, can give his assent to anything that means a further restriction of immigration, for it is simply establishing the same argument against the downtrodden of other countries, the same charges that were made against the Irish along in 1850 and 1860.

I wish I had the time to refer at length to the things that are now being done in some of these countries.

I have obtained from the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of Education, an account of what has been accomplished in the last five years in the way of education of these persons affected by this legislation. This report shows that during the last 5 or 10 years measures for extending and improving the means of popular education have engaged the earnest efforts of the Governments of Italy and southern Europe during the past decade. Of course, the men and women who have grown up and who may now be trying to come here can not read and write. They can not comply with the provisions of this harsh literacy test, but the children of those men and women who are for the first time getting the opportunities that were denied to their fathers and mothers in a very short time will be able to comply with your education test, and I say it is a fallacious test, it is an un-American test, and an undemocratic test. It is a test that will not do the things in the way of restriction that you and your friends in favor of this bill claim it will do. You are trying to draw the inference that those of us who are opposed to the education test, the literacy test, so called, are in favor of letting down the bars and letting anybody come in. That is a trick of their debate, because these gentlemen know that there are already 20 causes for exclusion of men and women who may be seeking to come in through the immigration Let me read to you some of the causes that are referred to in the immigration bulletin for November, which the gentleman from Alabama referred to in his remarks.

Idiots, imbedies, and feeble-minded people are already excludable, and of course no one of us denies that that class of aliens should be excluded.

Mr. Chairman, persons afflicted with insanity and disease and those who are epileptics are excluded. Persons afflicted with tuberculosis, even though it be noncontagious, are excluded. Those who have loathsome or contagious diseases are excluded. are professional beggars and paupers are now excludable. Those likely to become a public charge are excludable, and, mark you, whether or not you are likely to become a public charge is a matter of wide discretion. There was an administration of the Department of Labor when it was under the Department of Commerce and Labor, when the rules for defining who were likely to become a public charge were much less rigid than they We have to-day a Democratic administration and a Democratic Secretary of Labor, our former colleague, a splendid official, but he has very strong ideas on this subject of restriction and of education. He is drawing the line pretty harshly as it is, and his definition of what constitutes one who is likely to become a public charge is much more rigid and strict than heretofore, and, in my humble judgment, much more rigid and strict than it ought to be. Those who are con-tract laborers are already excludable and those whom the surgeon has certified as having a defect, mental or physical, which may affect their ability to earn a living are excludable.

Some of the surgeons at some of the ports, particularly at the port of Boston, seem to be exclusionists, because on the slightest excuse they seem to issue a certificate that a man has some physical or mental defect that debars him from entering this country. Those who are accompanying aliens who are excludable may themselves be excluded. Those who are under 16 years of age and unaccompanied by a parent, no matter what relatives may be here to meet them and greet them, are excludable and are excluded under the present rulings of the department. Those who are assisted aliens are excluded, and those who are cripples are excluded. Those who are polygamists and anarchists are and should be excluded, and those who are prostitutes and females coming for an immoral purpose are excluded, as they should be. Those who are supported by the proceeds of prostitution are and should be ex-Aliens who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or females for any immoral purpose are excluded, and those who have come without passports. Those who are under the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act are excluded. And to that list, Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to add another class. We deny the need of this legislation, and we hope that it will not be enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend, curtail, and considerably alter my remarks in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend and alter his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is no Member of this House who would not heartily join with the committee in its endeavor to properly strengthen our present immigration laws, but on what lines ought the laws to be strengthened? We have just heard the long list of persons who are excluded under our present law. It is possible, I judge, to strengthen our present laws along these lines. It is possible to strengthen the laws so that the undesirable classes shall be kept out of this country. It is possible to strengthen the laws so that the criminal shall more carefully be excluded. It is possible, I judge, to strengthen the laws so that the physically degenerate, defective, and morally degenerate shall be excluded. It is possible to add to and strengthen all our existing laws on rational lines, and I am very sure that all gentlemen here would be glad to add their voices to secure such results, but we should not disguise the fact that this bill is not designed primarily for that purpose. Provisions we all approve are contained in this bill. Indeed, there are many who would gladly support the bill with only one exception. That exception is the provision for a literacy test. To that we are opposed. With that provision in the bill we must withhold our support, for we consider it wholly un-American and indefensible.

It is the belief of those who oppose the imposition of the literacy test that it is impracticable; that in operation it would be impossible of just and fair administration. Such was the belief of ex-Secretary Nagel, who, after a careful investigation as head of the department charged with the duty of the administration, reported that it would add over $1,000,000 annually to the cost of administration and that it would be impossible to fairly and justly impose it as a test.

It would seem that a careful consideration of the provision by anyone must lead to the same conclusion. Imagine a ship-load of over 1,000 immigrants coming in after a long voyage, in most cases their first experience at sea. Think of these poor, frightened, seasick foreigners, landed in a strange land thousands of miles away from the familiar and the accustomed, being hurriedly lined up for an examination touching their qualifications to read and understand a language. Before strangers, with the fear of deportation before them—which in many instances will seem to them worse than a sentence of death—what will they see or understand of the "slips of uniform size" which carry the test? If merely nervous apprehen-sion causes a large percentage of "flunking" even among college applicants for graduation, what may be expected of these unfortunate men and women whose whole future depends on their meeting the test? It is unfair, unjust, and cruel. In practical application it will be, it must be, either a farce or a tragedy.

And from the other side it is equally bad. The power to determine the tremendous issue of admission or exclusion is lodged with an immigrant inspector without possible oversight or curb against favoritism, incompetence, or prejudice. If the inspector desires, he can arbitrarily find that the immigrant can not meet the test. If he is not satisfied with the pro-nunciation, the inflection, or the emphasis of the applicant, he can exclude. There is no time for protest. There is no right of appeal. At the mere whim of an inspector who may be dissatisfied with the appearance or manner of an applicant he may be deported, and there is no possible remedy. This is so manifestly un-American that I can not believe gentlemen who favor this legislation can have carefully considered it. The provision is an invitation to injustice. It is an encouragement to the electrice of oppressive and arbitrary power. There is not placed such an awful responsibility and power in the hands of an underpaid and untrained employee by any other civilized government of the world.

It must be evident that the imposition of the literacy test means putting into the hands of the administration, whatever it may be, the power to carry out its purpose, whatever that may be. Inevitably that will tend to favoritism and make the Immigration Bureau a political machine. The test will mean whatever those charged with the administration of the bureau shall choose to make it mean. It is well known that in execution the literacy tests relating to the right of franchise operate as an instrument to preserve the power of the dominant party. There is no pretense of impartial administration. It is a dangerous power to intrust to anybody, and it will tend inevitably to corrupt and debauch the service.

CLASSES OF IMMIGRANTS.

It is urged that the class of immigrants we are now receiving is different from and more dangerous than those which have preceded them. That objection has been urged at every period of our country's history; it was urged as strongly in the years gone by against the Irish, the German, and the Scandinavian as it is now urged against the Italian, the Austrian, and the Jew. It is remarkable how persistent is the antiforeign prejudice.

Now, it is true, immigration is not so strong from those countries which are giving their people good government and prosperity; their people are not compelled to leave their fatherland to secure liberty and a chance in life. It is likewise true that our immigration now is strongest from those countries where governments are most oppressive and opportunities fewest—those who come to seek a land where liberty is found and a chance to rise may be secured; to such, whose love of freedom and energy of character have led them to our shores, we can well afford a welcome.

It has been shown that the illiterate immigrant is in most cases from the peasant class; he is from the country. The city immigrant can always read. Will it be to our advantage to exclude the countryman, even though he can not read, and take the city bred? Will it be better that the steamship companies shall "induce" their steerage passengers from the city slums rather than from the country districts? The country born and bred may be ignorant, but he is rarely vicious. The dangerous, the undesirable, the unassimilable are from the cities.

Illiteracy is not a fault. In most cases it is a misfortune. Because men and women leave a country where they could not have the privilege of learning to read and come to a land where they may thus learn ought to be a reason for welcoming them rather than excluding them.

AN UNREASONABLE TEST.

Somebody suggested to the chairman of the committee the substitution of the military for the literacy test. "No," said the chairman, "that would keep out many of the very best people." And yet in the same connection he says, "I know that all over this country there are hundreds and thousands of good men and good women that are illiterate." He can see that the military test would keep out many of the best people, and yet he will not admit that the literacy test will keep out "good men and good women." One test would be as justifiable as the other. Neither would determine capability or moral character or the necessary qualifications for good citizenship.

HOW IMMIGRATION AFFECTS LABOR.

It is stated that the labor organizations favor restriction because immigration tends to reduce the wages of American workingmen. The exact opposite is true. Immigrant workingmen come to obtain the work which is refused by American workingmen. The immigrant takes the "dirty job" the first year. He digs ditches, he cleans streets, he uses the pick and shovel. The next year he takes a better job at higher wages, leaving his old place vacant to the incoming immigrant. That has been the practical operation of the present system for years. During recent years, except for other reasons, there has never been an excess in the labor field into which the immigrant enters on his arrival. To-day enterprises where large amounts of labor are demanded await the securement of laborers. To-day tens of thousands of farm hands are demanded in the West to carry on the necessary farming operations. One cause of the scarcity of farm products is the scarcity of farm labor. The high cost of living is in part attributable to the dearth of laborers on the farms. To-day tens of thousands of homes and good wages could be found for domestic help if it could be secured.

Those laborers who fear their jobs will be endangered or their wages reduced by immigration should remember that when immigration is largest wages are highest. During the last two decades immigration has been greater than ever before, and yet during that period the hours of labor have been reduced and the wages increased more than ever before.

In the boot and shoe industry the hours of labor have decreased 6.4 per cent and the wages have increased 34.8 per cent. In hosiery and knit goods hours of labor decreased 7.9 per cent; wages increased 36 per cent. Woolen and worsted, hours decreased 6.3 per cent; wages increased 49.7 per cent. Cotton goods, hours decreased 8.1 per cent; wages increased 61 per cent.

DANGERS OF IMMIGRATION IMAGINARY.

It was supposed the foreigner stimulated and encouraged crime. Statistics disprove that. In New York State, which has the largest foreign population, the native born were 61.7 per cent, and the foreign born were 38.3 per cent; but of those in prison 68 per cent were native born and only 32 per cent were foreign born.

It was supposed the foreigners not only added to our store of ignorance, but despised knowledge and would not seek to learn. So far from this being true, Commissioner of Education Claxton has just officially reported that from statistics collected from his bureau it is shown that—

The least illiterate of our population are the native-born children of foreign parents:

He says-

among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among native-born children of foreign parents.

It was supposed that immigration degraded and diminished the wages of labor. It has been shown that hours of labor have been most shortened, the conditions of labor most improved, and the wages of labor most increased during those years and periods when immigration was strongest.

OUR PRESENT LAWS.

Our present laws, the outgrowth of a century's experience, are designed to exclude all those who constitute the undesirable classes. We are a sparsely settled country with only 30 people to the square mile, while Europe has over 300. Yet we have already the strictest immigration laws among the nations. No other nation guards so closely its gates. Many nations are using every endeavor to encourage immigration. We can afford to be careful. We are justified in being particular, for we may to a large extent select and choose; but we can not afford to be unjust; we can not afford to build a Chinese wall about our country; we can not afford to become a hermit nation.

It can not be that a proposition which in administration is impossible, which in economics is unwise, which in morals is unjust, can be defensible as legislation. That which is inherently wrong can not be politically justified.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we have listened during the last few minutes to the views of two of the able Representatives of the State of Massachusetts—Mr. Gardner for this bill and Mr. Murray against the bill. Mr. Murray read to us the views of a Massachusetts governor made as far back as 1855. Let us go back still further and look a moment at a most remarkable statement made on the floor of Congress in March, 1794, almost 120 years ago to a day, by a Representative from Massachusetts, Mr. Sedgwick. That patriot declared in the Halls of Congress that although the United States was founded as an asylum for the oppressed for all the world, it could not forever be so. He said:

We must not invite or bribe the redesirable to come with us. America must husband its wealth of land, for many will be dependent when it is gone.

Think of the prophetic warning of that patriot. And in the next year, in December, 1795, he even went so far as to predict that public lands would be gone in 100 years, and that when the oppressed arrived on our shores they would not be quickly relieved, but would be overcome by their miseries before they had learned to love the flag of the United States.

My friends, that prophecy, in my opinion, has come true. Sedgwick, of Massachusetts, 120 years ago never dreamed of the extent the United States would be in territory, but he did foresee that as our country filled up the older countries of the other hemisphere would fill up faster, and that the overflow would become less desirable in every decade and must become still more undesirable as every 10-year period rolls by.

This is exactly what has happened since it ceased to be possible for an immigrant to go straight through the gates at New York to free acres in the West—straight through, with a ticket pinned to his shoulder and a smile of happy expectancy in his Those days are gone. He jams into the cities. He falls into the hands of bosses, padrones, or agents. His labor is farmed out. He does not get a good chance, and the people of his own race now in this country know it. This is said in all fairness, and not against any one race or people.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is evident to every man here that the time is here when the United States shall declare that it can no further be an asylum for the oppressed of all the world. The exact form that the restriction bill shall take is not so important as that the step be taken-anything that will restrict.

Now, Jefferson said:

Spare no expense in obtaining immigrants.

But in Jefferson's time, my friends, we had a country to give away. And we have given it away. We have lived up the heritage of our children. We have raced through our public lands at breakneck speed. When we hear the statement that the West is full of arable public lands-and I admit there are some lands in the public domain-in Nevada, for instance, and other States of that character-that are tillable, the acreage good for farming is not so much as the figures indicate. Further, it is apparent to every man who stops to think that, with our modern machinery methods and costs, these very immigrants who are coming in such numbers can not get to the land.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman lives in a very large State and has a very large district territorially. Is there any land unoccupied in the district he represents?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is no public land—that is, practically no public land outside of the great reserves being held for posterity. There are vast areas of logged-off land in our State. We have tried to populate these by giving them to the immigrants at the lowest possible and most favorable terms. But we can not keep this newest kind of immigration on the land. We have tried that.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman state about what the population is per square mile in this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I can not. I can not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further. Mr. SABATH. Would he be surprised if I said it is only 30 per square mile?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That makes no difference. I will reply to that by saying that 48 per cent-practically onehalf-of our foreign-born people in the United States, including those who came here under the circumstances described by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] and fought in the Civil War, live in the four States of Illinois, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New York, and they can not get to those

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is wrong in his figures. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I yield. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Can the gentleman tell the committee what percentage of the country is now under cultivation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, I can not tell. I will say this: That a few years ago, when signs of distress began to appear in the larger States and crowded cities, we undertook at once to conserve the resources of the United States. We put aside our coal lands, our forests, and other natural resources, and after we did that it was our duty to shut the front door. It admits of no argument. If we are to save what is left of our country, our public domain, let it be for the posterity of the people now in the United States, foreign born or otherwise.

The time has now come, in my opinion, to put up the bars.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can not yield further. I have but a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the discussion over the allotment of time this morning, my colleague on the committee from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] said that this was a three-cornered proposition. I want to agree with that, but the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAY, answered the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that it had come down to a proposition where we must vote "yes" or "no." Therefore I take my stand with those who will vote for this bill, for while I had hoped and worked as hard as I could in the committee to substitute some method which I was positive would be more certain than this very light literacy test will be, A shall support this bill on account of the clause in it that I am about to read, if for no other cause. It is on page 38 and is numbered section 19. I read:

That any allen, at any time within five years after entry, who shall enter the United States in violation of law; any allen who within five years after entry shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, or advocating or teaching anarchy, or the overthrow by force or violence of organized government or the assassination of public officials * * shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported.

My friends, in my opinion that clause makes the bill well worth while. Personally, I am for a rigid restriction of immigration, not necessarily undesirable. It is time to put up the bars. My personal opinion is that a 40-word test, which is to be read and not written down, will not be sufficient; will not keep out the numbers that we hope it will. I have filed in a separate report my views as to the necessity for the words "and writing" in this literacy test.

I urge consideration of the deportation clause. In my opinion the troubles in the United States in the last few years have been caused by those who have arrived lately, just as Sedgwick, of Massachusetts, prophesied 120 years ago they would come; who, before they can by any circumstances be taken into the full breadth and freedom and meaning of our institutions in the United States, have turned against us and gone out on the soap boxes and preached the overthrow and destruction of this Gov-

My friends, the time has come to put up the bars. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. He has consumed nine minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] is recognized.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no one here just now who desires to speak-no member of the committee. I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies]. I expected to yield to members of the committee, but I do not see the Members here who asked for time.

Can not the gentleman give me 15 minutes? Mr. DIES. The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] recognized for 15 minutes.

[Mr. DIES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, the whole discussion on this bill, so far, has centered on the literacy provision. If that constituted the whole bill, I would be opposed to it, for I do not think the literacy test provided by the bill is sufficient to insure the securing of good immigrants nor to exclude the bad ones. I know of some old residents in my State who can not read and still are more intelligent and far better citizens than many of the people who can. Furthermore, it would be impossible to secure better citizens than the people to whom I refer as not being able to read. That does not argue in favor of illiteracy, however, for these same persons would, so far as they are themselves concerned, be much more satisfied if they were able to read, but they could not be better citizens than they have been.

I wish to compliment my colleague [Mr. MANAHAN] on his splendid argument. His statements on the conditions in regard to literacy in Minnesota are true. There is a very small per cent of illiteracy in Minnesota, and his encomium upon the foreign-born citizens of Minnesota is truly deserved by them. But that argument does not tell against the bill, for the percentage of literacy that he describes as existing in the State shows that even if this bill had been in operation from the beginning those same people would have been eligible, with but few exceptions. I have been in the State since I was a year old, and have studied the conditions and know that to be true. That notwithstanding, I think the literacy test should be amended so that it would not keep out desirable immigrants from countries were persecution takes place, as against the Pole, as long as immigration is permitted into the country.

The literacy test is so simple in the bill that almost any intelligent person could in a very brief period fit himself or herself to pass the test if not already prepared. Those who have naturalized parents or certain relatives here are provided for, and those who have relatives here who are not naturalized are in most cases able to help their relatives whom they seek to have come to prepare and qualify. As I have already said, I am not satisfied with the literacy test, but there are so many provisions in the bill that will operate well that I shall vote for the bill even if the amendment to make a more satisfactory literacy test fails.

There are many Poles in some sections of Minnesota. I am personally acquainted with many of them and have done business with them. Of those whom I am acquainted with, all could read and write before they came to America, but there are many Poles who have come from Russia proper, where they are prevented by the Government from obtaining an education. These, so far as I have been able to learn, make first-rate citizens. They appreciate the advantages that are offered in this country over their terrible usage in Russia, and they accommodate themselves rapidly to our country, and help in the best way to develop and improve it, along with themselves. Their children are healthy and exceptionally intelligent and quick to learn. I could not state the facts better than they are stated in a letter that I have received in answer to an inquiry that I made myself of a prominent business man residing in my home town, Little Falls. I therefore send the letter to the desk to be read by the Clerk in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LITTLE FALLS, MINN., January 24, 1914.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH, Washington, D. C.

The CHARGAN. The Clear will resour.

The CHARGAN. The Clear will resour.

The Clear rend as follow. Little Falls, Mins., January 18, 1914.

Hon. C. A. Lindburgen, D. O.

Day Sir.: Washington, D. O.

The Sir. Washington, D. O.

The Clear was an expect source to the term of the third that the control of the high-school proposition last year were two Poles, Val E. Kasperek (the other name I rather not mention). Both were in favor of the school, with no Polish voice against it.

The Poles are leaving the cities and settling on farms. (Urged on by the Polish press and clergy.) You can not help but admit that they know how to make the soil produce the dollars and cents, and it takes only a short time to transform a barren country into an earthly paradise. W. R. Mackenzie, secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development Association, said to me the other day, "They ought to admit the Poles. They are the best farmers we have. They invariably succeed where other people fall. But get them on the farm."

According to statistics, only 26 per cent of the tillable soil of this country is farmed to-day; 74 per cent still lays idle, waiting for some willing hand to turn its product into dollars and cents for the benefit of the country and the human race. Millions of dollars are spent annually advertising farm lands. We want the immigrant. We want the settlers. Then why not give the Poles a chance, whether literate or illiterate? We know they make good American citizens. It is no experiment. Canada and the South American countries admit them under all conditions, but we love the land of the Stars and Stripes. With her we wish to cast our lot. For her we wish to live and die.

I have written a long letter, and I hope it won't bore you too much, and if you can possibly help us in this matter I assure you it will be greatly appreciated by the Poles of both continents.

Thanking you in advance and wishing you health and good fortune, I am,

Your friend,

Mr. LINDBERGH. This letter shows for itself the quality of man who wrote it, and as all the facts are verified by history, current literature, and conditions that many of the Members know, it proves its own way. As this man, Mr. Koslosky, writes, there is no special reason why these people should, when otherwise qualified, be excluded because they can not read. are persecuted in Russia. I am not sure that this persecution is not now provided for in one section of the bill so that they may be admitted, but it could easily be provided for a certainty.

The language of the literacy test does not seem severe. should fear that it might not be administered in good faith at all times and that sometimes discriminations might be made against immigrants who were qualified. Of course, it is impossible to get a bill covering so large a field as this one to suit all

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gen-

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. There are some good provisions in it, and I regret that I can not vote for it. The provision on page 7 of the bill which excludes all aliens over 16 years of age who can not read is so silly and unreasonable, so unjust, so repugnant to American traditions, that I can not support it. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of keeping out the criminal, the insane, and mentally defective; the diseased and morally unfit; the pauper and those incapable of earning a living; but I can not be so blind, so unjust, so un-American, as to vote for a provision that will keep out of this country a good, healthy, moral, and upright man for the simple Never anywhere except here have I heard it argued that inability to read is a badge or a sign of bad character or bad morals. Just because a man can not read does not mean that he is a bad man. Illiteracy is no crime, nor is it a badge of crime. It is a misfortune; and any law that places a penalty on a person that has been so unfortunate as to be in such surroundings where that person could not obtain an education is unjust and wrong.

Illiteracy is not ignorance. A person who has been denied an opportunity to learn to read is not necessarily ignorant. eracy is a misfortune, and a law that places a penalty on a person that has been denied an opportunity to obtain an education is unjust, discriminatory, and un-American.

For over a century our country has been heralded as the asylum for the oppressed of every land. For over a century we have maintained an open-door policy. Immigrants have been coming to our shores singing the hymns of their native lands, and to-day they and their posterity are singing "My Country, "Tis of Thee." These men who came have builded homes; they have cleared away the forests; they have plowed up our prairies; they have made our cities vast hives of industry; and when the very existence of our country was at stake our foreign-born population loyally responded to the call to save the Union. Thousands of them gave up their lives that this Nation might live. No literacy test was applied to them. When they responded to the call of duty no one tested them as to whether or

Mr. Chairman, the proposition to prescribe the literacy test to the immigrant to-day is nothing short of an insult to the immigrant of old. We all know these pilgrims of old. We all know these sturdy pioneers who have made our Nation so great. To vote for this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would deny my mother who has borne me, I would insult my father who has struggled so hard to rear me, I would insult the fathers and mothers who

Under the open-door policy we have prospered and grown. We have advanced in science, industry, and education. An analysis of the progress and advancement in different sections of our country will show that advancement has been greatest where the immigrant has settled. Are we to stop now? Are we to now turn back on the policy that has enabled us to grow, advance, and prosper?

Mr. Chairman, why such haste to do such injustice? Why such anxiety to overthrow a policy that has been so beneficial to us? Who wants this bill, and what are the arguments presented for its passage?

It is claimed that the laboring men of this country want this bill. It has also been claimed that the farmers want it. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the great mass of laboring men and farmers want this bill. Who are the laboring men and farmers of this country? They are all of foreign stock. By far the largest number of them are sons of immigrants, and many of them are immigrants themselves. Are they so unjust that they would now deny their kinsfolk to come and dwell among them? Mr. Chairman, I can not believe it.

It is argued that the immigrant competes with American labor and causes the lowering of wages and lowers the American standard of living. I believe that this is an assertion without proof. In spite of a steady immigration wages have increased, and the American standard of living has not been lowered, but, I believe, is higher to-day than it has ever been. It is a well-known fact that the present-day immigrant becomes the unskilled laborer. The native American and the earlier immigrant are the skilled workers. It is true that the unskilled labor is cheaper than skilled labor, and hence the standard of living among the immigrants is lower than that of the skilled workers. Such a condition will always exist. Such a condition is a part of an industrial system. We have unskilled work to do. The native American will not perform unskilled labor, and we need the immigrant to advance us in industry. Since the immigrant takes up the unskilled work he does not compete with the native American skilled laborer.

It is sometimes claimed that the immigrant is detrimental to the organization of labor. The statistics of the Immigration Commission show, however, that unions are as strong among foreign born as among native Americans. The following two tables show percentages of different classes of labor organized. These two tables are taken from Senate Document No. 696, Sixty-second Congress, second session; and I want to also quote a brief statement in that document relative to this matter:

The ratio of organized workers to all male wage earners in each population group is shown in Table XIV.

TABLE XIV .- Organization of native and immigrant labor.1

Native-born of native father: White. Negro. Native-born of foreign father. Foreign-born	13.9 17.9 14.1 13.4

¹ Immigrants in Manufacturing and Mining, p. 141.

Neither could a line be drawn in respect of unionism between the "desirable immigrants" from northern and western Europe and the "undesirable allens" from southern and eastern Europe.

TABLE XV .- Organization of immigrant labor.

	Total number.	Organized.
		Number.	Percent.

Total	12,649	2,106	16.6

On the whole, the average percentage of union men among the "undestrable allens" is higher than among the immigrants of the preferred races. The percentage of trade-unionists among North Italians is nearly three times as high as among native Americans of native parentage; the Lithnanians furnish twice as many as the more desirable Englishmen; the Hebrews twice as many as the more desirable Englishmen; the Hebrews twice as many as the Swedes; the Ruthenians are far ahead of the Americans of native stock; even the South Italians can boast a percentage twice as high as the Germans; the Magyars and the Slovaks (popularly known as "Huns") march in front of the Swedes; and the Poles, who are at the tall end of the procession of undesirables from eastern Europe, still outnumber two to one their more favored kinsmen, the Bohemians and Moravians. Considering that the native Americans and the members of the races which contributed most largely to the earlier immigration are, as a rule, engaged in higher occupations, where they are for the most part segregated from the recent immigrants, it is clear that the latter could not be an obstacle in the way of organization among the skilled men; and that they have not been an obstacle is shown by the fact that the recent immigrants themselves furnish a higher percentage of organized workmen. Regardless of the opinions of the Immigration Commission, one thing seems to be well established by its statistics, viz, that there is no casual connection between immigration and the slow progress of organization among the industrial workers of the country.

Another argument presented here in favor of the application

Another argument presented here in favor of the application of the reading test is that there is too much immigration and it should be restricted. Mr. Speaker, this is an assertion without any proof. In spite of this cry of too much immigration, the ratio between foreign born and native born in the last half of a century is practically the same. Who will claim that there was too much immigration from 1850 to 1860 or from 1860 to 1870? And yet census statistics show that the percentage of foreign born and native born has not changed. The following table is taken from page 788, volume 1, on Population, Census

It is also argued that the present-day immigrant comes from a source out of harmony with the spirit of American institutions, and hence not readily assimilable on that account. The same argument was used against the old immigrants, who are now so lauded as being better than the present-day immigrant. The same narrow argument was used by those who opposed immigration in the first half of the nineteenth century. And now we find those who were so condemned then lauded to the skies. But, Mr. Speaker, do they who say that the present-day immigrant is not readily assimilable mean to argue that those immigrants who belong to these unassimilable races, who can read a page or two in their own language, will, because of that test, become readily assimilable? Such a test will not keep out the undesirable ones. Let me quote to you from the New York Tribune of May 9, 1912, on this question of assimilability:

Would any real advantage come to the country from the enactment of the Dillingham immigration bills? One familiar argument for it is that the United States is receiving immigrants now who are not readily assimilable. But it is not illiteracy that makes the immigrant from parts of southern and eastern Europe unassimilable. If he can not be assimilated, it is because his racial unlikeness to the settlers of this continent is too great. But the literacy test will keep out only a fraction of the alien races. The problem of their assimilation will remain unsolved.

Nor will the literacy test be sure to keep out the least desirable of the unsolved.

Nor will the literacy test be sure to keep out the least desirable of the arriving immigrants. It is not usually the man who can not read and write who recruits an anarchist population here. It is the "intellectual proletariat" of Europe which, coming here, congregates in cities and adds to their ferment. The man who works with his hands has always found his place readily in this country, and if he ever makes trouble, by strikes and rioting, it is only as he begins to be assimilated and to develop the American standard of living. Again, the criminals who come to this country and are one of the gravest evils of immigration are seldom of the illiterate class. Illiterates do not write Black Hand letters.

But is it true that the immigrants of to-day can not be assimilated? Whence comes these immigrants who are so different than we? Are we really not of their blood? The Italian immigrant is the one especially attacked. Mr. Speaker. a people who have builded the greatest empire of antiquity; a people whose civilization lighted the whole known world and who discovered the new; a people to whom we go for the best in literature, in art, and in government. Such people ought to be welcomed to our shores. Will anyone claim that a race that has produced a Boccaccio, a Dante, a Michaelangelo, a Columbus, a Cabot, and a Caruso can not be assimilated?

Another people against whom a stigma is cast, and against whom this bill is aimed, are the Polish people. If this bill becomes a law, over 35 per cent of these people will be rejected. The Polish people are the most unfortunate people of Europe.

They are to-day a people without a country, a race without a home. The story of their struggle for liberty touches the heart of liberty-loving people everywhere. They have been robbed of their country. Educational facilities are being denied them, and if you pass this bill where will these unfortunate people go? Thousands of these people have settled in my district and in my State. They are an industrious, hard-working, and liberty-loving people. They are a home people. They have cleared away the forest, built up nice homes, reared up large families, and many of their descendants are among the most prominent citizens of our State. Wisconsin can not get along without

Mr. Chairman, when Kosciusko and Pulaski appeared at our shores and offered their services for the cause of liberty and independence, no one asked them, "Can you read?" One of these Polish patriots gave up his life for the cause of independence. If the Father of this Republic could cast his eyes on a scene being enacted here against a people whence his aids Kosciusko and Pulaski sprang, he would condemn the

If you pass this bill, nearly 30 per cent of the Jews will be coluded. For centuries the Jew has been a wanderer on the face of the earth. Persecuted everywhere, he has outlived all. He is the pilgrim of eternity. This country has been his asylum. A race, under the most adverse circumstances, that has produced a Disraeli, a Herschel, a Rubenstein, a Spinoza, is not so out of harmony with us that we can not assimilate them. I would not vote for a bill that would deny admission to a Jew for the simple and silly reason that he can not

Mr. Chairman, time will not permit me to dwell on each and every people. Why keep out the Greek? Why the Austrian? Are they so different from us? Read and study the history of these peoples and no one will claim that they are so different they can not be assimilated. Place them in American environment and ere a generation has passed they will be one of us.

I have just mentioned a few of the peoples that will be greatly affected by the passage of this bill. But, Mr. Chairman, how about the German, the French, the Scandinavian, the Bohemian, and others that are so desirable? If this law had been in force in the first decade of this century, nearly 35,000 Germans, over 6,000 French, over 10,000 Irish, over 3,000 Hollanders, over 2,200 Scandinavians, over 1,300 Bohemians, who were all otherwise qualified, would have been denied admission on account of the literacy test. Who here would have denied these good, wholesome immigrants admission? The injustice and unreasonableness of this illiteracy can be multiplied ad

If this law had been in force the last decade, over 2,000,000 worthy immigrants would have been denied admission for the simple reason that they were illiterate.

In support of this bill the assertion is frequently made: "We do not want the illiterate of Europe." Mr. Chairman, it has do not want the illiterate of Europe." Mr. Chairman, it has been the illiterate immigrant that has been responsible for the decrease of Illiteracy in our country. What are the facts as proved by Government statistics? The United States Commisproved by Government statistics: The United States No. sioner of Education, in his letter of transmittal of Bulletin No. 51, just issued, and entitled "Education of the Immigrant.

That these people [meaning immigrants] are interested in education of their children, or at least obedient to the school-attendance laws, is shown by the fact that the least illiterate element of our children is the native-born children of foreign-born parents. The illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among the native-born children of foreign-born parents.

This statement of the Commissioner of Education is borne out by census statistics:

Class.	1890	1900	1910
Native white of native parentage. Native white of foreign or mixed parentage. Foreign-born white.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
	7.5	5.7	3.7
	2.2	1.6	1.1
	13.1	12.9	12,7

This table shows that the illiteracy among native white of native parentage is 3.7 per cent, and among native white of foreign parentage is only 1.1 per cent. In spite of a steady stream of immigration, illiterate as it may be, the percentage of illiteracy in this country has decreased. In 1890, 13.3 per cent of the people 10 years or older were illiterate; in 1900, only 10.7 per cent were illiterate; and in 1910, 7.7 per cent were illiterate. The illiteracy among the foreign-born population has also decreased. In 1890 it was 13.1 per cent; in 1900, 12.9 per cent; and in 1910, 12.7 per cent. Statistics also show that where the immigrant has settled the illiteracy is less. In the North, where practically all the immigrants from Europe have settled, the illiteracy is less than one-third that of the South, where very few have gone. The following tables are taken from the census

I have prepared a little table, taking seven States of the North, where so many immigrants have settled, and seven States where very few have gone. This table shows the percentage of foreign born in each State named and the percentage of illiteracy:

	Foreign born.	Illiterate.
North: Massachusetts New York Minnesota New Jersey Wisconsin Illinois Pennsylvania South:	Per cent. 31.5 30.2 26 26 22 21.4 18.8	Per cent. 5. 2 5. 5 5. 6 3. 2 3. 7 5. 9
Louisiana Kentucky Virginia Alabama Georgia South Carolina North Carolina	3.2 1.8 1.3 .9 .6 .4	29 12. 1 15. 2 22. 9 20. 7 25. 7 18. 5

Let us take some of the States where so many so-called illiterate foreigners have settled. In New York, where 30.2 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 5.5 per cent; in Pennsylvania, where 18.8 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 5.9 per cent; in Massachusetts, where 31.5 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 5.2 per cent; in Illinois, where 21.4 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 3.7 per cent; in Wisconsin, where 22 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 3.2 per cent. In the State of Alabama, from which comes the author of this bill, in which only nine-tenths of 1 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 22.9 per cent; in Georgia, where six-tenths of 1 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 20.7 per cent; in Kentucky, where 1.8 per cent of the population is foreign born, the illiteracy is 12.1 per cent. Oh, gentlemen will say that is due to the negro population. But compare the tables of these sections and States between the native-born whites and you will find that the illiteracy among the native-born whites of the South is also high.

Those who favor this bill cry out, "We are the dumping ground for the criminal of Europe." Mr. Speaker, it is repeatedly asserted that we do not want the criminal classes of Europe, and a statement by a certain prosecuting attorney in New Jersey is relied upon to prove that illiteracy is a badge of crime. To prove that the increase of crime in this country, if any, can not be placed at the door of the immigrant population I will insert here a table:

Prisoners.

Date enumerated.	Total, all classes.	Total foreign- born white.	Percentage of foreign-born white.
1880	58, 609	12, 105	20. 6
	82, 329	15, 932	19. 3
	81, 772	12, 945	15. 8
	111, 498	19, 438	17. 4
Committed during:	149, 691	35, 093	23. 4
1904 1	493, 934	98, 532	19. 9

 $^{\rm 1}$ The 1904 census did not include prisoners who were committed for nonpayment of fines, while the 1910 census includes them.

The foregoing table clearly demonstrates that crime better be laid somewhere else instead of at the door of our immigrants. In 1880 the percentage of foreign-born white prisoners to all prisoners was 20.6 per cent; on June 1, 1890, it was 19.3 per cent; on June 30, 1904, it was 15.8 per cent; and on January 1, 1910, it was 17.4 per cent. Of the total number of prisoners committed in year of 1904, 23.4 per cent were foreign-born white, and in year 1910 only 19.9 per cent were foreign-born white. Instead of crime being on the increase among our foreign-born population it is on the decrease; and that, too, in spite of the fact that it is repeatedly charged that the present-day immigrant is styled as an undesirable criminal, while the old immigrant was desirable.

Of the 82,329 prisoners in 1890, 80,153 spoke English, 2.060 did not. Of the 15,932 foreign-born prisoners 14,473 spoke English, 1,448 did not. Over 97 per cent of prisoners spoke English, and over 90 per cent of foreign-born prisoners spoke English. In 1904, 83 per cent of the prisoners were literate and 12.6 per cent were illiterate. Of this illiterate class 1.1 per cent could read but not write; 11.5 per cent could neither read nor write. These figures and percentages do not show that illiteracy is a sign of crime, but, on the contrary, the criminal is literate.

Mr. Chairman, now as to insanity. It is repeatedly charged that insanity is on the increase, and, of course, the whole thing is blamed on the present-day immigrant. The following table, taken from census reports, disproves the fact that the immigrant is responsible:

Insanc in institutions.

Date enumerated.	Total all classes.	Total for- eign-born white.	Percent- age of foreign- born white.
1880	91, 959	26, 334	28+
1890	106, 254	25, 300	33+
1903	150, 151	47, 078	31+
1903	187, 791	54, 758	29+
Admitted during: 1904	49, 622	13, 405	27+
	60, 769	15, 523	25+

Mr. Chairman, an examination of this table tells us to go somewhere else than to the foreign immigrant for our insanity. The same is true as to the feeble-minded.

Feeble-minded in institutions.

Date enumerated.	Total all classes.	Total for- eign-born white.	Percentage of foreign-born white.
1003. 1910 Admitted during:	14,347 20,731	856 - 1,247	5.9
1904. 1910.	2,599 3,825	182 210	7 5.4

Even pauperism is charged to the immigrant. Let us examine the figures and see:

Paupers in almshouses.
1850	50, 353
1860	82, 942
1870	76, 737
1880	66, 203
1890	73, 045
1904	81, 764 84, 198

From 1880 to 1910 I have the figures showing the number of foreign-born white paupers. In 1880 there were 22,967, or 34 per cent. In 1890 there were 27,648 foreign-born white paupers in almshouses, or 37 per cent; in 1904 there were 32,136, or 39 per cent; in 1910 there were 32,136, or 39 per cent. In 1904 there were admitted 81,412 paupers into almshouses, of whom 31,298 were foreign born, or 38 per cent; and in 1910, out of a total of 88,313 admitted, 33,353, or 37 per cent, were foreign born. These figures show that pauperism is decreasing among foreign born instead of increasing.

It is repeatedly charged that there is too much congestion of the immigrants in our large cities. Does anyone propose to remedy this by the passage of this bill? If the honorable chair-man and gentlemen of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization would study the proposition of the proper distribu-tion of immigration and present a bill for that purpose, they would do a greater service to the country than presenting and trying to jam through a bill to choke off immigration, which has been so beneficial to this country. Mr. Chairman, 10,000,000 acres of good farming land await the settler in the northern part of Wisconsin. We have in my State enough undeveloped good farm land to provide thousands of farms, thousands of The foreign immigrant has been the most potent factor in the development of this great Commonwealth. From Germany, from Austria, Bohemia and Hungary, Poland, France, Holland and Belgium, Canada, from England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and in large numbers from the three northern kingdoms, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, they came. Wisconsing gave them unstintingly of her gifts of plenty and contentment, and they have become loyal citizens of the State and the Nation. What is true of Wisconsin in this regard is true of many other States.

Mr. Chairman, let me give an analysis of the population of Wisconsin as disclosed by the census of 1910. The total population of my State in 1910 was 2,333,860. Of this number 1,807,986 were native-born whites, and 512,569 foreign-born whites; 13,305 constitute the colored population. Of the 1,807,986 native whites 1,044,761 were of foreign or mixed parentage, and 763,225 of native parentage. The total number of foreign-stock whites in my State was 1,557,330, making practically 70 per cent of the population. Mr. Chairman, a better people, a more cosmopolitan, a more industrious and prosperous people, a more home-like and peaceful people, a more liberty-loving people never lived than now live in Wisconsin. From the north of Europe we got the sturdy, stalwart Scandinavian; from the sunny gardens of Italy we got the romantic Italian; from the banks of the Rhine we got the industrious German; from the banks of the Shannon we got the versatile and wide-awake Irishman; from France the polished Frenchman; from Belgium and Holland the home building and progressive Belgian and Dutch. We have got the hard working and home-loving Poles and Bohehave got the hard working and home-loving Poles and Bone-mians; we have the despised Greek and the persecuted Jews. They have all come to our shores, and I am proud of them all. I am glad they came. Had the proposed bill been a law in the past, I am safe in saying that fully 25 per cent of these people would not have come. And because they came, Mr. Chairman, our State has prospered and grown. It has advanced in industry, in education, and in all that is good in government.

We hear much talk about congestion in cities; we talk about high cost of living and back-to-the-land movement. If this great Committee on Immigration would study and propose means whereby the immigrant would be distributed throughout our undeveloped portions of the country, one of our existing great problems would be solved.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me quote to you brief statements of some of the most prominent citizens of the country on this question. When President Cleveland vetoed an immigra-tion bill in 1897, on account of the kiteracy test, he used this language:

The ability to read and write as required in this bill, in and of itself, affords, in my opinion, a misleading test of contented industry, and supplies unsatisfactory evidence of desirable citizenship, or a proper apprehension of the benefits of our institutions. If any particular element of our illiterate immigration is to be feared for other causes than illiteracy, these causes should be dealt with directly instead of making illiteracy the pretext for exclusion to the detriment of other liliterate immigrants, against whom the real cause of complaint can not be alleged.

President Taft vetoed a similar bill for the same reason. On October 21, 1912, President Wilson wrote to Dr. Adler, of Philadelphia, as follows:

23 WEST STATE STREET, TRENTON, N. J., October 21, 1912.

Dr. CYRUS ADLER, Philadelphia Pa.

Dr. Cyrus Adler, Philadelphia Pa.

My Dear Dr. Adler: * * * I am in substantial agreement with you about the immigration policy which the country ought to observe. I think that this country can afford to use and ought to give opportunity to every man and woman of sound morals, sound mind, and sound body who comes in good faith to spend his or her energies in our life, and I should certainly be inclined, so far as I am concerned, to scrutinize very jealously any restrictions that would limit that principle in practice. * * * Cordially and sincerely, yours,

Woodrow Wilson.

WOODROW WILSON.

President Eliot, of Harvard, made the following statement on this important question:

this important question:

I beg leave to invite your attention to the following statement of the principles which should govern the national legislation on immigration:

(1) Our country needs the labor of every honest and healthy immigrant who has the intelligence and enterprise to come hither.

(2) Existing legislation is sufficient to exclude undesirable immigrants.

(3) Educational tests should not be applied at the moment of entrance to the United States, but at the moment of naturalization.

(4) The proper education test is capacity to read in English or in the native tongue, not the Bible or the Constitution of the United States, but newspaper items in some recent English or native newspaper which the candidate can not have seen.

(5) The attitude of Congress and the laws should be hospitable and not repellant.

The only questions which are appropriate are, Is he healthy, strong.

not repellant.

The only questions which are appropriate are, Is he healthy, strong, and desirous of earning a good living? Many illiterates have common sense, sound bodies, and good characters. Indeed, it is not clear that education increases much the amount of common sense which nature gave the individual. An educational test is appropriate at the time when the foreigner proposes to become a voting citizen. He ought then to know how to read.

Cardinal Gibbons used the following language:

I am not in favor of any educational test as applied to immigrants desiring to enter the United States. Such a law, if passed, would, in my opinion, work great harm, for illiteracy is by no means always ignorance. If the immigrant is industrious and thrifty, he will make a useful citizen, whether he be literate or illiterate. The educated schemer is in more ways than one more dangerous than the honest workman, even though he be illiterate.

President Schurman, of Cornell, wrote as follows:

CORNELL UNIVERSITY, Ithaca, N. Y., March 4, 1910.

Hon. Joseph F. O'Connell,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have your communication of February 23, with the inclosed copy of the letter of ex-Fresident Eliot, of Harvard University, on the subject of the admission of immigrants into the United States, I fully concur in the views expressed by President Eliot, and I do not think I can express them in clearer, more forcible, or appropriate language.

language. Very truly, yours,

J. G. SCHURMAN.

President Judson, of Chicago, wrote as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO, February 28, 1910.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO, February 28, 1910.

Hons. Joseph F. O'Connell,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: * * * I am not in favor of the restriction of immigration on the basis of the ability to read some European language. There is no doubt that the ability in question is desirable. At the same time the conditions of workingmen in the old country and their conditions in our country are radically different. If they are industrious and honest and thrifty, they will make useful citizens, and their children, having the opportunity of attending our free public schools, will acquire the needed education.

Yery truly, yours,

HARRY PRATT JUDSON.

HARRY PRATT JUDSON.

I would rather rely on the opinions of these great men than on the many who are prejudiced.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have disproved by Government statistics every argument that has been presented in support of this bill. I think I have demonstrated conclusively that the immigrant is not responsible for the things that are chargeable against him. The immigrant has in a large degree contributed to our advancement in science and industry. He has enabled us to become more literate instead of illiterate. Crime, insanity, and pauperism which have been chargeable to the immigrant have decreased instead of increased among our foreign population, and because of these facts I am convinced that the great mass of citizens of this country do not want this bill passed. [Applause,]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. GOULDEN],

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 6060, has many admirable features that command the approval of all good citizens. In the limited time allowed, I can only give a few brief reasons for my attitude on the measure

It is generally agreed, I think, that more rigid tests, morally and physically, might be applied to the admission of aliens.

I have been privileged on many occasions to witness the operations of the law at Ellis Island, and am therefore familiar with its application as well as of the character of the immigrants. I was pleased to observe the careful scrutiny of each one, and, when any doubt existed, that the benefit was given to the law and not to the alien.

There is no doubt in my mind that the time is approaching when in self-defense restrictive measures that will largely tend to reduce the number must be adopted.

The literacy test-being able to read in some language or dialect-goes too far at this time and not far enough when restricted measures are needed.

The supply for unskilled manual labor to dig cellars, grade and regulate highways, build roads, work our farms, and so forth, does not equal the demand. As a consequence our farms are being drawn on for that labor that is badly needed to properly cultivate the soil, to keep the production of the necessaries of life equal to the consumption.

Abandoned or neglected farms are the direct results of this policy. To remedy it and give the country strong, willing men able to do this heavy, hard work the countries of the Old World must furnish the supply. I know it is popular to join in the cries, "Put up the bars in New York and elsewhere," and "America for Americans." To the latter sentiment, coming from a stock that settled here more than 200 years ago, I am in hearty accord. However, as a school official for many years in New York City, I am familiar with the processes of assimilation to citizenship. Scores of evening schools are filled with thousands of men and women, 16 years of age and over, successfully securing an edu-We need these able-bodied men, women, and children for the present, and therefore I am not willing to vote for the literacy test at this time.

When the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic during the Spanish War opened volunteer recruiting places thousands of young men responded, fully one-third being of foreign birth.

If the time has arrived to put up the bars on immigration, then do what the commission, composed of nine, including five Members of Congress, who traveled all over Europe, spending three years on the work, recommended.

The commission, which was authorized by Congress in 1907, issued a report of 42 volumes and suggested seven methods by which restriction might be accomplished, namely: (a) The exclusion of those unable to read and write in some lan-

(a) The Cartason of the number of each race arriving each year to a certain percentage of the average of that race arriving during a given period of years.

(c) The exclusion of unskilled laborers unaccompanied by wives or

(c) The exclusion of unskilled laborers unaccompanied by wives or families.

(d) The limitation of the number of immigrants arriving annually at any port.

(e) The material increase in the amount of money required to be in the possession of the immigrant at the port of arrival.

(f) The material increase of the head tax.

(g) The levy of the head tax so as to make a marked discrimination in favor of men with families.

The words "and write" having disappeared from the first recommendation of the Immigration Commission, that recommendation has lost its force and should not be made the basis for the writing of a bill to revise the immigration laws. fore the second recommendation should be considered in connection with the first. This 40-word literacy test is not sufficient in itself. It will prove a failure.

Many letters from individuals and organizations, both for and against this measure, have been received, the latter usually couched in strong and sometimes offensive language. Due consideration was given to both sides, and after listening to the able debate on this question I am constrained to vote against the bill in the interest of the country.

President Cleveland in 1897 and President Taft in 1913 vetoed measures exactly similar to this bill for good and valid reasons. President Wilson, in a speech just before his election in 1912, declared for a liberal interpretation of laws on immigration, and, I feel confident, will hesitate before approving a restrictive measure of this character.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the remarks of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] that this bill must stand or fall on the literacy test, although that test is but a very small portion of the entire text of the bill. The bill is some 60 pages long, and the literacy test consumes about one-sixtieth of that space; yet it is the great factor which must determine every man in this House whether he will vote for or against. If the literacy provision were not included, I suppose there would be no great contest over passage of the bill. I for one can say unreservedly that everything in it, so far as I know, except the literacy test, calls for our support, and would be an improvement so far as it is a change from the present law. But we must rest our case, whether opponents or advocates of the bill, upon that literacy test, because there is the nub of the whole question, and there is the real crux of the issue which has been tearing this country for well-nigh a quarter of a century. I should agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] rather than with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] that a very large percentage of the type of immigration which has recently been coming into the United States should be kept out by legislation. But I can not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] that that admission carries with it the conclusion that we must vote for this literacy test or for any bill which contains the literacy test

The two things are entirely unrelated, and I say that in all deference to the great learning of the gentleman from Massa-chusetts [Mr. Gardner] on this subject, and to the great study which he has given to this bill for so many years. It is, I repeat, clear, clear beyond argument, that the two questions are entirely and totally independent, and that a man may believe in the principle of restriction of immigration and at the same time totally disagree with the principle of restriction along the lines of a literacy test. I believe that we should protect the American wage earner, not only directly through a protective tariff, but indirectly by limiting the number of men who may come to the United States and here make the things which the protective tariff is intended to exclude. But let us strive, if we can, to rest that limitation upon some logical ground and not upon a basis which is purely arbitrary—factitious, if you please—and therefore wholly indefensible in principle. The best immigrant, of course we should all agree, is that man who most closely approximates the highest type of manhood, physically, mentally, and morally; and of course we all agree also carry, mentarry, and morarry; and or course we all agree also that a very large proportion of the men who are coming to the shores of the United States every year are not nearly as close to that perfect type as we wish. It therefore seems to me that every man on this floor and in the country who is a real patriot and who really desires to see the continued well-being of the Nation must agree that a justly applied policy of restriction is inevitable.

The only question is in what direction that policy shall be applied. Now, the literacy test does of course restrict, and to that extent it is desirable. But does it have any connection whatever with the physical or the mental or the moral wellbeing of those who come to this country? I have in my hand a very recent bulletin issued by the Bureau of Education entitled "Education of the Immigrant"; as a sort of preface to the bulletin there is a letter of transmittal signed by the Commissioner of Education of the United States, Dr. Claxton, and addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, in which he uses these very significant words-and, by the way, many of you perhaps noticed the same words, or a paraphrase of them, in yesterday's Washington and New York newspapers. He says:

That these people

Referring to immigrants-are interested in the elementary education of their children, or at least obedient to the school-attendance laws, is shown by the fact that the least illiterate element of our population is the native-born children of foreign-born parents. The illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among the native-born children of foreign-born parents.

Here is the experience of an expert, and a recognized expert, in the subject with which he is dealing. Uninfluenced by the spirit of turmoil and contention which surrounds us here, he views the question from the standpoint of education and from the standpoint of the younger generation, which is growing up to be the citizenship of our country. He points out, by indirection, at least, that there is no connection between the literacy or illiteracy of the immigrants coming to this country to-day and the literacy or illiteracy of the next generation of descendants of the same immigrants. Here is a most effective refutation of the wisdom of the literacy test. That test has little or no bearing upon the good citizenship of the incoming immigrant, or of his children. It is purely an exclusion measure, based on a total lack of local. total lack of logic. It is founded upon the same sort of reasoning that might be adduced if we should enact that all blue-eyed or brown-eyed men and women should be excluded. I do not believe that in a question of this magnitude, where we are building for the future as well as for to-day, we ought to rest the fabric of the future industrial, commercial, moral, and physical life of the Nation upon an entirely unsound, illogical, and fallacious premise. Upon these grounds, Mr. Chairman, it becomes my duty to register a word of opposition against the passage of a bill which includes the literacy test. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized now. I desire to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brown].

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I shall offer several amendments to this bill, all correlated and having to do with the exclusion, deportation, and repatriation of mentally defective aliens. At the outset I wish to make it plain that, with the exception of the literacy clause, I am in favor of this bill; but I am against the literacy clause only because I believe it to be a wrong way and an ineffective way of accomplishing the desired result.

While it must surely be the purpose of the committee in reporting the literacy clause only to exclude the unfit, yet the literacy clause is founded on the assumption that illiteracy is synonymous with undesirability. The cause of danger to the American race is far deeper, as I shall endeavor to show.

Please bear in mind that the percentage of mental defect among the foreign born in the city of New York, which city I take as an example of the recent immigration from southern Europe as opposed to the older immigration from northern Europe, is 2.48 times the percentage of mental defect among the native born; and whereas the literacy clause is intended to be the means of keeping out undesirables from the southern section of Europe by taking advantage of the fact that opportunities for education there are very limited, yet the percentage of illiteracy in the hospitals of the State of New York among the foreign born is only about 13 per cent as against about 26 per cent of illiteracy among all the aliens admitted to the United States.

Therefore the literacy test will fail to exclude in any considerable quantity the most undesirable of aliens-the mentally defective—while at the same time it will exclude large numbers of highly desirable people who have had no opportunity to learn to read.

The injustice and inadequacy of the literacy clause would therefore appear to be self-evident, and the only real question before this House is the substitution of just and adequate pro-Visions in place of the literacy clause.

I come now to the point of view of the Commission on Immigration which was appointed in 1907, and reported in 1910, on whose recommendations, made after nearly four years of exhaustive investigation, this literacy clause in a modified form was presented to the last Congress. This commission, among other matters, based its conclusions upon its desire to exclude "those physically and morally unfit * * * and inefficient," "those physically and morally unfit * * * and inefficient," without any realization of the startling fact, since proven by scientific research, that an enormous proportion of disease, immorality, crime, pauperism, and inefficiency in men, with its equivalent of harlotry in women, is the result of inherited mental disease easily and directly traceable to the parents and grandparents of any individual so affected.

If it can be shown in exact arithmetical proportion what results may be expected from certain inherited qualities, are we not forced to the conclusion that the true way to maintain the glorious standard of the American race is not by a reading test of 30 words, not by a hasty mental examination at an American port, not alone by the observations of trained psychiatrists on shipboard during the long voyages to this country, for which this bill does not provide; not alone by mental examination by trained psychiatrists in the Federal service at the points of embarkation abroad, for which this bill does not provide, but in future years by the personal visit of a trained agent of this Government to the family of the intending immigrant in order that he may see for himself the inheritance which each immigrant has received from his parents, and so determine whether the children of that immigrant, as well as the man himself, be fit for American citizenship?

The amendments I shall offer do not go so far as this. I have no reason to expect that the Members of this House, without careful study of the operation of the Mendelian law as applied to the heredity of insanity, will agree with me as yet. But I do wish it known that shortly after the Immigration Commission made its report to Congress Dr. Rosanoff proved beyond the question of a doubt the existence of the neuropathic taint as a recessive character, thereby opening the way for better legislation by Congress to-day than was possible from the information before the Immigration Commission three years ago.

Criminals who are serving time are very largely of the feebleminded class—perhaps 50 per cent—although such meager figures as have been compiled would not show quite such a large percentage. In the study of these subjects we can not do better than to follow the suggestions of Signor Beltrani-Scalia, recently inspector of prisons in Italy, who said:

Leaving aside all abstract speculations and uncertain theories, it is requisite that in moral science we should follow the same path that has been so advantageously taken in the study of natural science * * * because moral facts, as well as those which are called natural facts, have a cause so to be.

If the criminal class is recruited largely from the feeble-minded, and feeble-mindedness is an inherited strain following the Mendelian law, should we not in justice to the American people write into our immigration law something better than the literacy clause?

In 1874-75 there was conducted by Robert L. Dugdale, under the auspices of the Prison Association of New York, an investigation which resulted in the tabulation of the career for five generations of the family which he called Juke. I wish briefly to refer to this family, not with any idea of showing inevitable hereditary criminality, hereditary degeneracy, or hereditary pauperism, but to show the terrific economic waste, the lack of efficiency mentioned in the report of the Commission on Immigration as one of the things to be guarded against from immigrants, because we have enough of it in this country now.

The Juke family lived in a rocky, inaccessible part of the State of New York. Five hundred and forty of their descendants, blood relatives all, and 169 related by marriage or cohabitation are registered in Mr. Dugdale's report. He assumes that collateral branches which he had no opportunity to examine would increase the number of this family to 1,200, and on the actual record of 709 Jukes that he does know about he figures the economic loss to the community for 75 years from this family of 1,200 as follows:

Over a million and a quarter dollars of loss in one family in 75 years. Without attempting to draw any conclusions in the matter of heredity, I would merely suggest that if in this known family of 709 persons in five generations there were 91 illegitimately born, 128 prostitutes, 67 syphilitics, 64 paupers, 142 who received almshouse relief, and 76 criminals, what will be the economic loss before this strain is exhausted?

I had hoped to be able to present to this House the record of the Juke family brought down to date, but I have a telegram from Dr. C. B. Davenport in charge of this work, saying that it is not vet completed.

I will, however, mention another family called "Nam," whose record by Dr. Davenport is brought down to 1912. On a balance sheet similar to the Jukes 1,795 members of this family in seven generations show an economic loss to the State of $1,411,676, but in this computation I have substituted for liquor bills an equivalent of productive labor lost.

equivalent of productive labor lost.

Again, the "Hill" family of 737 persons shows an economic loss to the community in five generations up to 1912 of $498,260.

Please remember that each of these families originated from but two people, and our immigration in some years is over a million immigrants per year. These figures must suggest careful selection of our future citizens, if only from an economic point of view.

Now, with regard to those morally unfit to enter this country, as suggested by the report of the Immigration Commission, I shall again quote a line from Signor Beltrani-Scalia:

Moral facts, as well as those which are natural facts, have a cause so to be.

During the year 1913 just passed there appeared a book called The Kallikak Family. This is the pseudonym of a family on whose illegitimate side in the sixth generation is now a girl called Deborah in an institution for the feeble-minded at Vineland, N. J. In the course of the usual investigation into the heredity and environment of the patient, this startling fact was discovered: Just prior to the Revolutionary War one Martin Kallikak, a young man of very good family, had, by the feeble-minded daughter of an innkeeper, an illegitimate son. A few years later Martin Kallikak married a normal woman of his own station in life, and their descendants to the present sixth generation have been estimable citizens, proudly bearing one of the most honored names in the Commonwealth of New Jersey. So, starting with Martin Kallikak, we have presented two branches of a great family, starting from the same head, the one branch normal, strong, creditable, an asset to the State; the other weak, feeble-minded, discreditable, a continuing liability to the State; the one whose membership comprises business and professional men of the highest repute, the other branch of the same name of whose 480 known direct descendants 143 have been feeble-minded and but 46 normal, with the rest unknown or undetermined. Can there be any doubt of the heritage of feeble-mindedness? A mere glance at the sinister Kallikak record of illegitimacy, harlotry, alcoholism, incest, and crime is sufficient.

Now, if feeble-mindedness is hereditary, along what lines does it show itself? If there were any doubt of this hereditary quality, we should scarcely expect to find the known law of biology—the Mendelian law—to be its method of transmission, yet so it is-as in plants, so in people.

The Mendelian law is named after its discoverer, an Austrian monk called Gregor Mendel. In his garden, in the year 1866, he made some experiments, crossing tall and dwarf peas, and found that the tall peas contained a "dominant" character which the dwarf peas lacked. They were "recessive" for the lack of that element which makes the tall peas tall. Mendel crossed the tall with the dwarf, and in the first generation all were tall peas. He then permitted these tall peas that had a single or simplex "recessive" strain to fertilize themselves, and found in the second generation three tall peas to one dwarf pea, and so on through subsequent generations. This law, though lost sight of until 1900, has since then been found to apply to the color of the hair, albinism, brachydactylism, and to other human traits. As I said before, Dr. Rosanoff has not only made certain of the application of the Mendelian law to the inheritance of feeble-mindedness, but in so doing has for all time put the normal mind in the "dominant" class and the feeble mind in the "recessive" class. It is comforting to have the odds 3 to 1 in one's favor even after the first generation.

Dr. Rosanoff hunted up the antecedents of some hundreds of patients who were confined in the Kings Park (N. Y.) State Hospital for the Insane, made out a table of expectancy based on the Mendellan law, and arrived at these results:

Of the 64 offspring of 17 matings all of whose parents had the neuropathic constitution, according to the Mendelian law all these 64 children would be neuropathic. Dr. Rosanoff found but 54 who were neuropathic, although 8 are still too young to be determined.

Of 169 children of 37 matings one of whose parents in each case had the neuropathic constitution, according to the Mendelian law 84½ would be neuropathic. Dr. Rosanoff found 84 neuropathic and 85 normal, and so on. I append hereto the complete table with some necessary explanations:

"Some of the data represented in the table require special explanation.

"Among the offspring which resulted from matings of the first type, RR×RR, 10 are recorded as being normal, although theoretically all should be neuropathic. Of these 10, 1 died at the age of 38 years, in an accident; during life suffered from asthma; had a son who died in convulsions. Another is described as being easy-going; is somewhat odd and, possibly, abnormal in make-up; is 29 years of age. The rest are from 8 to 22 years of age. In others words, in 2 of the 10 subjects the neuropathic constitution is not positively excluded and the remaining 8 have not reached the age of incidence.

"The matings of the second and fourth types, DR×RR and DR×DR, respectively, have been divided into two groups each, as already explained in the preceding section. Thus, groups b and d in the chart include the matings in which the simplex condition of either or both mates, as the case may be, is definitely ascertained, the existence of neuropathic manifestations either in ancestors or in collateral relatives of the subjects appearing in the pedigrees. Groups b1 and d1, on the other hand, include the matings in which the simplex condition of either or both mates is assumed to exist on the basis of the character of the offspring. It is perhaps not surprising that groups b1 and d2 are larger than d3 and d4 respectively, when we consider the great likelihood of a neuropathic taint, derived from an ancestor of a remote generation, being transmitted many times in the shape of a simplex condition, and, at the same time, the fact that our investigations extended in almost all cases no further back than the generation of grandparents."

That The Kallikak Family was not written by Dr. Goddard in order to prove the application of the Mendelian law is shown by his brief reference to the law on pages 109 to 117. I asked Dr. Rosanoff to take just such information as was tabulated in The Kallikak Family and see if the theoretical expectation according to the Mendelian law corresponded with the facts

I now present the following table for the Record, in condensed form, and will only comment on it to the extent that out of a total of 502 cases there was only a difference between the theoretical expectation and the actual findings of two offspring. I do not pretend that from the meager facts which I have presented in the original investigations of Dr. Rosanoff, mentioned above, and his application of the Mendelian law to The Kallikak Family, that we are in possession of all the scientific facts which will be necessary before we can arrive at the proper solution of the problems of crime, pauperism, and degeneracy, but I do think they are sufficient to show the tendency of modern scientific research, and that the Members of this House should not be satisfied with the now antiquated findings of the Immigration Commission with regard to mental disease in its application to the problem of immigration.

The great State of New York is more interested, probably, than any other State, because, as Chairman Burnett suggests on page 5 of his report on this bill, it costs the State nearly $4,000,000 a year to take care of the alien insane who have slipped past the immigration authorities because of the insufficiency of the present law and its nonenforcement because of lack of funds.

Before I proceed to show what burdens are now unjustly placed on the State of New York and other States in varying amounts, I wish to refer briefly to the history of immigration legislation in order to show what is the mess of pottage for which the State of New York sold its birthright to protect itself from the influx of undesirables.

As far back as 1847 the State of New York created a commission of emigration, whose duty it was to properly safeguard and help to employment all the alien immigrants arriving at the port of New York for a period of five years after their arrival, the funds for which purpose were created by a small commutation payment by each immigrant. Between the years 1847 and 1855 this State emigration commission paid to the State of New York $2,250,000 as the State's share of the cost of the support of those aliens who within five years had become a public charge. The following table shows the efficiency of the service rendered by the commissioners of emigration in caring for the aliens with funds paid by themselves between May 5, 1847, and December 31, 1872:

5, 033, 392

Number of alien immigrants arrived at the port of New York from May 5, 1847, to December 31, 1872, for whom commutation money was paid.

Of which number the commissioners of emigration provided and cared for out of the emigrant fund for a greater or less period during the five years subsequent to arrival, as follows:

On August 3, 1882, the Federal Government assumed control of the alien problem and assessed a tax on shipowners of 50 cents for each alien passenger landed at the ports of the United States. The act of August 3, 1882, provided in part that the Secretary of the Treasury should provide for the support and relief of such immigrants as may fall into distress or need public aid under the rules and regulations to be pre-scribed by said Secretary. For the time being it recognized the principle of relieving local communities from the burden of helpless immigrants, and permitted all those who became public charges within one year after their arrival from causes ex-isting prior to landing to be deported and their expenses while dependent prior to deportation to be paid to the local authorities by the steamship companies. By the act of March 3, 1903, aliens who are found to be public charges from causes existing prior to landing could be deported at any time within two years. The period of deportation was again extended by the amendment of February 20, 1907, when the period of deportation was made three years. This act of February 20, 1907, still recognized the principle of Federal responsibility for dependent aliens in the following terms:

The money ($4 head tax) so collected, together with all fines and rentals collected under the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a permanent immigration fund, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to defray the expenses of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States under said laws, including the contract labor laws, the cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts and digests thereof for use of the Commissioner General of Immigration, and the salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce the said laws.

As the last straw to break the camel's back, the act of March 4, 1909, provided that

On and after July 1, 1909 (35 Stats., p. 982), all head tax collected pursuant to the provisions of section 1 of the said act of February 20, 1907, together with all fines and rentals collected and moneys received from other sources under the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Since July 1, 1909, about a million dollars a year has been covered into the general fund of the Treasury over what has been spent in the enforcement of the immigration law, thereby making out of the head tax a revenue measure.

At the port of New York alone ex-Commissioner Williams has publicly stated in 1912 that this Government annually collects over $3,000,000 in revenue through the head tax imposed on immigrants who arrive at Ellis Island, which is more than twice the amount appropriated for expenditures there, and as a final climax the Secretary of Labor last month issued an order that after January 1, 1914, no further payment should be made for the care of deportable aliens in State institutions between the time of their certification for deportation and their actual embarkation. The amount received for this last purpose by the State of New York during the past few years has, of course, been small, but it shows the tendency of legislation and the utter neglect of the Federal Government even to use the money which it requires that each alien shall pay into the Public Treasury before he can enter the United States for the care and maintenance of the very aliens who pay in this money. I claim that the head tax was never intended as a revenue measure; that since 1909 immeasurable injustice has been done to the States which have had to harbor dependent aliens who with reasonable amendments to the immigration law and an adequate enforcement of its provisions should have been originally excluded from our shores.

As I have said, Mr. Burnett, on page 5 of his report to accompany this bill, refers to the fact that it costs the State of New York nearly $4,000,000 a year to take care of its alien insane. According to the enumeration made February 10, 1912, there were in the State hospitals of the State of New York 13,163 foreign-born patients. It costs the State of New York $262 per annum for each patient, which makes a total of $3,448,706 expended by the State of New York in the year 1912 for the maintenance of the alien insane. The average hospital life of each patient is 11 years, so that if the alien insane continue to be admitted to the hospitals of the State of New York in the same numbers as in the year 1912, the State stands confronted with the necessity of raising by taxation the sum of $37,935,766 to care for 13,163 of the alien insane during their hospital lives. I maintain that if Congress would adopt some amendments to this bill based on information acquired after the Immigration Commission had reported to Congress, this staggering outlay to the State of New York could largely be saved, and the States of New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Indiana, Illinois, West Virginia, and South Carolina especially, which are cooperating with the State hospital commission of the State of New York in the endeavor to present this deplorable situation in its true light-not to mention the other States which are less directly affected-would all be saved their proper proportion.

In conclusion I append a bibliography for the convenience of any Member who may be interested, and I will merely say that my amendments are offered to perfect a very good bill which has as its chief weakness the literacy clause. With due regard for the admirable report of the Immigration Commission on other subjects, I nevertheless believe that the subject of mental defect is worthy of more thought than was given it by the commission. Of the 41 volumes of the commission's report, only 24 pages are devoted to its consideration, and this brief comment finishes as follows:

as follows:

The situation with respect to insanity among immigrants, as indicated by the data and authorities upon which this report is based, may be summarized as follows: Although the immigration of mentally unsound aliens is prohibited by law, and although many mentally diseased or defective aliens are turned back at the ports of entry, there are in the United States many thousands of insane or feeble-minded persons of foreign birth. It appears that insanity is relatively more prevalent among the foreign born than among the native born, and relatively more prevalent among certain immigrant races or nationalities than among others. In general, the nationalities furthest advanced in civilization show, in the United States, a higher proportion of insane than do the more backward races. For the high ratio of insanity among the foreign born, several causes have been assigned, and while it is difficult to determine the values of the various factors, it is probably true that racial traits or tendencies have a more or less important influence. A further cause of mental disease is probably to be found in the total change in climate, occupation, and habits of life which the majority of immigrants experience after arrival in the United States.

The provisions of the immigration law of 1907 for the exclusion of mentally unsound persons are seemingly complete and comprehensive, while the enforcement of such provisions is doubtless as satisfactory as can be expected, in view of conditions under which arriving immigrants must be inspected.

In view of the facts previously stated in my remarks, I can not agree with the commission.

In the light of recent scientific research, I am forced to the belief that, by reason of the inherited qualities of mental soundness or defect, this House in this legislation must now decide whether, by adopting the unjust and inefficient literacy decides it will have an adopting the unjust and inefficient literacy clause, it will burden our splendid and unequaled race with defectives, degenerates, and criminals through unnumbered generations, or whether, by rejecting the literacy clause and by substituting therefor some wise amendments, it will admit the progenitors of normal, sane, and industrious citizens, whose good qualities through the years to come will be transmitted unimpaired to their sturdy American descendants.

good qualities through the years to come will be transmitted unimpaired to their sturdy American descendants.

I expect to offer the following amendments:

On page 7 strike out all beginning with line 15, down to and including the word "Provided," in line 24, page 8, as follows:

That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips, of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through

On page 20, line 1, strike out all after the word "landing" to the word "passenger" in line 5, and substitute the follow-

The Secretary of Labor shall assign a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, not lower in rank than assistant surgeon, trained in psychiatry, who shall be received and carried on each vessel transporting immigrant passengers.

On page 20, in line 25, strike out the words "if requested by the examining board."

On page 38, line 15, strike out the word "three" and substitute the word "five."

On page 38, in line 16, strike out the words "from causes existing prior to the landing" and substitute "unless the said alien can show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that the causes for becoming a public charge did not exist prior to the landing."

On page 42, line 6, strike out the word "may" and substitute the word "shall."

On page 42, line 9, strike out the words "in like manner" and substitute "at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act," so as to read:

He shall employ a suitable person for that purpose who shall accompany such alien to his or her final destination, and the expense incident to such service shall be defrayed at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

On page 42 add a new section, to be know as section 20 a, to read as follows:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful for the owner, agent, or master of a transportation company or vessel engaged in the transportation of aliens into the United States to refuse to sell tickets for transportation to his or her native country or, having sold tickets for such transportation, to receive on board, any alien who was brought to the United States by a vessel owned by such transportation company or owner, or his or their legal successors or assigns, who, at the time that application for such ticket shall be made, shall be an inmate of any institution in the United States which is supported wholly or in part by public funds: Provided, That the arrival of such alien by a vessel owned by such transportation company or owner shall be verified by a United States commissioner of immigration: Provided further, That it shall be certified by the superintendent or principal medical officer of such public institution that such alien inmate is in condition to travel with safety to himself or herself or others: Provided further, That such alien inmate is not suffering from a quarantinable disease: Provided further, That when necessary for the safety of such alien inmate, a suitable attendant shall be provided without expense to such transportation comany or owner.

That any person, including the owner, agent, or master of any transportation company or vessel, who shall refuse to sell tickets for the transportation of such alien inmates or, having sold such tickets, shall refuse to receive such alien inmates on board, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall on conviction be punished by fine not exceeding $500 for each and every such alien inmate for whom transportation is received or who is not received on board.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, some objection is made to going on to-night later than half past 6 o'clock, and if I can have an agreement-I know it has to be taken up in the House-but if I can have an understanding that we will run until 6.30 tonight and then meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow I will state I am willing to make the motion that the committee rise at 6.30, and I would like to know whether there is any objection to that now, because I would not want some gentleman, after we have made that kind of an arrangement, to make objection after we get into the House

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman, as far as I am concerned, I have no objection to it, although I announced at the beginning of the session to-day that I would raise the point of no quorum unless there was an arrangement as to how long we would sit.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE. To reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not submitted a request for unanimous consent. He simply made a statement.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman submitted a statement, and I would like to speak to that just a minute, so that he may hear it. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman to quit at 6 o'clock to-night, in view of the fact that he wants to start an hour earlier to-morrow? Quite a number of gentlemen are anxious to get away to-morrow afternoon, and some have engagements for to-night. We are beyond the usual time for adjourning now. If the gentleman will quit at 6 o'clock, I think there will be no objection to his proposition to resume at 11 in the morning.

Mr. BURNETT. I would not want to do that, because I think we had a tentative agreement to the other effect. That would leave three hours for general debate to-morrow; and if we have this understanding the gentleman need not stay who do not wish to speak. If there is going to be objection, I would run on and try to get a quorum. If there is no objection gentlemen would be at perfect liberty to go on and keep their engagements.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The rivers and harbors bill is being considered. The committee is sitting and they are going to meet to-morrow morning at half past 10, and I want to be here to listen to this discussion.

Mr. BURNETT. If there is going to be objection, I will withdraw any request and go on.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, before that is done—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time which is being now consumed is being charged to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. MANN. I think it ought not to be charged to him. It is impossible to reach a unanimous agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Committee of the Whole to enter into an agreement. Mr. MANN. It is possible to consider a unanimous-consent proposition without its being charged to the time of the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it will not be charged to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. MOORE. We are trying to come to an understanding, and it seems to me we should know now between the three elements directing the matter in the House how much time has been consumed, and we may be able to formulate our plans for to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] has consumed 88 minutes; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], 62 minutes; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] has consumed 45½ minutes—195½ minutes in all.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] that we had better rise?
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE], if I can not reach an agreement.

Mr. MANN. Let us see if we can not reach an understanding on this. I hope there may be no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow, if we adjourn at 6.30 to-night. I think that is to the convenience of nearly everybody.

Mr. BURNETT. I am willing to do that if gentlemen will indicate that there will be no objection. But as long as men are talking about objecting, I want to go on with the work.

Mr. SABATH. I wish to say, personally, that I have no objection to going on until 6.30, although some gentlemen think we are to adjourn at 6 or soon thereafter. Now, if the gentleman would consume the 15 minutes now, that would bring us until 5 minutes after 6, and then we could rise.

Mr. MANN. Let him put somebody else in. Mr. SABATH. You have somebody else here? Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman-Mr. BURNETT. I do not yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I trust the gentleman will yield, because I can raise a point of no quorum, and I do not desire to Mr. BURNETT. What does the gentleman suggest, then?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What I suggest is this: That you will use whatever time you wish up to half past 6, not asking us to use any of our time.

Mr. BURNETT. I will not agree to that. I will agree to use 20 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. And then rise?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir. If the gentleman is without speakers, that is a very unjust request.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. But there ought to be plenty in the Chamber.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will

Mr. MANN. While the Chair is counting a quorum I suggest to all gentlemen that it is better to be good-natured.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen are apparently without speakers to consume the time. Mr. MANN. That can be easily arranged afterwards. The question is whether we will agree to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. So far as that is concerned, it is a question whether it is more important for me to be here or in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. But I shall not object to the 11 o'clock arrangement.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to the 11 o'clock arrangement if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] objects to the proposition I have made, namely, that he use the time and then rise.

Mr. BURNETT. All right. Mr. Chairman, I ask that we

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. Abercrombie].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Abercrombie] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Chairman, in the opinion of many people no subject more important than that of the proper regulation of immigration will come before this Congress. It bears directly or indirectly upon a number of our most difficult problems, among which may be mentioned those of capital and labor. production and consumption, poverty and crime, education and government. In fact, it touches and influences almost every phase of our America life.

THE FIRST SETTLERS.

The American continent was settled by members of the Anglo-Saxon race who sought escape from injustice and oppression in other lands-people of intelligence, character, and independence, who were willing to make the sacrifices and undergo the hardships incident to the development of a new country in order that they and their descendants might enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. They came to build homes and establish a civilization. They were possessed of a common purpose, and no racial dissimilarities existed as barriers to easy and complete homogeneity. As a result, though there were differences in language and custom, amalgamation was natural and rapid.

The original settlers came chiefly from Great Britain, Germany, Scandinavia, and other Teutonic countries in northern western Europe, and those countries furnished a large majority of the newcomers until within the last third of a century. In the beginning nobody dreamed even that there might ever come a time when there would be a great influx of dissimilar and unassimilable peoples.

Then came the unfortunate conflict of the sixties. The country—the whole country—was left in confusion and distress, a third of it in the depths of poverty, darkness, and despair. For the next two or three decades all hands and hearts and minds were turned toward the rehabilitation of personal fortunes and the reconstruction of local, State, and Federal Governments; and almost before it was realized, certainly before it was realized by many, the present tremendous and perplexing problem of immigration confronted the country.

RECENT IMMIGRATION.

A wonderful change in the composition of our citizenship as it relates to ethical standards and racial characteristics has taken place during the last third of a century. Within that period immigration from northern and western Europe has grown smaller year by year, while that from southern and eastern European countries has increased until it has reached enormous and bewildering proportions. In its report on this phase of the subject the Immigration Commission of 1907 says:

During the fiscal year 1907, in which the commission was created, a total of 1,285,349 immigrants were admitted to the United States. Of this number 1,199,566 were from Europe, including Turkey in Asia, and of these 971,608, or 81 per cent, came from the southern and eastern countries, including Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Greece, Italy, Montenegro, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Syria, and Turkey.

Twenty-five years earlier, in the fiscal year 1882, 646,764 European and Syrian immigrants came to the United States, and of these only 83,320, or 12.9 per cent, came from the countries above enumerated, while 563,170, or 87.1 per cent, were from Belgium, the British Isles, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Scandinavia, and Switzerland, which countries furnished 95.8 per cent of the total immigration movement from Europe to the United States between 1819 and 1883.

During the entire period for which statistics are available—July 1, 1819, to June 30, 1910—a total of 25,447,180 European immigrants, including 163,747 from Turkey in Asia, were admitted to the United States. Of these, 15,968,689, or 62.8 per cent, came from the northern and western countries enumerated, and 9,478,491, or 37,2 per cent, from southern and eastern Europe and Turkey in Asia.

An average of approximately a million aliens come annually into the United States, more than fourteen hundred thousand coming within the last 12 months. From almost every country in the world they come. Until within a recent period comparatively few of them located in the Southern States, but of recent years they are locating there in increasing numbers. Some of the far Western States are receiving many Asiatics, and as a result that section is threatened with a "yellow peril."

This mad rush of foreigners to our shores is perhaps the most remarkable social and economic phenomenon of the current third of a century; yet few people, even among the most intelligent and observant, have realized the number and the immensity of the problems which it imposes. These problems are at once social and economic, civic and industrial, ethical and racial.

Practically all of the earlier immigrants came of the same race, or branches of the same race, and were therefore easily welded into a homogeneous body, while many of those who are now coming in a mighty stream are dissimilar from the first settlers in race, in language, in customs, in ideals, and in possibilities of development and assimilation. Almost every section now faces a race problem, no two being exactly alike. To complicate the situation, our negro population is increasing rapidly, the number having grown within a half century from four to ten millions, most of whom are located in the same section.

It would seem, therefore, that the problem of the races is sufficiently grave, complicated, and embarrassing without our encouraging the coming of other and differing peoples. [Applause.]

COMPLETE ASSIMILATION IMPOSSIBLE.

It has been suggested by certain students of sociology and ethnology that these great and ever-changing multitudes of dis-similar peoples will in the course of time become so intermingled, so completely amalgamated, as to form a new and distinct race which will supplant the original Anglo-Saxon stock and be superior to any one of the component races. Few of us are ready to believe that such a result is possible; fewer still that it is probable. All ethnologic history teaches the contrary. No hybrid or mongrel people has ever excelled or equaled the superior of the species involved in its production. [Applause.]

But when we take into consideration the tremendous influx of newcomers whose birth rate is large, the constantly and rapidly increasing negro population, and the declining birth rate among native Americans of Anglo-Saxon origin, there seems to be reason for the fear that the time may come when this country will be made up, if not of a mongrel race, then of groups of peoples of dissimilar races and nationalities. In fact, this is true to-day in a number of the large cities.

In some sections, especially in the larger cities, the problem of the immigrant is almost as perplexing as is the race problem of the Southern States. Indeed, it is believed by some to be a problem more difficult of solution, for in the South we have solved our problem, partially at least, by decreeing that there shall be no blood amalgamation. [Applause.]

SOME ASPECTS OF THE PROBLEM.

Among the more interesting and at the same time the more discouraging aspects of the immigrant problem may be mentioned the following:

1. The already large and rapidly increasing number. At the present rate of increase the time is not far distant when each State and each community in each State will have in its midst many aliens, a large percentage of whom have no regard for our institutions, no appreciation of our civic and ethical ideals, and no desire to become American citizens.

2. The character of the immigrant. Many are steeped in ignorance and superstition, undeveloped morally and physically, victims of disease—characterless, moneyless, and criminal. Of course, this is not true of all; we know that certain classes of immigrants are intelligent and well developed physically, mentally, and morally.

3. Their tendency toward clannishness. Large sections of our great cities have already been given over to them almost completely. I recall no large city in the entire country that has not its foreign element and its foreign section. This makes the administration of government more difficult and more expensive.

4. Their low standards of living. Oppressed for ages, accustomed to the weakening and degrading standards of overpopulated countries, inured to the restrictions and hardships of poverty, thousands of them are able to exist upon smaller wages than our native people require. The result is that our natives can not live comfortably and contentedly in competition with them. This develops prejudice and friction; tends to lower our own standards of living; swells the number of the unemployed; aggravates the differences between capital and labor; and creates numerous civic, social, and economic problems.

5. Their racial characteristics. The color of thousands of them differs materially from that of the Anglo-Saxon, and with other racial characteristics constitutes a standing barrier to that homogeneousness so essential in a democracy. The highest form of democracy can not exist where the citizenship is made up of races that for ethnological reasons can not blend without the deterioration of the superior race. Wherever the Caucasian and other races have existed upon the same soil there have been great and unavoidable antagonisms.

IMMIGRATION IMPOSES MIGHTY OBLIGATION.

Upon all who value the privileges and appreciate the duties of citizenship, the problem of immigration imposes a tremendous obligation. Upon Members of Congress, especially, the obligation rests most heavily. It is our bounden duty to seek a solution. Wherein lies that solution? If to be found anywhere, I believe, with the Immigration Commission and with the Committee on Immigration, that the best immediately available solution will be found in restriction, distribution, and education, and that, under existing conditions, the educational test should be applied, at least temporarily and in moderation, at the very threshold. [Applause.]

The bill under consideration seeks to minimize the number of immigrants by adding to the excludable list those over 16 years of age who are unable to read some language or dialect, upon the idea that this plan offers the most effective method of further restricting the admission of those who are most likely to make undesirable citizens or residents. Since ignorance and idleness, illiteracy and weakness, shiftlessness and inefficiency, pauperism and criminality usually go hand in hand, we can not admit large numbers possessing these characteristics without en-dangering American institutions, without jeopardizing democratic ideals. [Applause.]

It is but natural that those whose ability to continue to reap enormous and unearned profits depends upon an unlimited supply of the cheapest and most servile of alien labor should object to anything that would tend to diminish that supply.

EDUCATION OF IMMIGRANT

But our duty does not end with the admission of the immigrant. As far as it is possible under nature's limitations we should encourage his assimilation. If we can not take the immigrant into our homes, we can assist him in building homes of his own; if we can not in safety mingle our blood with his, we can encourage him to protect his own blood; if we can not admit him to our schools, we can aid him in conducting schools for himself; if we can not at once clothe him with citizenship, we can teach him the principles of democracy; if he will not accept our civilization forthwith, we can by precept and example lead him gradually to appreciate its beauties. words, we can educate him. Indeed, outside of the processes of education there is no permanent solution to any problem. The immigrant and immigrant's child, as well as the native and the native's child, must be instructed in the history, the theories, the practices, and the ideals of Americanism. [Applause.]

The first step in this education will be to instruct in the use of our language. With the parents this process will be slow and in many cases unsatisfactory. With their children it will be rapid and more satisfactory. Having taught the immigrant and his child the use of the means of communication, the other processes will follow with less of effort.

In this education, where the number of immigrants is smaller than the native population and there is no great racial dissimilarity, the ordinary public schools may be employed; but in the beginning it may be necessary to establish special schools with specially trained teachers. In communities made up wholly or almost wholly of illiterate immigrants teachers should be selected from those races which predominate in num-In communities made up bers, and such teachers should be trained by native instructors.

It will be necessary in many places to utilize the night school, since the parents and many of the children will probably find it necessary to work during the daytime. Indeed, in many localities the natives as well as the foreigners can best be reached with education in night classes. That this is true has been demonstrated by the Young Men's Christian Association.

Again, in the education of the immigrant and his child the vocational or trade school can be made an effective agency. Too many of our people, both native and foreign born, grow into manhood and womanhood without the training necessary for a successful performance of life's everyday duties. Vocational education, training for productivity and self-support, is one of our greatest social, civic, and economic needs, and this form of education can not be omitted in the adequate preparation of the newcomer for life in our land. [Applause.]

Along with the education of the immigrant should go also organized and cooperative efforts upon the part of local, State, and Federal Governments to assist him in securing honorable and lucrative employment. We should see to it that he receives wages that will enable him and his family to live on a standard not far below that of the natives of the same class and occupation. To that end immigrants should be discouraged from isolating themselves and settling in communities made up entirely of foreigners.

The problem of the immigrant, like the problem of the negro, would be less difficult if the immigrant population could be distributed more evenly throughout the country. It is perfectly natural for newcomers, if left to themselves, to congregate in isolated localities. This is shown by the fact that large sections of our great cities have been monopolized by them.

If a large portion of those who come to us from other countries come with low standards of living and low ethical ideals, it is because they have been neglected and oppressed in the countries from which they come; and that fact only makes our duty all the plainer, all the more binding. We are our brother's keeper, and our brother is our fellow man wherever he may be found. [Applause.]

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL

That American institution which promises to play a greater part than any other in the solution of the problem of the immigrant is the public school. Universal education of the right kind in free government works wondrous changes. The question is whether this agency is so organized and administered as to meet the requirements of the situation. Has there been a serious and effective effort to adapt the school system to the needs of the immigrant child?

This question as it relates to the entire country must be answered in the negative. It is stated that the reformatories of the country are the recipients of a large number of immigrant children; that the number is greatly disproportionate to the percentage of immigrant population. It is stated also that the percentage of immigrant criminals, youthful and adult, is far greater in proportion to population than that of native citizens.

If these statements be true, may not these conditions come from ignorance of laws and customs rather than from moral turpitude? In either case can there be a remedy quite so efficacious as the influence of the public school?

CONCLUSION.

After all, no man can tell what is to be the result of our efforts to assimilate the millions who are flocking to our shores; that is known only to the Most High. But this we do knowthat he who serves fellow man aright serves self and home and country and God.

In this faith let us indulge the hope that the time will come when all the people of our glorious country, both native and foreign born, will be intelligent, educated, moral, law-abiding, prosperous, and happy; when the proudest boast of each will be, "I am an American citizen." [Applause.] Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly] is recognized.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, having the honor of representing the greatest industrial district in the United States, I have gone into this question to the very best of my ability, and I may say that I am firmly convinced that the best interests of those communities that make up the industrial centers of this country demand the passage of this bill.

I shall vote for this bill because I believe it means the best interests, not only of America as a Nation, but of the immigrants themselves, those who are already here and those who, unless immigration is restricted, would continue coming to our shores in great numbers.

This last phase is one which is seldom, if ever, considered, but I maintain that it is most important. By the very force of numbers, passing the bounds of assimilation, the illiterate and ignorant immigrant, does not and can not secure a fair chance here, nor can his treatment square with the demands of common

The illiterate immigrant is the victim of unscrupulous rascality from the time he leaves his cottage home in the Old World until he becomes part of the human maelstrom in our great industrial centers, where the vast majority of these newcomers finally gravitate.

Evil seduction awaits him on every hand. He is misdirected, cheated, and deceived at every turn. He is preyed upon by the extortioner and the grafter; he is despoiled by the faker. Crooked officers of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the content of the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines, and he is the law trap him for fines are the law trap him for fines and he is the law trap him for fines are th helpless victim of countless indignities, while he is surrounded by every kind of evil and cut off from every influence for good. I have seen these conditions at first hand, but if anyone should think that I am dealing in exaggeration, I would refer him to the summary of the annual report of the bureau of industries and immigration of New York State for the year ending Sep-

In the matter of distribution of labor, that this State is without any machinery for distribution or supervision of private distribution agencies, except through a law administered by separate cities according to the standard and belief of each individual mayor, although a great part of the furnishing of labor is intercity and interstate.

In the matter of transportation, that the combination of steamship agents, emigrant hotels, runners, porters, expressmen, and cabmen throughout the country, operating chiefly through New York City, forms one of the most stupendous systems for fleecing the alien from the time he leaves his home country until he reaches his destination in America, and vice versa.

In the matter of living and labor

he leaves his home country until he reaches his destination in America, and vice versa.

In the matter of living and labor conditions in labor camps and colonies, that aliens are discriminated against in regard to housing, sanitation, food supplies, and employment methods, being denied the ordinary decencies of life; that in regard to labor conditions, aliens are checked and tagged, amounts ordered by the padroni are deducted from their wages without their knowledge or express sanction, and exploitations occur in hospital charges and the purchase of supplies.

In the matter of industrial calamities and personal injuries, exploitation by lawyers and their runners and claim agents and collection agents bear heavily on the alien because of his alienship and international complications with his family and property in his home country.

In the matter of savings, that the private banking laws are affording only a small measure of protection, owing to evasions of the law, and no protection whatever outside of cities of the first class; that frauds in the sale of homes to aliens by means of the solving of puzzles or by means of excursions arranged to interest aliens in "show" pieces of property, or by other means, are widespread; and that the settlement of affairs in the old country, when an alien wishes to settle here, is in the hands of a most unscrupulous class of lawyers, notaries public, collection agents, information bureaus, and protective leagues.

In the matter of education for children, that inadequate provisions exist for taking care of groups of people who collect with the starting of new industries in remote places, such as mines and quarries, and that adults outside of cities are wholly neglected in matters of instruction in English, civics, and naturalization. There are no systematic assimilation processes by the State and cities under way except in the largest cities.

Such an indictment—and no one acquainted with actual con-

Such an indictment-and no one acquainted with actual conditions can doubt its accuracy—proves that the glorious opportunities for the oppressed of other lands are largely composed of the shimmering fabric of which dreams are made

Not only that, but after he has secured employment the illiterate foreigner is under a handicap not only discouraging but deadly. Pennsylvania's record can be used here, for no other State receives more of the lowest class of immigrants than that great industrial Commonwealth. And I contend that that record shows that there is a very vital and very real connection be-tween the ignorance betokened by illiteracy and the gory death and accident tolls of industry

Every year 45,000 able-bodied workers are sent to the surgeon or the undertaker as the result of accidents while at their daily occupations in the mines and mills and factories of Pennsylvania. It is a fearful waste of life and limb, and every accident entails suffering and privation not only for the victim himself but for his helpless dependents. Still, of all the myriad industries of the Keystone State there is but one which demands that the worker knowingly take his life in his hand every time he enters the plant-that is the manufacture of dynamite, blasting powder, and high explosives. Death is always at the side of the worker in this industry, and his grim shadow is ever at hand. In that industry in Pennsylvania, according to the report of the Secretary of Internal Affairs at hand, there are 740 persons employed—553 Americans and 108 foreigners, a pre-ponderance of Americans found in but few industries of the

In this deadly occupation the year's accident toll is three, one fatal and two nonfatal.

The same report shows that making iron and steel and cement and mining bituminous and anthracite coal are more hazardous occupations by far than making dynamite. The reason is not hard to find to anyone who will go through the statistics of the report, for it stands out so vividly that all who run may read.

In these other industries mentioned a large majority of the upployees are of the lowest and most ignorant class. In the employees are of the lowest and most ignorant class. In the pig-iron industry 4,997 Americans are employed and 8,290 foreigners. A year's record shows 42 fatal accidents and 1,994 nonfatal.

In the steel works that have rolling mills and make a finished product 22,421 Americans are employed and 30,331 foreigners. The death toll for a year is 166, with 10,200 nonfatal injuries.

In the bituminous coal industry 45,531 Americans are employed and 107,728 foreigners. There are 449 fatal accidents a year and 4,151 nonfatal.

In the anthracite coal industry 51,567 Americans and 86,105 foreigners are employed. The accident report shows 539 fatal and 3,360 nonfatal in a year.

In the cement industry 3,598 Americans are employed and 5,928 foreigners. Twenty-three workers are killed in a year and 435 are seriously but not fatally injured.

In other words, only 1 out of every 740 employees of dynamite factories loses life as a result of the risk of the industry, and 1 out of 370 employees is injured, while in the mining of anthracite coal 1 of every 255 workers is killed and 1 of every 41 is injured every year. In the mining of bituminous coal 1 of every 340 workers is killed and 1 of every 36 injured. cement industry 1 of every 414 workers is killed and 1 of every 22 is injured. In the pig-iron industry 1 of every 316 workers is killed and 1 of every 7 is injured. In the steel industry 1 of every 310 workers is killed and 1 of every 5 is injured.

Wherever the ignorant and illiterate aliens outnumber the Americans in an industry you will read the sure result in the ghastly records of the carnage of peace. The toll is greater in four years of industrial record than in four years of the fratricidal strife of the sixties. I claim that much of this frightful waste of life and limb is due to the ignorance of the foreigners, and they pay the red penalty of their ignorance to the fuil degree. They suffer in themselves, and they also brand America as a Nation where no regard is paid to humanity in industry and where human life is the cheapest commodity of them all.

The secretary of internal affairs of Pennsylvania recognizes that fact and states it in the report to the Bureau of Industrial Statistics, published in 1911. He has the following to say on the subject:

the subject:

Notwithstanding all the laws safeguarding employees in the mining industry, too many needless accidents continue to occur. These, to a large degree, are due to the employment of inexperienced foreigners, who neither speak nor understand the English language, and consequently, through ignorance, many become maimed or lose their lives. Of the 86,105 foreigners employed in anthracite mining a majority never saw a coal mine before landing in this country, hence it is not a strange thing that they place in jeopardy their own and coworkers' lives. The mine law requires two years' experience as a miner or miner's laborer before being granted a certificate by the examining board, but many of the men hold certificates obtained through fraud or transferred to them by their compatriots upon returning to their native land.

If his deduction is true regarding an industry where the law requires experience, what must be said of industries where no such requirement is made.

I hold it true that, viewed from the standpoint of the immigrant, his illiteracy and the ignorance and untrained mind it betokens means danger to himself. He is responsible for the application to humanity of the commercial formula that the greatest efficiency is reached by working every machine to the utmost and then throwing it on the scrap heap. The railroad expert says that is true of the locomotive, and though it breaks down in a short time, it is not sent to the repair shop, but to the scrap heap, because it is found that replacement is cheaper than repair.

That is the system of modern commercialism, which is as hard as adamant and as cold as the polar ice. It demands the maximum of product for the minimum of outlay. It takes new, young human engines, works them to the breaking point, and then throws them on the scrap heap. They start in young and vigorous and strong, but the fires burn down, their running record falls, and their usefulness is declared at an end.

scrap heap is always in sight and there are always men who clamor for the places left vacant.

That is the real reason for many of the crying evils of industry, to remedy which legislation has been passed or is proposed. We have heard of the blacklist, and it has been one of the most feared and hated powers of employing corporations. But the blacklist possesses terrors simply because there are more men than jobs. Men fear it because industrial opportunities are few compared with the number of men seeking them.

compared with the number of men seeking them.

If there were not an army of laborers begging for jobs the blacklist would be a joke instead of a tragedy.

There is the injunction question which is to be brought to an issue before us soon in bills introduced in both bodies of Congress. I am unhesitatingly in favor of them, for I believe that they seek to solve a great, vexing problem and remedy a vital wrong—the law being made strong to punish the weak and weak to punish the strong. to punish the strong.

But I insist that there would be no need for anti-injunction laws were it not for the oversupply of labor caused largely by unrestricted immigration and the lack of opportunities caused by social injustice. Under present conditions an industrial plant is picketed because the strikers want their jobs back and because other men are anxious to fill their places at any wage. If jobs were plentiful, the workers would not need to make an effort to were pientifit, the workers would not need to make an enort to secure employment in a plant where conditions compelled a strike. On the other hand, employers would be forced to make terms fair enough to induce the workers to return.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this question of immigration is one of the most far-reaching problems now confronting the American people. It is at once a political, financial, industrial, economic, educational, social, and religious problem. It has to do with all these industrial phases I have mentioned, and it is interwoven in that preeminent problem of all, the high cost of living.

We hear economists declare that the production of food is not keeping pace with the demand; that the trend of population is to the cities; and that the food producers must supply the necessaries of life for an ever-increasing contingent of food con-

That this is true none can doubt, but the fact is sometimes overlooked that of the millions of low-type Europeans and Eurasians coming into this country every year, less than 1 per cent become agriculturists and help to produce food supplies. nine per cent go to the crowded centers of population and add to the demand without adding to the supply. Prof. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, gives the figures for this view as fol-

Between 1900 and 1910, although population grew 21 per cent, the output of the 10 principal crops of the country increased only 9 per cent. Between 1899 and 1911 the value of an average acre's output of such crops increased 70 per cent, while its power to purchase the things the farmer buys was greater by 42 per cent.

There has been a general upheaval of price, to be sure, but the price of farm produce has risen much faster and further than the price of other commodities. This is "the high cost of living," and it is immigration that has made this imp shoot up faster in the United States than anywhere else.

As long as good land lasted our Government stimulated agriculture by presenting a quarter section to whoever would undertake to farm wild land. This bounty overdid farming, until, in the middle of the nineties, the cost of living had reached a minimum.

With the ending of free land, the upward turn was bound to come, but the change was made more dramatic by the inpouring of 10,000,000 of immigrants without the knowledge, the means, or the inclination to engage in farming.

of immigrants without the knowledge, the means, of the inclination to engage in farming.

Among us there is 1 American white farmer for 14 American whites, 1 Scandinavian farmer for 8 Scandinavians, 1 Germans, 1 Irish farmer for 40 Irish; but it takes 130 Poles, Hungarians, or Italians in this country to furnish 1 farmer.

Falling to contribute their due quota to the production of food, these late comers have ruptured the equilibrium between field and mill and made the high cost of living a burning question.

Mr. Chairman, aside from these industrial and economic phases, I maintain that when a great and increasing infusion of new blood into the American Commonwealth is taking place we have a right and it is our duty to ask, "What will be the effect of this new blood upon the character of America?"

It is our duty to set a standard deemed desirable and then shape our policy so that that standard may be best maintained. If we are to have real patriotism and love of country in this Nation, it must be a matter of pride to say, "I am an Ameri-It seems to me that we must all agree that any standard deemed desirable must have at least the component parts of self-government, social morality, and love of law and order. This Nation is based on the principle of self-government, is dedicated to the proposition that the will of the people is supreme. Public opinion in the last analysis must be the arbiter of our destinies. And public opinion is but the union of private opinions into one composite decision.

Therefore it is of the most vital importance that public opinion be enlightened so that its decisions be just and right. It is in recognition of that fact that our public-school system has been established. Our Government, State and National, spends millions of dollars every year for purposes of education. Why? Simply because it is absolutely necessary for the safety and perpetuity of free institutions and our form of government. Self-government is impossible without self-governing individ-uals, and you can not have self-governing individuals without training and education. That is why enormous sums are spent for education, with compulsory-attendance laws and burdens willingly borne by taxpayers. It is because it is an admitted fact that the safety and perpetuity of our institutions depend upon the measure of the intelligence of the people.

The State of Pennsylvania spends $1,000 for every boy or girl who goes through its public schools. Yet in spite of that policy, made necessary for the sake of safety, it has been forced by national action to admit hundreds of thousands of aliens every year who have had little or no knowledge of our freedom and form of government and no training whatever for the exercise of the responsibilities of citizenship. Is that not a contradiction in policy, and does it not fly in the face of our educational history?

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hope of our Nation lies in the "little red schoolhouse." I mean by that our public-school system, which has been the nursery of patriots and the protection of our heritage. I hope that every arm outstretched against it may be palsied and every tongue opposing it may be withered, for the time of its destruction marks the downfall of the Republic, with its pillars toppled into wreck and rubbish.

I have no bitterness in my heart against the people of other lands, and I would take no jot nor tittle away from the meed of gratitude we owe those who have come to our shores in the past and whose names have added luster to our history. they deserve our gratitude simply because they did well their duty in every testing time. They would ask us to do ours now could they express their desire. I take it that our most sacred duty to-day is to protect those ideals for which they fought and labored, to maintain American standards and hold them secure for coming generations.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Quin].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not unmindful of what this bill means, and I feel that in advocating it I am advocating principles that will protect the generations of the United States that are yet unborn. I believe that this Government has waited too long to pass a bill like this. For my part it is not far-reaching enough in its scope. I do not believe that any man ought to be admitted into the United States who is not familiar with our Government, who has not all the elements of patriotism in his heart. I think that none except white people ought to be allowed to come into this Re-I do not believe that all the population of southern Europe that is overrunning this Republic ought to be permitted to come into this country. I do not believe that this great Government ought to allow its institutions to be undermined by the foreigners who have brought anarchy into this I can not conceive of this Republic, having been fought for and having been preserved as it was, now being made an asylum for the people across the ocean.

All of the land in this country should be preserved for the Americans. I believe in America for Americans. This country is big enough for us now and it will be big enough for 50 or 100 years to come, but if you permit more than fourteen hundred thousand aliens to come in here every year, what can we expect? We know that these great corporations and syndicates have been bringing in hundreds of thousands of foreigners for the purpose of making labor cheap.

Of DEOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When the gentleman said that he believed in the maxim of America for Americans, did he mean to have us understand that he is opposed to all foreign immigra-

Mr. QUIN. There are classes of people I do not object to coming into this country. My own people came here from Ireland, and I would love to see good Irishmen and good Germans and good Scandinavians come into this country now. you see an Irishman you see an honest man. [Laughter.] Where you see a Scandinavian you see a good citizen, and where you see a German you see a good citizen, but by this indiscriminate method of permitting immigration to come into this country you have admitted vampires to our citizenship.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield any further. I have only 15 minutes. I wish to say to you gentlemen that the time is at hand for us to shut down on the foreign immigration that comes into this country. You talk about the literacy test. I can not conceive of that test being sufficient. This bill does not go far enough as it is. Can we expect to maintain this country if we propose to admit 1,400,000 people to come in here every Where will we be? We now have 100,000,000 people in the United States, and every year that you bring in 500,000 from the Mediterranean, like you have dumped on us within the last 12 months, you are bringing into the community something that is bound to have a bad effect. These people do not go out on the farms and produce anything for the people of this country; they are congested in the towns and cities. You have the banana peddlers and you have people sowing the seeds of discord, and as long as that is the case so long will you continue to undermine the real prosperity of your country. What idle labor we have in this country now is enough for us. Why should we continue to let those people in here by the hundreds of thousands, yea, millions?

Some gentleman on this floor has stated that more than 600,000 came into this Republic within the last four months. Why should the American citizens having homes be put in competition with the foreigner brought in here to work in the factories and the mines? Why should our labor be put in competition with such people? Why should the American boy laborer be driven out of his work because of the cheap pauper labor brought over here from Europe and the Orient? That is one of the things that is confronting us; but, my friends, there is a deeper reason for which I oppose the foreign immigration into this country.

I think it is time for us to call a halt. My principal reason is because the bringing in here of the class of citizens who do not love the American flag and who do not have the patriotism that would lead them to defend the country in time of war will, in the course of time, undermine our Government, overthrow our ideals, destroy American institutions, and kill pros-They are not the men that come up with intelligent patriotic ideas and vote for honest, high-minded American citizens to be placed in office. They are not men to make the country. They do not build up; they only tear down. These are the come to follow the red flag of anarchy and all the "isms" that come from across the sea. I believe in the doctrine of heredity, and when these people have been downtrodden for thousands of years they come into this country bringing their ideas of war on the Government. You can not change one of them in 12 months. Of course there are some good ones from all countries, but we know there are too many bad ones. It is going to affect the environment in which he lives. That bad man is going to spread a cancerous doctrine in the neighborhood where he lives. That is one reason why the United States Government ought to put the bars up against this immigration.

We have had enough trouble in this country already. Do you think all these great riots and troubles have been brought on as a rule by native citizens? It is not the Irishman, it is not the Scandinavian, it is not the German that is doing all this. Read the daily newspapers, read the history of these troubles. Go read who it is that stirs up all these riots, and you will find that it is the foreigner that comes in bearing the seeds of discord and anarchy. It is our duty to protect the people of this country, to protect America against this class of immigration flocking in here in the way and in the manner that it has been district?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. QUIN. I have not the time. I have only 15 minutes. Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman any immigration in his

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have said to this House, and I say it again, that whenever any country the size of the United States, with a hundred million people under her form of government, under her institutions, permits the indiscriminate foreign element to come into the country, though some of it is all right, while the bulk of it is too much for us, that government makes a mistake. The Government of the United States can not stand The United States has been the melting pot of the whole world, civilized and uncivilized. We have let Chinamen and Japanese into this country, and I hope, by the eternals, there never will be another yellow man allowed to come into this country. The time has come when we can not any them. The United States can not assimilate all of that element. In my country, when a man eats too much raw turnips and raw potatoes, he is likely to have the colic.

The United States has had so much of this scum that we have a bad case of colic, and I want to say that if you permit it to go longer you will have acute indigestion. The Government must belch, and where is it going to belch them? You can not get rid of them after they are once here. Who that loves his country can sit here as a representative of the people and allow this land to be flooded by imbeciles, criminals, lunatics, and diseased people from the Orient and Continental Europe? They are brought in here by these great steamship companies and corporations for the purpose of lowering wages. These men con-centrate in the mines, in the railroad shops, and in the factories, and in the cities of this country, and they have a standard of their own as a rule which is lower than the American standard. and instead of elevating society and building up the institutions of a community they lower the standard. Forty per cent of their earnings is sent across the seas, never again to be seen in the United States, Our gold is going across the Atlantic Ocean, not so much to buy goods as it is being sent there to bring more foreigners here or to support them across the water. I do not say that in any prejudiced spirit. I can not do that, because my own forbears were foreigners.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman will please excuse me: I have not e time. My own great-grandfather was married in Ireland. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. the time.

Mr. QUIN. When he came to this country he came at a time when young America needed settlers. He came at a time when America could assimilate immigration. Those were the men who came and helped to make our country, but many of those who come now are coming with environments and habits which instead of building up are tearing down. Why should which instead of building up are tearing down. this Congress be called upon to say that we will let then continue to come? You gentlemen that say we ought not to put the literacy test in this bill ought to consider the future. Our conduct and votes here are for future generations as well as the present. Many men who are ignorant, who can not read or write, are good citizens. I know there are more great rascals as a rule among the educated classes that come to this country than there are among the average citizens of America: but the plain fellow that can not read or write, the real ignorant oriental or European who associates with the bad element, is liable to be worse than the one who can read and write. We know that is true. Every man who knows conditions does not have to be a philosopher to understand that principle, and that is one of the reasons why the literacy test is put in the bill. It is necessary. It is not the best test in the world, and should not be the only one, but this committee has done the best that could, and I certainly as a citizen of this country and a Member of Congress appreciate the faithful work of that

Some say that Presidents have vetoed bills like this before. It matters not what Presidents have done in the past. We have President in the White House now who will never veto this bill. He is a statesman who understands the needs of this Government. He understands we are up against a proposition that the Government was not up against when Mr. Cleveland was President. He understands that if we are going to maintain our institutions, and if this flag is to continue to float over this Capitol, a representative government that stands for the people, that something must be done to prohibit this indiscriminate foreign element coming into this Republic as they now come. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object at this point, I simply want to suggest that in all probability experience will teach my friend to be courteous enough in the future to yield.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I object to that kind of statement.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not object to his extension of remarks in the RECORD.

Is there objection? The CHAIRMAN.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Foster having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Hay, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6060, the immigration bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

TIME OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] what his plans are about the time for a vote on this bill?

Mr. BURNETT. I have no idea how long it will take to consider it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to conclude debate to-morrow night in regard to this measure?

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to do so, if possible.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes it is possible?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know; the gentleman knows as much as I do.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Unless some good reason

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman refer to general debate? Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Oh, no; I am referring to the matter of when the gentleman thinks will be the probable time for taking the vote according to his idea. Of course, he has some idea

Mr. BURNETT. I hope to take the vote to-morrow night, if I do not know whether I can or not.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, further reerving the right to object, those of us who are opposed to this bill do not think there is any such emergency as to warrant this

Mr. BURNETT. Is the gentleman objecting, after what we agreed to earlier?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. No; I am discussing it and endeavoring to find out whether there is some good reason for

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the request.

Mr. MANN. The real reason is that it is a gentleman's agreement. I think the gentleman was here, and I do not see why he should object-

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I have not said I would. Mr. MANN. We all understood everybody had agreed to it. Perhaps, inadvertently on our part, we did not catch the gentleman, but it was considered a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. GARDNER. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, judging from what experience I have had in dealing with immigration matters, it will be an absolute impossibility to get through this bill under the five-minute rule to-morrow. That would be my guess. Even if we sat until midnight, I doubt if we could do it, unless the House of Representatives has very much changed in its nature.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I believe there are some men who may be absent, through no fault of theirs.

Mr. GARDNER. And I should judge this would go over until

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I am frank to say I realize the improbability of defeating this legislation, but I hope to prevent its ultimate passage by the failure to get two-thirds of prevent its ultimate passage by the failure to get two-thirds of the Members of this House in favor of it on a record vote. I am frank to admit my position. I am hoping that, even if it gets to the White House, the bill will be returned to us and will not finally pass. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Alabama: Whether under the five-minute rule he proposes to move to close debate on the important sections of the bill under consideration to dev?

tant sections of the bill under consideration to-day?

Mr. BURNETT. That will depend upon how long the debate would run. I make no promises whatever in regard to that, because if I felt that it was running more time than it ought to would certainly do so.

Mr. CANTOR. The reason I asked that is there are quite a number of gentlemen who desire to be heard under the fiveminute rule; and, while the time may seem an unreasonable length of time to the gentleman from Alabama, it may seem very reasonable to the gentlemen who desire to discuss this question upon its merits. Some of the sections are considered of vital importance. That is the reason why I am asking whether the gentleman from Alabama would move to close debate.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend from New York it is impossible for a gentleman in charge of a bill of this sort to state how long he will give for discussion. It will be absolutely impossible for the gentleman from Alabama to press the bill through in a hurry, because it has too long and too many sections in it which give opportunity for filibuster, if both sides were not fair, and the only way to do that is for both sides to be fair.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, there is no intention on the part of our side, if I may use that term, to filibuster on this bill, but we wish to consider it frankly on its merits. There are Members of the House who would like to speak for five minutes on one or two of these sections-how many I do not knowand I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not move to close debate before they have a chance to be heard. That is the only object of my inquiry.

Mr. HAYES. I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Canton] that we have had similar bills up here before, and I think nobody will charge the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] with being unreasonable. He has always been fair; and I have no doubt he will still be fair to the gentleman from New York and everybody else in connection with the bill. I have been in myself. I am in the minority, too.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. It is true he has not lost

Mr. BURNETT. But it is true that I have been interrupted at times

Mr. MOORE. Merely to cater to the convenience of a number of the Members, will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] say whether he proposes to press the bill after 6 o'clock to-morrow, Saturday, night?
Mr. BURNETT. I can not say about that.

Mr. MOORE. There can be no understanding about that now?

Mr. BURNETT. No.

Mr. MOORE. So every Member will have to take notice? Mr. BURNETT. If I thought we were approaching the close of the bill, and that we could close it to-morrow night, I certainly would press it.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman, I think, realizes the fact that it will be absolutely impossible to get through with the bill by 6 o'clock to-morrow, no matter how speedily we may proceed. Now, there are many gentlemen here who would like to go home to-morrow afternoon or to-morrow evening without losing the privilege or opportunity of voting against the bill. Now, is it not possible for us to enter into some arrangement or agreement whereby we could adjourn to-morrow at 6 o'clock? finish the bill to-morrow if we stay here until 10 o'clock.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I wish to say to the gentleman that there are some of us who live at a distance and can not go home Saturday night, but who are interested in expediting.

the business of Congres

Mr. SABATH. Well, that does not apply only to the gentleman from Illinois.

I would like to suggest to the gentleman Mr. CANTOR. from Alabama that he take a vote on this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My record will show, I think, that I have been as interested in matters of labor as any other Member of Congress, in spite of the remarks of my friend.

Mr. SABATH. I assure you I did not wish to reflect upon his labors in the interest of labor. I wish to say that my record will also disclose that I have been interested in such matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BUNNETT]?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to ob-

Mr. BURNETT. I move to adjourn.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry. What is the parliamentary status?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That when the House adjourns to-night it meet to adjourn at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman reserved the right to object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I did. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] whether in view of the fact that a great many gentlemen desire to be here when the vote is taken and can not very well be here to-morrow evening and remain here until midnight, he will not make some arrangement now by which, if the bill is not concluded in the committee by a certain hour, we shall rise? Now, let the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] name the hour.

Mr. MANN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from

New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to the bill, as the gentleman is. But that is a request that seems to me to be unreasonable on a bill of 60 pages long or thereabouts. The gentleman can not say what the status will be.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from New York were in charge of this bill and at 5 or 6 o'clock to-morrow afternoon it looked as though we could finish the bill by 8 o'clock, he would say, "Let us stay and finish it," and would insist upon it. No man can tell. After we have been running under the five-minute rule to morrow it is likely—I will not say probable—that we can reach an agreement as to the time of adjournment. But the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] can not tell now, and it is his duty to press the bill to its passage.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman from Illinois will understand me, what I am trying to say about that is that if we should be held here until a later hour, 9 or 10 o'clock to-night, and then find that we must come back again on Monday morning, it would be very disagreeable. I am not speaking for myself at all. I am unselfish in this matter.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman is only in the position that Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There can be no agreement now that the House shall not vote to-morrow afternoon or evening if the House is ready under the rule to vote on it at that time. There can be no agreement by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. There can be no agreement now. All the gentle-man can do is to move to adjourn. You can not tell now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned under the order until tomorrow, Saturday, January 31, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

Saturday, January 31, 1914.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF ELECTRICAL MEANS OF COMMUNICA-TION (S. DOC. NO. 399).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th instant, a report entitled "Government ownership of electrical means of communicaprepared by direction of the Postmaster General by a departmental committee consisting of the First Assistant Postmaster General, the chief clerk of the department, and the superintendent of the division of salaries and allowances of the Bureau of the First Assistant. The communication will be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Postmaster General, together with the information furnished, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is perfectly apparent that the request of the Senator can not be complied with. On account of the size of the document, it will have to go to the Committee on Printing before it can be printed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it should go first to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and it can subsequently be referred to the Committee on Print-

Mr. NORRIS. I think, under the Chair's statement, it will have to go at least to the Committee on Printing before it can be printed; and sending it to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads only delays it. Sending it to the Committee on Printing, of course, does not necessarily mean that the document will be printed. That committee will investigate it; and it seems to me that really the only thing to investigate will be whether or not it ought to be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair that the document be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not, but I make the request of the Chair that he refer it to the Committee on Printing, instead of to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not refer it to two committees. The Chair has referred it to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

WASHINGTON & OLD DOMINION BAILWAY (S. DOC. NO. 398).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Washington & Old Dominion Railway for the year ended December 31, 1913, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram in the nature of resolutions adopted at a special meeting of delegates representing 57 organizations of various nationalities in the city of Hartford, Conn., and ask that the same may be read by the Secretary and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

[Telegram.]

HARTFORD, CONN., January 28, 1914.

HARTFORD, CONN., January 28, 1914.

Schafe, Washington, D. C.:

At a special meeting of delegates representing 57 organizations of various nationalities of this city had at Hartford, Conn., January 20, 1914, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas there is now pending before Congress the Burnett immigration bill; and
"Whereas said bill includes a literacy test for immigrants: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we emphatically protest against the passage of this bill as un-American and antagonistic to the true American spirit of making this country a home for the oppressed and a refuge for the needy; and be it further "Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Speaker of the House and the Senators and Representatives of the State; and be it further "Resolved, That the resolution committee, consisting of N. H. Finesilver, Nathan Pronnsle, Morris Older, Henry Melroe, Frank Palloti, and J. Stanisheck, be empowered to sign this resolution for the above organizations."

Mr. ROOT. I present a set of resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, together with a letter from the secretary of that board, and also a letter from the Merchants' Association of New York. I ask to have the resolutions printed in the RECORD, and that the remainder be printed for the use of the Committee on Commerce, to which I ask that the matter be referred.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Com-mittee on Commerce, and the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Eugenius H. Outerbridge, chairman of the committee on the harbor and shipping, offered the following preamble and resolution and moved their adoption:

their adoption:

"Whereas the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal, generally known as the Cape Cod Canal, is nearing completion; and

"Whereas said canal will furnish a short, direct connection between the port of New York and the port of Boston, and afford for the 25,000,000 tons of freight now passing around Cape Cod a channel free from the dangers and delays connected with passage across Nantucket Shonis; and

"Whereas the full benefit to commerce can be realized only if navigators are assured that the course be always properly marked by buoys and lights; and

"Whereas such marking and lights in the open navigable waters of the United States should not be left to establishment and maintenance by a private corporation in waters over which it exercises no control or jurisdiction: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That all aids to navigation in Buzzards and Barnstable Bays should be located and maintained by the United States Government as an integral part of the general system of coastal buoys and lights; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York urges the United States Senators from the State of New York to take such steps as may be in their power to secure such action by the United States Government.

"Respectfully submitted.

"E. H. OUTERBRIDGE, Chairman,
"CHESTER B. LAWRENCE,
"ERNEST C. BLISS,
"CHABLES SOOYSMITH,
"McDougall Hawkes,
"Hermann Winter,
"GUSTAV LINDENTHAL,
"Committee on the Harbor and Shipping."

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2563) for the relief of Rebecca C. Pepper, and I submit a report (No. 207) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan' [Mr.

Townsend] to the report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill? If it leads to any discussion will withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for informa-

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Rebecca C. Pepper on September 28, 1908, under the laws of the United States, was allowed to make homestead entry 0381 for the south half of the northeast quarter of section 33, township 21 north, range 16 west, principal meridian of Michigan, the same showing on the books of the Federal land office at Marquette to be open to entry; and

Whereas several years later and after she had complied with the conditions of the homestead act as to residence on the land, and when she made offer of payment to the Government of the amount due on such land, she was informed that a military bounty-land warrant under the act of 1855 had been issued to William Weston on April 12, 1866; and

Whereas the homestead entry of the said Rebecca C. Pepper was canceled, and on appeal to the Department of the Interior said cancellation was affirmed and the case closed on June 26, 1911; and Whereas the said Rebecca C. Pepper was without fault in the matter, she having relied upon the Government's records in making her entry and having complied with the legal conditions as to residence on the said land, not knowing and having no means for finding out that said records were not right; Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to Rebecca C. Pepper 160 acres of land in the State of Michigan, located on the public domain subject to homestead entry, upon payment by Rebecca C. Pepper to the Secretary of the Interior for the United States the sum of $100, without requiring her to comply with the usual homestead provisions as to residence on such land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4275) to promote the safety of employees and passengers on railroads engaged in interstate or foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 4276) granting an increase of pension to George W. Winfield .

A bill (S. 4277) granting a pension to James Christian; A bill (S. 4278) granting an increase of pension to Elisha J.

Melton (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4279) granting an increase of pension to William W. Green (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 4280) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Tazewell, in the State of Virginia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 4282) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The Army and Navy medal-of-honor honor roll," and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 4283) for the relief of Oliver P. Pring; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4284) granting a pension to Helen M. Curl (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1913; to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

IRRIGATION BY THE RESERVOIR SYSTEM.

Mr. BRISTOW. I introduce a bill and desire to make a very short statement in regard to it.

The bill (S. 4281) providing for the continuance of investiga-tion authorized by the act of August 10, 1912, upon the feasibility and economy of irrigation by the reservoir system or plan in western Kansas and western Oklahoma; for the extension of the investigation to western Nebraska, eastern Colorado, and eastern New Mexico; and for the construction of reservoirs and lakes for the purpose of impounding the waters of these States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the bill which I have introduced provides for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to continue the investigation authorized by the act of August 10, 1912, as to the feasibility and economy of irrigating by the reservoir system on the plains in western Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, and in eastern Colorado and New Mexico, and also appropriates $20,000,000 for the purpose of constructing reservoirs and lakes.

The investigation that has already been made was, because of lack of funds and time, more or less incomplete, but it demonstrates that there are a number of reservoir sites upon these semiarid plains where irrigation systems may be provided by collecting the surplus waters in reservoirs and distributing them at the seasonable time for the growth and maturing of the crops. It also demonstrates that there are many sites where lakes can be created by holding back the surplus waters from running in flood time into the streams

These lakes would serve two purposes that would be exceedingly beneficial. The evaporation from their surface during the dry months would create a degree of atmospheric humidity far in excess of that which now exists. This would greatly temper the destructiveness of the dry weather. These lakes would also feed the underflow by seepage and make its supply greater and more useful than it is at the present time.

We have expended practically $100,000,000 on the Mississippi

This expenditure has been made largely to protect the River. lands adjacent to the river from overflow. The holding back of the surplus waters during the rainy seasons upon these great watersheds would supplement the work that has already been | national highway.

done on the Mississippi and tend to prevent the congestion of waters there during periods of flood. While serving this good purpose it would at the same time be of inestimable value to the inhabitants of these semiarid regions by mitigating their droughts. It would also serve to give a steady flow to the streams by preventing the surplus water from rushing in torrents at one time into the rivers.

If it is right for the Government to build dikes and levees on the Mississippi, it is proper for it to build lakes and reservoirs on the plains at the headwaters of the Mississippi.

If the production of this vast fertile region of our country should be increased 10 per cent per annum beyond its present possibilities, it would add every year to the wealth of our Nation many times the amount which I ask to be appropriated to construct these lakes and reservoirs. Between a line running from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, through central Kansas and Nebraska, and the crest of the Rocky Mountains, lies a vast region the soil of which is of untold fertility. There probably is not such an area anywhere else on the face of the earth that is its equal in producing capacity if it had regular and uniform rainfall. It has been a short-sighted policy of our Government to neglect this region so long, when a comparatively small expenditure could have immeasurably increased its producing capacity. Standing upon the banks of the Arkansas and Platte Rivers in the springtime you can see great floods of water, millions of cubic feet per hour, sweeping by on its way to the sea. It is not only running to waste but increases the destruction by floods in the Mississippi Valley. This great waste of water, so useless then, in but a few months would be more precious to the people living upon these plains than mines of gold and silver. If it were held back and impounded to be utilized later upon the country where it fell instead of being an agent of destruction and devastation as it is in the valley below, it would be a source of untold wealth, producing more value per year than is taken from the mines in the mountains beyond.

Every year there is a sufficient amount of this water that runs away unused to irrigate thousands of acres of land that now lies practically idle and unused. And in addition to this direct benefit there would be the advantage of increased humidity over the entire area during the growing season, which would further increase the productiveness of the millions of acres that it is not practicable to irrigate.

This appropriation which I suggest will furnish the country a permanent and inexhaustible source of wealth tenfold more valuable than the coal, the copper, and the gold of Alaska

During this session of Congress we have appropriated forty millions to open up the riches of our Alaskan Territory, and I am heartily in favor of such appropriation, but I must insist that we owe a duty to the people upon these western plains equal to our duty to the people of Alaska. We appropriate millions every year for the improvement of rivers and harbors, not only for the benefit of navigation but also to protect from destructive floods the valley lands adjacent to the rivers. How, then, can we refuse with any degree of consistency to make an appropriation for the protection of the plains from drought when it will not only serve that purpose but also supplement the work we are already doing in building levees along our great rivers to protect the valleys from the floods?

It is my purpose to urge this legislation with all the earnestness of which I am capable. I believe that it is not only wise legislation, but I know it is just, and I trust that it will have the support of those who for so many years have been enjoying liberal appropriations to protect their States from the Mississippi River overflow.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and I hope we shall have a favorable report at an early date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims, WATERWAYS COMMISSION AND BOARD OF RIVER REGULATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to introduce the bill which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill (S. 2739) known throughout the country as the Newlands river-regulation bill, submitted by me on July 14, 1913. This substitute is intended to remove all doubt as to the purpose of the original bill regarding the Mississippi River. It proposes to make the Mississippi River, with its banks, its levees, its spillways, and its cut-offs, a

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The Secretary. A bill to create a waterways commission and a board of river regulation to promote interstate commerce by the development and improvement of the rivers and waterways and water resources of the United States and the coordination of and cooperation between rail and water routes and by providing a fund for the regulation and control of the flow of rivers and for the maintenance at all seasons of a navigable stage of water in waterways and for the connection of rivers and waterways with the Great Lakes and with each other, and as a means to that end to provide for flood prevention and protection and for water storage and for the beneficial use of flood waters for irrigation and water power and for the conservation and use of water in agriculture and for the protection of watersheds from denudation and erosion and from forest fires and for the cooperation in such work of Government services and bureaus with each other and with States, municipalities, and other local agencies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada desire that the bill lie on the table?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire that it shall lie on the table, and I offer it as a substitute for the bill previously introduced. I wish it to take the same number, as it is well known by that number throughout the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill can not take the same number, but will have to be offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill previously introduced by the Senator from Nevada. Otherwise it will be necessary to give it a new number or it will be impossible to keep track of it in the Secretary's office.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I ask that it be received as a substitute for the bill heretofore introduced by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So that it is really an amendment in the nature of a substitute? It will be so noted as an amendment to the original bill by way of substitute, and it will be printed and lie on the table, to be called up by the Senator from Nevada at his convenience.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of the substitute, and also a few newspaper clippings explanatory thereof. They are quite brief.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Nevada be willing to have the clippings printed as a public document?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I prefer that they go into the RECORD. The bill is attracting a good deal of attention throughout the country, and in every section of the country; it has been indorsed by seven or eight legislatures, and I should like to have these statements go out in the RECORD in connection with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Do they embrace all that the Senator now has in his hand?

NEWLANDS. Yes. The Senator from Utah can see that they will not consume very much space, and a good deal of it is taken up with illustrations.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Nevada does not expect the illustrations to go into the RECORD?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, but I am going to say to the Senate that within the last few days I have undertaken to ascertain what percentage of the Congressional Record for the last year is a record of statements made upon the floor of the last year is a record of statements made upon the hoof of the Senate and of the other House and what percentage has been from outside sources. Of course I have not brought the information anywhere near down to date, but so far I have ascertained there is about 40 per cent of outside matter con-tained in our Record. I repeat, however, I am not going to object to the insertion of the matter referred to by the Senator from Nevada

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand, then, Mr. President, that permission is granted to insert the matter to which I refer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The substitute and matter referred to is as follows:

NEWLANDS RIVER REGULATION BILL.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the fol-

That the sum of $60,000,000 annually for each of the 10 years following the 1st day of July, 1913, is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated, and made available until expended, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "river regulation fund," to be used to promote interstate commerce by the development and improvement of the rivers and waterways of the United States and their connections with the Great Lakes and with each other, and by the coordination of and cooperation between rail and water routes and transportation, and the establishment and maintenance of adequate terminal and transfer facilities and systems and their maintenance, improvement, and protection, and by the making of examinations and surveys and by the construction of engineering and other works and projects for the regulation and control of the flow of rivers and their tributaries and source streams, and the standardization of such flow, and by the maintenance of navigable stages of water at all seasons of the year in the waterways, of the United States, and by preventing silt and sedimentary material from being carried into, and deposited in, waterways, channels, and harbors, and by the conservation, development, and utilization of the water resources of the United States, and by flood prevention and protection, through the establishment, construction, and maintenance of natural and artificial reservoirs for water storage and control, and the protection of watersheds from denudation, erosion, and surface wash, and from forest fires, and the maintenance and extension of woodland and overflow lands and arid lands and the building of drainage and irrigation works in order that the flow of rivers shall be regulated and controlled not only through the use of flood waters for irrigation on the upper tributaries, but also through controlling them in fixed and established channels in the lower valleys and plains, and by doing all things necessary to provide for any and all beneficial uses of water that will contribute to its conservation or storage in the ground or in surface reservoirs as an aid to the regulation or control of the flow of rivers, and by acquiring, holding, using, and transferring lands and any other property that may be needed for the aforesaid purposes, and by doing such other things as may be specified in this act or necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes thereof, and by securing the cooperation therein of States, municipalities, and other local agencies, as hereinafter set forth, and for the payment of all expenditures provided for in this act; the ultimate purpose of this act being the maintenance at all times of a navigable stage of water in all inland waterways, and flood prevention

CREATION OF THE WATERWAYS COMMISSION AND THE BOARD OF RIVER REGULATION

SEC. 2. That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the "waterways commission," consisting of the President of the United States, who shall be the chairman of said commission, with the power of veto, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the board of river regulation, to be appointed as hereinafter provided. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission shall be ex officio advisory members of said waterways commission.

The waterways commission shall have authority to direct and control all proceedings and operations and all things done or to be done under this act, and to establish all rules and regulations which may in their judgment be necessary to carry into effect such direction and control consistent with the provisions of this act and with existing law and with any provisions which Congress may from time to time enact.

All plans and estimates prepared by the board of river regulation, as hereinafter provided, which contemplate or provide for expenditures from the river regulation fund, shall be submitted to the waterways commission for final approval before any of the expenditures therein provided for or contemplated are authorized or made, or any construction work undertaken or contracts let under or in pursuance of such plans: Provided, That in case of an emergency the chairman of the board of river regulation shall have full power to act, and shall report in detail his action in every case to the waterways commission at its next meeting after his action.

The members of said commission shall serve as such only during their incumbency in their respective official positions, and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

A board is hereby created, to be known as the "board of river pointment.

the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

A board is hereby created, to be known as the "board of river regulation," consisting of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, the Director of the Reclamation Service, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, the Forester of the Department of Agriculture, the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, one civil engineer, one sanitary engineer, one hydroelectric engineer, one expert in transportation, and a chairman of the board. The last seven shall be appointed by the President and hold office at his pleasure, and they shall each receive an annual compensation of $10,000, except the chairman, who shall receive $12,000, and they shall receive a per dlem in lieu of actual expenses when absent from headquarters on official business, to be determined by the waterways commission. Such compensation and per dlem, together with all the general expenses of the board, shall be payable out of the appropriation hereinafter apportioned to the Smithsonian Institution. The members of said board, with the exception of the seven members appointed by the President, shall serve as such only during their incumbency in their respective official positions, and any vacancy on the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

The seven members of the board appointed by the President shall constitute an executive committee of which the chairman of the board shall be chairman, and said executive committee shall have the general executive defection and supervision of the operations of said board of river regulation under rules and regulations to be established by the waterways commission.

A secretary of the board shall be appointed by the executive com-regulation under rules and regulations to be established by the waterways commission.

A secretary of the board shall be appointed by the executive committee, and shall hold office at their pleasure, and he shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000 and a per diem when absent from head-quarters on official business to be determined by the waterways commission, payable out of the appropriation hereinafter apportioned for the Smithsonian Institution.

All formal action taken and all expenditures made or authorized by the board of river regulation shall be reported to the waterways commission and shall be by the commission transmitted to Congress annually, or at such more frequent times as may appear to the commission desirable, or at such times as Congress may require.

Whenever, in their judgment, it may be advisable, in order to expedite construction, the waterways commission may order such construction work as they may determine to be done under the immediate direction, by contract or otherwise, of the executive committee, in which case such work shall be paid for from the apportionment of the service or bureau or organization under which it would otherwise have been done, such transfer and application of any apportionment made by this act being hereby authorized.

The waterways commission may, if at any time it shall be in their judgment advisable, appoint from the public service additional members of the board of river regulation; and they may also create and ap-point from the public service the members of subordinate boards or commissions to promote the purposes of this act and expedite and facilitate the administration thereof and operations and construction thereunder. facilitate t thereunder.

COOPERATION WITH STATES, MUNICIPALITIES, AND OTHER AGENCIES.

SEC. 3. That the beard of river regulation shall, in all cases where possible and practicable, encourage, promote, and endeavor to secure the cooperation of States, municipalities, public and quasi public corporations, towns, counties, districts, coimmunities, persons, and associations in the carrying out of the purposes and objects of this act, and in making the lavestigations and doing all coordinative and constructive work provided for herein; and it shall in each case endeavor to secure the financial cooperation of States and of such local authorities, agencies, and organizations to such extent and in such amounts as the waterways commission shall determine to be a just and equitable apportionment of work, costs, and benefits, under all the circumstances, in each case; and it shall negotiate and perfect arrangements and plans for the apportionment of work, cost, and benefits of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and promote the general welfare, and by reason of its proprietury interest in the public domain, and to the States municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within their jurisdictions, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of the States and municipalities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States: Provided, however, That the control of the Mississippi River shall be regarded as a national problem, imposing an obligation which alone can be discharged by the General Governme

ENCOURAGEMENT OF INDEPENDENT INITIATIVE AND CONSTRUCTION.

Sec. 4. That all things done under this act shall be done with a view not only to constructive cooperation, as herein provided, but also with the definite and specific object of enlarging the field of accomplishment contemplated by the act through promoting and encouraging independent initiative and construction by States, municipalities, districts, and other local agencies and organizations, and creating object lessons and building models and making demonstrations that will have that effect and influence, and induce such supplemental and independent action and construction.

CONFERENCE AND COOPERATION OF BUREAUS AND STATES.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of said board to coordinate and bring into conference and cooperation the various scientific and constructive bureaus of the United States with each other and with the representatives of States, municipalities, public and quasi-public corporations, towns, counties, districts, communities, and associations, and of foreign nations on international streams, in the carrying out and accomplishment of all the provisions, purposes, and objects of this act.

The board shall have authority to call upon and to bring into cooperation any other Federal department or bureau whose investigations or assistance may be found necessary to the carrying out of the provisions of this act, and the board is hereby authorized to defray the expenses of such investigations or assistance through a transfer of so much of its appropriation as may be necessary to the Federal department or bureau thus brought into cooperation.

CORRELATION, COORDINATION, AND ADMINISTRATIVE ECONOMY.

Sec. 6. That the board shall harmonize and unify and bring into correlation and coordination the investigations made, and information, data, and facts collected and obtained by the various bureaus or offices of the Government relating to or connected with the matters and subjects referred to and the questions involved in this act, and to print, publish, and disseminate the same, and it shall exercise such general supervision as may be necessary to provide against duplication or unnecessary inadequate, unrelated, or incomplete work in connection therewith, and shall make such recommendations to the waterways commission as it may deem advisable at any time for the accomplishment of that end or in the interest of harmonious cooperation, efficiency, and economy in carrying out the purposes of this act. The special function of the board at all times shall be to promote the adoption of the best and most approved methods and systems of investigation, administration, construction, and operation in carrying out such specific improvements, works, and projects as are authorized by this act, or which may be from time to time authorized by Congress, if within the scope of the work of the vald board as herein set forth; and it shall further be the special function of the board to effect the largest possible saving as the result of the unification, correlation, and coordination of the work of the various bureaus in the Investigations and administrative and constructive work provided for in this act in accordance with existing law or with such provisions as Congress shall from time to time impose.

REPORTS, FLANS, AND ESTIMATES BY THE BOARD.

SEC. 7. That the functions of the board shall be to obtain full information through its members concerning all proposed expenditures provided for within the scope of this act. Each bureau or service chief member shall report to the board the work proposed by the bureau or organization which he represents, and shall present full plans and estimates covering such proposed construction or action. The findings and conclusions of the board and plans adopted by it for construction and action shall be binding upon the members thereof in so far as may be consistent with existing laws.

REFERENCES TO AND INSTRUCTIONS FROM THE PRESIDENT.

SEC. S. That all matters involving apparent conflict with departmental authority, jurisdiction, or procedure, or as to which the board may desire suggestions or advice, shall be laid before the President, who may thereupon call into conference the waterways commission, and after consideration of such matters by the commission, suitable instructions shall be issued by the President to heads of departments with a view to securing unity of action along the lines approved by the President and the commission.

EXECUTION OF PLANS AND WORK BY THE SEVERAL BUREAUS.

SEC. 9. That in the execution of all plans and duties intrusted or delegated to the several bureaus the respective chiefs thereof, acting under departmental regulations and procedure, shall execute the work according to the methods prescribed by law, the functions of the board of river regulation being those of a consulting and advisory body with power to make recommendations to the President and the waterways commission, and through the President to the heads of departments, with a view to effective coordination and cooperation as to all things proposed by this act, and to carry out such work as Congress shall from time to time prescribe or has prescribed in this act.

proposed by this act, and to carry out such work as Congress shall from time to time prescribe or has prescribed in this act.

COMPREHENSIVE PLANS FOR RIVER RECULATION.

Sec. 10. That the board of river regulation shall develop, formulate, prepare, consider, and determine upon comprehensive plans for the conservation, use, and development of the water and forest resources of the United States in such manner as will best regulate the flow of rivers and their tributaries and source streams, and the stage of water in inland waterways, and the confinement of all rivers and waterways at all times within fixed and established channels, and embracing, with that object, the construction of levees and revetments and all works necessary for the fixation of channels and flood protection, drainage, and the reclamation of swamp and overflow lands; water storage in natural and artificial reservoirs; the beneficial use of waters for irrigation and for all domestic, municipal, and industrial purposes: the manitenance and development of underground water supplies and the storage of water in the ground and in irrigated lands and underground reservoirs; the construction of flood-water canals, by-passes, and restraining dams; the control and regulation of drainage and the replenishment of streams by return seepage; the perpetuation of forests and maintenance of woodland cover as sources of stream flow; the prevention of denudation and erosion; the protection of channels and harbors from eroded soil materials; the clarification of streams and rivers; the sanitary disposal of sewage and purification of water supplies; the best distribution of forests, woodlands, and other growth, and of cultivated and irrigated areas in their relation to river flow; the protection of forested and woodland areas from destruction by fire or insects; the reforestation of denuded areas; the planting of forests and establishment of forest plantations; the preservation and planting of woodlands and any other growth and protective cover on watersheds; the SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

SEC. 11. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to give especial attention to the acquisition from foreign countries and from all sources of all obtainable knowledge concerning the problems involved in the work of the board and to diffuse and disseminate the same, and to establish and maintain a museum of water and forest resources in which such knowledge shall be placed before the people, with object lessons illustrating the disastrous consequences that have resulted from the neglect of such conservation, and particularly the failure to conserve the forest and water resources in other countries of the world, and to utilize the resources of the institution under his charge, which may be available for that purpose, to aid in the education of the public in the elements of knowledge which lead to the successful regulation of water and of the flow of rivers and the use of water in connection with agriculture and the intensive cultivation of land, and in connection with all other industries.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to collate and bring together for the information of the board the results of all investigations with reference to soil and the production of crops through the use of water as a fertilizer and stimulant to plant growth, and of the relation of water in excess or deficiency to successful crop production. He shall recommend for the consideration of the board such further investigations as may properly be conducted in connection with the purposes for which the board is created and which shall lead to the largest and most valuable results being obtained through the use of water in connection with successful plant growth and increased crop production, and the establishment of a national system for the Information of the people in the intensive cultivation of small tracts of land, with a view to increasing food production and thereby reducing the cost of living and encouraging suburban and rural settlement and homemaking, and the beneficial use of water in connection therewith as an ultimate influence for river regulation in aid of interstate commerce.

FOREST SERVICE.

SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the Forester of the Department of Agriculture to present to the board all essential facts bearing upon the relation of forests to the various problems under consideration and the value and importance of forests and woodland and other growth and their proper control and extension and protection from fire; also such facts as may be essential to the proper enlargement of forested areas for the protection of watersheds and the maintenance of the flow of rivers during the low-water season and the prevention of denudation and erosion, with consequent silting up of waterways and harbors, and to prepare and present to the board comprehensive plans for the protection of the forests from fire and other destructive agencies.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEX.

SEC. 14. That it shall be the duty of the Director of the Geological Survey to recommend to the board appropriate surveys and examinations, and upon proper approval cause to be executed topographic surveys of each drainage basin, these being planned with reference to the work contemplated by the board and the immediate demands and needs of the board. Such surveys shall include and show in addition to the topography the character of all lands embraced therein, and it shall be his duty to classify the same and designate the best use to which said lands may be devoted in carrying out the provisions of this act. The topographic maps shall be of such scale as will bring out the existence of feasible storage or reservoir sites. He shall make such additional surveys of specific localities as may be required by the constructing engineers, and in such surveys he shall establish monuments based on geodetic horizontal and vertical control. The surveys shall be of such nature as to provide adequate bases for geologic investigation and engineering works. He shall also cause measurements to be made of the flow of streams at such places as may be designated by the board as yielding results of largest importance in the discussion of the problems in hand and the execution of proposed engineering works, and shall carry on such studies in river pollution and purification, in water-power possibilities, and other stream investigations as the board may designate. It shall be his further duty to examine all forested lands or lands intended to be afforested or reforested which it is proposed to purchase under this act, and to report whether the control and use of such lands will influence the preservation of water supplies or stream flow or tend to regulate the flow of navigable rivers on whose watersheds they are located.

RECLAMATION SERVICE.

SEC. 15. That it shall be the duty of the Director of the Reciamation Service to bring before the board the results attained in the construction of works of irrigation and reclamation throughout the arid and semiarid regions of the United States and the application of the experience thus obtained to the conditions existing in the more humid sections of the United States. He shall extend the surveys and investigations and construction of irrigation works such as are authorized in the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, throughout the United States and including reclamation of land by drainage as well as by irrigation: Provided, however, That no part of the fund created by the act of June 17, 1902, shall be expended for this purpose. Such further investigations and construction and operations in States and Territories other than those covered by the original act above referred to and amendments thereto shall be made in accordance with such rules and regulations as shall be established by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be subject to such of the terms, provisions, and requirements of said reclamation act as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine are to be made applicable thereto, but shall be at the expense of the river regulation fund created by this act, and expenditures from said last-mentioned fund may be similarly made in any State or Territory. He shall construct, operate, and maintain, until otherwise provided by law, such irrigation and drainage works and systems as the board may determine are needed for the regulation of the streams on rivers and the improvement of agricultural conditions, or for the proper control, disposition, and utilization of sewage or other waste waters which, without such regulation, would pollute the streams on infuriously affect the health or prosperity of the community. [From the News-Scimitar, Memphis, Tenn., January 15, 1914.] THE NEWLANDS BILL.

THE NEWLANDS BILL.

A comprehensive, practical, and efficient measure is the Newlands bill for the control of the floods of this great valley, and it is growing more and more in public favor as it is better understood. The makeshifts and patchwork efforts of less comprehensive measures are falling more and more into disfavor, particularly when the secret forces opposing the Newlands bill are discovered. The public is rapidly learning that the same influences that delayed the opening of the Panama Canal for more than a quarter of a century, plus the railroads which oppose revival and expansion of inland waterways competition, politicians who do not desire the elimination of the politically powerful levee boards, power-site speculators who do not desire the Federal Government to survey and reveal the reservoir and power sites in the source-stream country, those financiers who do not desire the internal development work of the Government coordinated and made fully efficient, and those national politicians who desire to retain power to choke off executive initiative, have thrown every possible obstruction in the way of progress in the campaign for the passage of the Newlands river-regulation bill. But their labors are in vain. The Newlands bill is really the river plank of the national platform of the Democratic Party translated into legislative form, and it is so designed as to ultimately solve all the great problems incident to the now uncontrolled drainage of the country in such a way as to rehabilitate the navigable waterways and put an end to the waste of water, which means a waste of wealth. The country is slow to learn, and it takes its time about solving great problems. When once its mind is made up, however, and the work entered upon, it is always done with a thoroughness and intelligence that insures its success.

[From the Mobile Item, Jan. 22, 1914.]

THE NEWLANDS BILL.

At the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held in Atlanta a few days ago, Judson G. Wall, vice president of the association, addressed the division of social and economic science on flood control and protection. Mr. Wall, who is tax commissioner of New York City, has made a deep study of the problems presented by soil erosion and the unnecessary waste of waters. He declared that the present river-regulation policy is wrong: First, because it does not prevent flood losses averaging over $100,000,000 a year, and, second, because it not only permits, but provides for, the unimpeded passage to the sea of countless billions of tons of water needed where it falls for crop-raising purposes.

The Newlands bill now before Congress proposes a policy of flood prevention and river regulation, a policy that clearly recognizes the vital necessity of conserving the food supply of the Nation. This policy provides for the construction of storage reservoirs on the source streams, which would supply water for navigation during the dry season. It also provides for diversion canals along the upper levels for irrigating purposes and for otherwise distributing water where it will be most beneficial. Under this plan water would be compelled to perform its proper and normal function of enriching the soil before seeking, through seepage, the river and the sea. The season of freshets would thus provide for the season of drought. It is claimed there would be no possibility of floods, and there would be assurance of a safe and certain volume of water in navigable streams at all seasons of the year.

The storage of water on the source streams would result in the de-certain volume of water in navigable streams at all seasons of the year.

The storage of water on the source streams would result in the development of a large number of hydroelectric power plants, which would lessen the cost of production. There are nearly 300,000,000 acres of land now idle, owing to a deficient rainfall, but which could be made productive if the amount of precipitation that does occur were all utilized, which it is practicable to do. This plan of making the best use of all precipitation would also increase the productiveness and thereby enhance the value of farms in all parts of the country.

Hundreds of business organizations and newspapers throughout the country are demanding from Congress the adoption of this new policy of flood protection by conservation. And they ask that the plan be turned over to the Army engineers who constructed the Panama Canal for execution. If these engineers are ordered to stop the floods, they can do so. And they will at the same time stop the waste of soil by erosion, and the waste of water, which is one of the most valuable assets of the Nation.

FLOOD PREVENTION AND RIVER REGULATION.

The broad and comprehensive national policy embodied in the Newlands-Bartholdt-Broussard river-regulation bill was declared and indorsed by the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress 10 years ago in the following resolutions drawn by George H. Maxwell, and then adopted as an expression of the broad western vision of what should be done to prevent the waste and destruction of our national resources and safeguard against the annually recurring menace of the floods.

TRANS-MISSISSIPPI COMMERCIAL CONGRESS

Resolutions adopted at the fourteenth annual session held at Seattle, Wash., August 18-21, 1903:

"CONSERVE NATURAL RESOURCES.

"CONSERVE NATURAL RESOURCES.

"The unparalleled era of prosperity through which we are now passing results from the rapid development of the material resources of our country, and we must preserve those resources if we are to maintain that prosperity. We are drawing from nature's treasure vaults the wealth that has been accumulating through the ages. That wealth is in our forests, our mines, and our farms. Their products are the basis of both our internal and our foreign trade and commerce and the original source of all employment for labor.

"This mighty resource of natural wealth must not be wasted or destroyed. Not only should the natural resources of the trans-Mississippi region be systematically preserved, but the home markets for its products should be protected.

"We have a higher destiny as a Nation than the mere creation or accumulation of capital. We must preserve and bequeath to future generations the natural resources which will be necessary to their material welfare, and without which in the years to come the masses of our people will inevitably be reduced to poverty and suffer privation and distress.

"WHAT MUST BE DONE.

" WHAT MUST BE DONE.

"We may use and enjoy these vast natural resources without destroying them, and by a wise governmental policy they may be enormously developed and enlarged. But if this is to be done—

"1. The appalling ravages from forest fires must be stopped.

"2. The reckless destruction of our timber resources by careless and wasteful methods of lumbering must cease.

"3. The forests must be preserved by right use, not only as a permanent source of supply for wood and timber, but as sources of water supply and great natural reservoirs to hold back the flood waters and lessen the destructive volume of floods.

"4. The waters that now run to waste must be stored both for flood protection and for use in irrigation and to create electric power and for the improvement of navigation.

"5. Reservoirs should be built throughout the mountain regions and wherever practicable in the natural depressions and basins of the great plains in the valleys of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries.

"6. The building of a multitude of small reservoirs and ponds by damming the draws and coulees should be brought about.

"7. The river channels should be, wherever necessary, deepened, straightened, and improved and the banks protected by revetments.

"8. Levees should be built along the rivers for flood protection and to improve the channels for navigation.

"9. The public lands should be held as a sacred trust for those who will build homes upon them, and their rapid absorption into private ownership by speculators and to create great ranges for live stock should be immediately stopped.

"10. The National Government should build the great irrigation systems necessary for the reclamation and settlement of the arid region by actual settlers and home makers, and the lands reclaimed should repay to the Government the cost of the construction of the waters of such large rivers as the Columbia, the Missouri, the Colorado,

"The great engineering works necessary for the utilization of the waters of such large rivers as the Columbia, the Missouri, the Colorado, the Snake, the Milk, the Sait, and Gila, and the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers in California should proceed as rapidly as the lands reclaimed will be utilized, and will repay to the Government the cost of the works; and in the great interior central valley of California the problem of the control of the floods of the Sacramento River, which would furnish water caough to irrigate 10,000,000 acres of land if conserved and utilized, should be treated as a single problem involving arid-land reclamation, flood control, navigation, and drainage, and while the improvements of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers should be continued and extended by the National Government to fully develop the navigability of those rivers, the necessity of coping with the problem in its broadest aspects should be recognized and a complete and comprehensive plan for its entire solution should be prepared without delay by the engineers of the Reclamation Service and of the War Department of the United States."

FLOOD CONTROL—IMPOUNDING WATERS AT THEIR SOURCE.

From the Southern Lumberman, Nashville, Tenn., December, 1914.]

FLOOD CONTROL—IMPOUNDING WATERS AT THEIR SOURCE.

[By George H. Maxwell, executive director, National Reclamation Association, New Orleans, La.]

How few there are who ever stop to realize how easy it is to catch and control the drops of water where they fall in the form of rain or snow on the farms or in the forests of the watershed of a great river.

Or how impossible it may become to control those same drops of water when they have been aggregated into a mighty flood in the lower valleys or reaches of the river draining that watershed.

The farmers in the arid regions or in the truck gardens of New Jersey have learned by experience the value of water as an aid to plant growth, and have likewise learned how to control it and apply it for beneficial use in agriculture.

Ask the alfalfa raiser of Arizona, the orange grower of southern California, the grape grower of Arizona, the orange grower of southern California, the grape grower of New Jersey or Florida, whether they could control and use to increase crop production on their farms 1 acre-foot of water.

They will tell you they want no more profitable undertaking and an acre-foot of water.

They was the lower valley who ever stop to think what the difference is to them whether an acre-foot of water over the watershed above them (12 inches of rainfall) is saved and used to increase crop production, or allowed to run off in an unchecked and uncontrolled flood?

THE GREAT FLOOD OF MARCH-APRIL, 1913.

The great flood of March-April, 1913, in Ohio was caused by an average run-off of only 8 inches from 3,000 square miles. There are 201,000 square miles in the drainage basin of the Ohio River. A run-off of 1 acre-foot, or 12 inches of rainfall, simultaneously over that entire area, would make a wall of water a mile wide, a thousand miles long and 200 feet deep. Can you see that wall of water in your imagination? Can you imagine what it would mean if it ever gathered in a great flood extending from Pittsburgh to Cairo? The distance between those two cities is about 900 miles.

Or can you imagine what such a simultaneous run-off of 12 inches would mean if it were poured in the form of a flood into all the tributary valleys of the Ohio, the Allegheny, the Monongahela, the Muskingum, the Scioto, the Miami, the Wabash, the Kanawha, the Kentucky, the French Broad, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee?

To be exact, it would mean a flood one-third worse than that of March-April, 1913, on the Scioto and the Miami at Dayton or Columbus or Chillicothe extended to every tributary of the Ohio and devastating every valley in the drainage basin of the Ohio River.

WHY FLOODS DO NOT OCCUE EACH YEAR.

WHY FLOODS DO NOT OCCUR EACH YEAR.

WHY FLOODS DO NOT OCCUR EACH YEAR.

Why is there not such a flood every year in these valleys?
For the very simple reason that a large portion of the rainfall is absorbed into the ground and mother earth becomes a great reservoir, restraining the run-off and regulating the flow of the rivers by absorbing into the soil the water that would otherwise run off in floods.

And in addition to what is now saved from waste by being absorbed into the soil, it would be entirely practicable on all land not too steep for farming purposes to catch and hold in the soil as a reservoir an additional 12 inches of rainfall that now runs off and runs to waste.

And on all the land on which this was done the profitable production of crops would be enormously increased, the farms made to pay better, their value increased, the life of the farmer's wife made easier, and that of his family happier and more full of the things of which poverty now deprives many of them, that would make for better education and higher civilization.

PIONEERS IN NEW AGRICULTURE.

That all the rain that falls on such farm lands, not only on the flat land but on the sloping hillsides, too, can be saved and turned to profit by the farmer who has the brains, the industry, and the adaptability to do it, has been demonstrated and proved beyond question by at least two pioneers in this new agriculture. One is Col. Freeman Thorp, of Hubert, Minn., the practical value of whose work is vouched for by W. J. Spillman, of the Department of Agriculture, who has visited and examined the demonstration farm of Col. Thorp. Another is M. B. Walte, who is connected with the Bureau of Plant Industry, at Washington, D. C. Mr. Waite's demonstration orchard is near Washington and his experiments cover contour plowing, cover cropping, and preventing erosion, as well as catching all the rainfall and conserving it in the soil by methods of increasing the porosity and absorbent qualities of the soil.

It is quite true that the Government can not do the work of thus conserving on the farms the rainfall or snowfall that the farmers now permit to run to waste.

Neither could the Government compel a farmer who owned a farm on which was located a valuable placer gold mine to work the gold mine and get the gold out of the ground and into his pocket or his bank account. But the Government could show the farmer that the gold was there, and show him and all others how to do the things necessary to get the gold.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD TEACH THE FARMER.

And so the Government can and should establish a great comprehensive and complete system of training the farmers of the whole drainage basin of the Ohio River and all its tributaries how to save and use water, and stop their farms from gullying, and heal the scarred and defaced hillsides of the slopes of the Appalachians, and how to increase crop production and increase their own incomes and increase the Nation's food supplies.

The Agricultural Department can just as well do that as to teach the cotton planters how to fight the boil weevil, how to diversify their crops, how to raise more corn to the acre, or how to fatten steers for the market.

THE NEWLANDS RIVER-REGULATION BILL.

The Newlands river-regulation bill provides for just such an educa-tional campaign and system to educate farmers to enrich themselves by checking run-off and using it to raise crops instead of allowing it to go to waste in devastating floods while their crops are left to burn up with drought for the need, later on, of the moisture that should have been conserved in the soil to nourish the growing plants.

The Newlands river-regulation bill appropriates the money and gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to do everything needed to be done to make such a campaign effective and successful. Demonstration farms could be established in every county, under that bill, and farm demonstrators put to work to go straight to every farmer with the information needed to better his condition by making better use of the water available for crop production on his farms.

A farmer out in Missouri has demonstrated a way by which every guilled field in the Ohio River drainage basin, level enough to be cultivated, could be leveled and restored to agricultural use. How many farmers with guilled fields are there who know of this system? It is so cheap, simple, and effective that any farmer could adopt it. The writer ran across it by mere accident in a pamphlet issued by the W. S. Dickey Clay Manufacturing Co., of Kansas City, Mo.

The better methods of the conservation and use of rainfall in agriculture as advocated and demonstrated by Mr. Waite and Col. Thorp do not include surface irrigation. They contemplate merely the conservation of the moisture in the soil itself, an adaptation to the humid and subhumid regions of the East of principles somewhat similar to those utilized in the Campbell system of soil culture in the West, supplemented by contour plowing, terracing, cover cropping to prevent erosion, contour embankments, and other methods of conserving the rain or snowfall in the ground itself.

PLANTS NUT-BEARING TREES ON HILLSIDES.

PLANTS NUT-BEARING TREES ON HILLSIDES.

This system is applied by Col. Thorp on forested lands and forested hillside slopes, as well as on lands level enough for cultivation. He plants on the steep hilly slopes the natural nut-bearing trees of the country, conserving the run-off by contour embankments, and turns the hogs into this nut-bearing forest to harvest the crop of nuts. He finds the tree growth and the crop of nuts largely increased by saving the run-off for the nourishment of the tree, instead of allowing it to be precipitated into a stream channel to contribute to a flood.

How many millions of acres there are in the Appalachian region that could be thus made doubly profitable—by producing nuts for hog feed, systematically developing that crop, and at the same time gradually maturing a crop of timber to be harvested in the future years and then replanted according to the German system.

The conservation of rainfall in the soil is an effective method of checking sudden run-off and preventing floods, because of the enormous volume or quantity of water mother earth is capable of absorbing and holding back until it is fed to the plants and trees to aid their growth or fed to the springs or gradually seeps into the streams and replenishes their flow in the summer season.

The stupendous aggregate volume of water that 12 inches of rainfall thus absorbed into the earth would make in the Ohio Valley—a wall of water a mile wide, a thousand miles long, and 200 feet deep—has already been referred to.

IN THE VALLEY OF THE MISSOURI.

To illustrate the same condition in the arid region, in the Valley of the Missouri we have an equally striking result.

The average amount of water needed for irrigation in that country is 2 acre-feet per year. Take that amount of water out of the flooded streams and soak it into the ground on 10,000,000 acres of land and you have soaked into the ground water enough to make a flood extending from Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico in the Mississippl River 1 mile wide and 30 feet deep.

To increase the porosity and absorbent qualities of the soil, and soak the rainfall into the ground, using mother earth as a natural reservoir, is only one method of checking sudden run-off and preventing floods, but it is the most important of all, because of the enormous quantity of water in the aggregate that the earth will absorb, provided the snow, or rain is caught and conserved when it falls and not allowed to run off and accumulate in stream channels in the form of floods.

ARTIFICIAL SURFACE RESERVOIRS.

Next in order of flood-prevention measures comes artificial surface reservoirs in which the flood water can be stored until needed for some beneficial use or until the channel below will carry it without overflow.

beneficial use or until the channel below will carry it without overflow, or damage.

A multitude of small reservoirs may be more advantageous for flood prevention than a few large ones, because more widely scattered over the watershed. The value of the small reservoir is now well appreciated in the West. The floods of the South Platte River have been completely controlled and stopped by numerous small reservoirs in Colorado. There are probably a thousand such reservoirs in that watershed. They would prove just as valuable in every foothill valley of the Appalachians, for more profitable agriculture, as well as for flood prevention.

SLOGAN OF "DAM THE DRAWS."

Years ago "Dam the draws" was a slogan of the National Irrigation Congress, and to-day the governor of Kansas is promoting a State-wide campaign to advocate this idea. Among those who have proved its practical advantages and profits are J. C. Hopper, president of the Citizens' National Bank, Ness City, Kans., on his ranch near that Citizens' National Bank, Ness City, Kans., on his ranch near that place.

Under the Newlands river-regulation bill the same diligent, persistent, and comprehensive campaign of education to store water in small reservoirs should be conducted to induce farmers to conserve water in this way as well as to conserve it in the soil.

The drainage basin of the Ohio River includes the entire watersheds of the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers and all their tributaries and source streams, and throughout that entire region such small farm reservoirs would prove of enormous value for farm power and farm irrigation for fruit orchards, garden truck, and meadows for dairying. In a very few years the value of a farm reservoir for power will be so well demonstrated and widely known that no farmer will ignorantly neglect to avail himself of such an opportunity on his own farm. Much may be done, however, by an educational campaign under the Department of Agriculture to stimulate the construction of such reservoirs and farm power plants.

The same is true of farm reservoirs for irrigation. On thousands of farms in the Ohio Basin opportunities exist for utilizing such reservoirs, and the Newlands river-regulation bill contemplates that the farmer shall be shown their location and how he can make money by building and using them. The value of supplemental irrigation as crop insurance against drouth has been too thoroughly demonstrated to need argument. The Skinner Irrigation Co., at Troy, Ohio, manufactures a system of overhead pipe irrigation by which the gardener can have rain whenever he chooses to turn on the water.

All the foregoing methods of checking run-off are things that the Government can get done only by a great system of education and demonstration, such as is provided for in the Newlands river-regulation bill, to show the farmers how they may make money for themselves by better farming methods.

This brings us to the things that the Government can do under this bill to prevent floods.

The first and most immediately important is flood-storage reservoirs, such as have been surveyed and recommended by the engineers of the Pittsburgh Flood Commission and the engineers of the flood committee of Dayton.

The Pittsburgh Flood Commission surveyed and selected 17 reservoir sites that would cost about $20,000,000 to construct and would, when built, lower the floods at Pittsburgh 10 feet.

The watersheds of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers are about one-tenth of the entire drainage basin of the Ohio River, which include the Cumberland and Tennessee. It may therefore be safely estimated that $200,000,000 would create flood storage that would lower the floods at Cincinnati, Louisville, and Cairo 10 feet.

Appropriation in the Newlands Bill.

APPROPRIATION IN THE NEWLANDS BILL.

One hundred million dollars of this is provided by the Newlands bill for flood prevention in the Ohio River drainge basin. With the National Government standing ready to contribute this amount, judging by past successful experience with cooperation between the Nation and the States in such matters, it is entirely safe to assume that the States and local sections affected would more than double this amount, and that the Newlands river-regulation bill, when enacted, will settle the flood question for all those in the Ohio River Basin and on every river in that basin.

The keynote of the Newlands river-regulation bill is cooperation. It not only provides for cooperation in all the methods heretofore mentioned, but in all things necessary to perpetuate the forest and woodland cover on the watersheds.

It proceeds on the principle that it is better policy to perpetuate the forest protection against erosion and gullying and the consequent filling of navigable channels with silt, than to let the mountain sides be denuded and washed into the rivers and then spend millions to dredge them out so as to preserve the navigable channels.

The people of the Appalachian region made a grand fight for the Weeks Appalachian National Forest act. The Newlands bill merely enlarges its benefits.

The flood-prevention plan of the Newlands bill includes three classes of prevention: (1) Outlets, (2) levees, (3) source stream control and protective measures.

ADEQUATE SYSTEM OF CONTROLLED OUTLETS.

Starting at the mouth of the river it provides first for an adequate system of controlled outlets in the lower reaches on the Mississippi. This includes a great controlled cut-off, absolutely protecting the adjacent country from overflow, which would take off all the excess flood water that would otherwise go above 16 feet in New Orleans and carry it by way of the Atchafalaya to the Gulf by a route only one-third as long as the route by the Mississippi River from that point to the Gulf.

third as long as the rotate.

the Gulf.

Lowering the flood plane of the Mississippi 10 feet at the Atchafalaya would lower it on a gradually ascending plane far above this great outlet and the Atchafalaya cut-off would carry in addition the floods of the Red River and could be extended to another outlet below the bluff at Helena, guaranteeing absolute safety to all the west side country below Helena.

The Newlands bill contemplates bringing the levee system up to the Helena.

The Newlands bill contemplates bringing the levee system up to the full standard of strength proposed by the Army engineers, but it contemplates further: (a) Adequate bank protective works to be built immediately, that will prevent caving banks and stop the caving of the levees into the river. There are 749 miles of rapidly caving banks from Cairo to the Gulf, and the lowest estimate of the cost of protection against them is $86,400,000. (b) The Newlands bill recognizes the danger to the levees when they are built over a bed of quicksand or streaks of shifting sands or old filled-over channels or log jams. This danger it proposes to remove by fixing a standardized flood plane above which the flood against the levees would never rise. First, as the result of source stream control, and second, as the result of the outlet system. system

System. Furthermore, the Newlands bill recognizes the fact that as now built the levees are equivalent to long dams built on the surface of the ground without any foundations, and it contemplates the necessary cost of putting foundations under the levees in all these weak places.

GREAT INLAND WATERWAY.

Above all things the Newlands river-regulation bill contemplates a great inland waterway—a system of 20,000 miles of feeders for the Panama Canal. The great trunk artery of water-borne commerce would be the main Mississippi River from New Orleans to St. Louis, with a main branch to Chicago, another to St. Paul and Minneapolis, and a third to Kansas City, and with another main trunk artery of inland water-borne commerce on the Ohio from Cairo to Pittsburgh.

The Newlands bill recognizes the impossibility of maintaining such a waterway so long as there is annually caved into the river for each mile of its length an area of land equal to 9½ acres 66 feet deep, and the river must carry to the Guif or deposit in its channel 1,250,000,000 cubic yards of cavings and eroded material—five times as much each year as the total excavation necessary to construct the Panama Canal. There can be neither a waterway nor flood protection until that caving is stopped.

The Newlands river-regulation bill is nonsectional. It is just to all parts of the country. It is comprehensive and broad in its remedial measures, and it has nation-wide support from the press and powerful commercial organizations. It treats every river system as a unit from source to mouth, and it provides for the adoption not of one method of flood protection in one section only, but for the adoption of all practicable methods in all sections of the United States. If one section is entitled to relief all flood-menaced sections are equally entitled to it.

The bill stands on the impregnable foundation that it will really create a great system of inland waterways because it will really create a great system of inland waterways because it will really create a great system of the low-water season when it is needed to float boats on and carry the water-borne commerce of the Nation.

ISSUE OF PATENTS TO PUBLIC LANDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7951.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to call up from the calendar a bill on which there can possibly be no discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. GRONNA. It will t ke only a few minutes to dispose of I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 474) to authorize the issuance of absolute and unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed in cases where patents for public lands have been issued to entrymen under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1909, and June 22, 1910, reserving to the United States all coal deposits therein, and lands so patented are subsequently classified as noncoal in character, to issue new or supplemental patents to such entrymen, conveying to them the absolute and unqualified title to the lands so previously entered, patented, and thereafter classified as noncoal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I understood that the resolution I introduced was to be considered this morning, the discussion having been cut off by the expiration of the morning hour yes-I do not see the Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-LANDS], the chairman of the committee, present, and I do not wish to take any advantage of him, but I should like to have the matter disposed of as soon as I can do so properly,

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 241, Order of Business No. 130, which has already been under discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the considera-tion of Senate resolution 241, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to conduct an examination to ascertain whether facts or evidence exist justifying the Government in instituting proceedings for recovery of fines, etc., from the United States Steel Corporation, its subsidiaries, or any common carrier, because of unlawful rebates within the last six years, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with

Mr. TOWNSEND entered the Chamber.

Mr. LANE. I was just saying I understood that the Senator from Michigan wished to be heard on the resolution. I had the floor when the entertainment closed yesterday, and I yield

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that he wishes to make some remarks?

Mr. LANE. No; I understood the Senator from Michigan desired to speak, and I desire to give way to him. I had possession of the floor at the time the discussion closed on yesterday. I am trying to be courteous.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Oregon proceed with his discussion.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall delay the Senate only for a moment, and perhaps it is unwise for me to take any time, because the matters which I shall present may have been discussed in my absence; but as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which had consideration of this resolution, I have felt it was incumbent upon me, at least, to express to the Senate my understanding of the situation.

This resolution, as it came to the Senate, directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate something not specified and to call upon one Green, named in the resolution, to give testimony before the commission as to certain wrongs which it was supposed had been committed in the way of receiving rebates by the United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries. There was not the least information given to the Senate at the time the resolution was submitted as to any facts upon which it was based; in fact, it was expressly declared by the Senator who introduced it that he knew nothing about the facts of the case.

The resolution was sent to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and it asked the Senator from Oregon to appear before it. He did appear, and repeated what he had said in the Senate, namely, that he knew nothing about the case; that he knew of no facts connected with it; and that he did not know Mr. Green, who had presented the resolution to him. We then asked that Mr. Green appear before the committee, in order that the committee might have some basis upon which to found its report. We were told that Mr. Green did not wish to appear before the committee, but after having appeared before the committee once or twice, the Senator from Oregon concluded that he would go to his office, where Mr. Green was at that time, and ask him to come before us at our request. The Senator from Oregon came back and reported that Mr. Green wanted 10 minutes in which to decide whether he would comply with our request. At the end of 10 minutes, or about that length of time. Mr. Green appeared, and in answer to questions stated that he had felt obliged to consult with Mr. Lamar before he could make a statement to the committee. Mr. Green was asked if Mr. Lamar was his counsel, and he said, "No." I asked him if he could testify before the committee without consulting Mr. Lamar, and he said, "No." He stated that he was acting under the advice of a board of strategy, but he did not give us the names of any of the members of that board, excepting that of He further testified he knew nothing about the facts in this case. He was asked why he had had his name inserted as a witness to be called to give testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and he said he did not know about that; that they put it in. He refused to tell us anything upon which we might base a favorable report.

thought that that was not treating the committee fairly. I felt that for us to bring in a report here advising that the resolution be passed would subject us to ridicule, and Senators might rise on the floor and ask us why we had reported it and we could make no intelligent answer. I am stating this because everything was done in public in that committee, so far as I We insisted that the doors should be open. I moved that the chairman of the committee be authorized to obtain authority from the Senate to subpæna witnesses and to take testimony, and the motion prevailed. But it was thought by the committee that, inasmuch as the author of this resolution admitted that he knew nothing about the case, and wanted to conceal things from the committee, and that he would not give the name of any witness who could give any facts relating to the resolution, it would be wise perhaps to give what strength it could to the resolution by referring it to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The majority of the committee thought that way, but I confess that I did not agree with them.

wanted to have further hearings.

I have made this explanation, Mr. President and Senators, so as to show that the committee acted as best it could in reference to a resolution which evidently was surrounded by such mystery that there was no opportunity for us to get at the facts; in fact but one presumption could be drawn, and that was that no facts existed. It was also in our minds, Mr. President, that if this man Green was a crook—and I am not assuming that he is or that he was; but I do say that so far as the circumstances before us revealed he might have been, and if he wanted to get immunity for anything that he had done we wanted to know whether or not he was connected with these matters-he could not have devised a better plan than to have had himself called as a witness in order to escape prosecution in case he should have been guilty himself. He asserted that he had not been to the Interstate Commerce Commission with the matter. He said he believed it was a Democratic measure and ought to be pressed by the Democratic Party, and that he had taken it to the President, but the President would not hear him. He said he then went to Mr. Bryan-

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a ques-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly. Mr. LANE. I will ask the Senator if Mr. Green made any such statement as that—that it was a Democratic measure?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood him to say that he wanted the Democratic Party to get the benefit of it. The record will disclose what he said.

Mr. LANE. I beg the Senator's pardon, but the Senator made the flat assertion here that this man Green said this was a Democratic measure. I should like to have him state whether in fact Mr. Green made any such statement at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not wish to be understood as saying that it was a Democratic measure, but he wanted to make it such.

Mr. LANE. I should like to have the Senator point out any place where he said he wanted to make it a Democratic measure. Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the record printed, Mr. President?

Mr. LANE. It is.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The record will disclose what he said in reference to the matter. I may not have quoted him literally; but there was but one inference to be drawn from his statement, and that was that he wanted a Democrat to take up the

Mr. LANE. Then I will ask the Senator whether he has not done Mr. Green an injustice if in fact he did not say that? If the Senator has alleged here, as he has, that Mr. Green made a statement which he did not make, in the Senator's opinion has he not done Mr. Green an injustice?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly I have.

Mr. LANE. It seems to me so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I have misquoted him, I have certainly done him an injustice, and I want to correct it, and I will proceed to correct it if that is true. I have not looked up the record; but my understanding of it is-and I think I am not mistaken about it—that Mr. Green said he wanted this matter taken up by the Democratic Party; that he had gone to the President with it, and could not get a hearing there, and then he went to the Secretary of State with it, and the Secretary of State suggested that he submit something in writing, but he could not get it considered; so he had adopted the advice of the board of strategy," whose names were not given, one of them being Mr. Lamar, and that he knew nothing about the facts in the case.

I do not believe there is a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee who does not desire an investigation if any facts are presented upon which to base it; but I submit that it is an unusual proceeding for a Senator of the United States to present here a resolution about which he admits he knows nothing himself and about which the principal witness and the only witness whom he mentions in the resolution says he knows nothing, and he does not wish to tell us who does know them. I say it is an unusual thing for a resolution of that kind to be passed without further consideration and without some facts being disclosed.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan again if the witness did not say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan, that he would testify to facts, would be a witness himself, and if he did not repeat the same statement to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]? Is not that true?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know what he may have said. I am stating what I know he said, that all he knew about the matter was the names of witnesses, which he did not give, who would disclose something if they were present before the commission. I know that his testimony on this subject is conflicting, but I am stating what he did testify to.

Mr. LANE. With the Senator's permission, I should like to quote from the record at page 33:

Senator Townsend. I thought you said at the beginning that you were willing to be heard and have the case submitted here under oath before the committee.

Mr. Green. I said I should give some of the evidence myself, but those witnesses would not come without a subpensa.

Senator Townsend. That is, you could give the evidence; what they would testify to, you mean?

Mr. Green. And what I know myself.

Senator Townsend. I thought you said you did not know anything yourself.

yourself.
Mr. GREEN. I do know some things; yes.

Further down the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] said:

I am just left in a little doubt on one point which I wish Mr. Green would clear up. A little while ago he said he knew nothing of these cases of his own knowledge. He now says, as I understand it, that he does know something about these cases of his own knowledge. Is that so, Mr. Green? Which way is it?

Mr. Green. As I say, it gets back to the same proposition. I do not quite understand the legal status in which the thing is put. I do know something of my own knowledge.

Senator Lippitt, About these rebates?

Mr. Green. Yes, sir.

It seems to me that bears out my statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I said before, the testimony is quite confused; but I am stating the fact that Mr. Green testified before the committee that he knew nothing about the facts of the case, but that he did know the witnesses who did have information, and that he would disclose those witnesses to the commission but not to the committee. So I am stating what the record will disclose, I am sure, if it has been faithfully transcribed-and I have no doubt it has beenin reference to this matter.

I wanted this matter investigated. I was willing that it should be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to the Attorney General for the purpose of disclosing the facts; but for us to report that this man Green should be called as a witness without knowing his relation to the transactions about which he complained, without knowing whether his complaints were based upon any foundation of facts whatever, I could not consent to, and I do not believe any self-respecting Member of the Senate could consent to it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield the floor.
Mr. SAULSBURY. I can call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the part of the testimony which he evidently was not able to put his hand on at the moment. We were examining Mr. Green before the committee, and at page 20 the following occurred:

Senator TOWNSEND. Why was your name put in this resolution to be called by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the only name mentioned in the resolution?

The reply of Mr. Green to that direct question was this:

Mr. Green. To name those witnesses. Now, gentlemen, I want to say this, that I have alsolutely no interest in this matter except that of serving the public. I have no interest, directly or indirectly.

So I think the Senator from Michigan was quite correct in his statement that Mr. Green stated that his object in having his name put in the resolution was to name those witnesses. Afterwards there was some colloquy which seemed to indicate that he might have something that he would testify to himself, beyond that, but he absolutely disavowed any accurate knowledge which would entitle him to be heard as a witness in any court.

If I may occupy the attention of the Senate for one moment, I joined in the report of the committee to refer this matter to the Attorney General and the Interstate Commerce Commission. My reason for doing so was a desire to be courteous to the Senator from Oregon, who had introduced the resolution and, at the same time, not to give the sanction of the Senate to any unjust or improper criticism either of the Department of Justice or of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I think this resolution may be construed to make. The Senator from Oregon, I think, when he was before the committee, showed that he had not been treated with frankness by Mr. Green, the gentleman who had brought this resolution to his office. recall his mind to the condition of things as it came before our committee, I desire to read what he himself said, at page 18 of the printed record, regarding the gentleman who was engineering the proposed investigation:

Senator Lane. I saw my distinguished friend. Mr. Green, and he said he would let me know in 10 minutes, and he also assured me, for your information, that your friend Lamar is not engineering the proposition at all,

On page 20 of the testimony, Mr. Green having appeared, Senator Lippitt, to whom Senator Lane had spoken in calling him "your friend," in examining Mr. Green asked this question: Senator Lippirt. Have you consulted with Mr. Lamar within the last 10 minutes?

Mr. Green. I have met Mr. Lamar; yes, sir.
Senator Lippirt. Within the last 10 minutes?

Mr. Green. Yes, sir.

And he goes on:

And he goes on:

Senator Lippitt. You are in close touch with him?

Mr. Green. Yes, sir; I am.
Senator Lippitt. And it was at his instigation that you did this?

Mr. Green. No, sir.
Senator Lippitt. How is it that you consulted him as to whether you should appear before this committee or not?

Mr. Green. I wanted to know just what a strategist would do. I am not a strategist.

Senator Lippitt. Did you consult anybody besides Mr. Lamar within the last 10 minutes?

Mr. Green. No, sir; I was consulting him as a strategist, not as an interested party.

That was immediately following the statement by the Senator from Oregon that Mr. Green had informed him that Mr. Lamar was not engineering this resolution.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. I call the attention of the Senator to a further statement made by Mr. Green in response to some questions put to him by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend], found on page 33 of the report of the committee:

on page 33 of the report of the committee:

Senator Townsend. Would you be willing to testify if you had your attorney or Mr. Lamar in here with you?

Mr. Gheen. I have not given Mr. Lamar that designation yet.

Senator Townsend. He is the man you consult with. I ask you now, would you be willing to testify if he were in here to advise you?

Mr. Green. I do not know, Senator. Mr. Lamar has not got any authority to release those gentlemen.

Senator Townsend. I am talking about your own testimony now.

Mr. Green. Yes; I think I would.

Senator Townsend. You think you would?

Mr. Green. I think I would, Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that testimony. That was the purport of all the testimony before the committee.

The gentleman whose name was put in the resolution seemed to me to be an entirely honest man, but he was probably an enthusiastic follower of trusts and corporations. I myself do not believe it probable that there can be enough made by the Gov-ernment out of this inquiry to pay for printing the resolutions which we have been considering for so many days; but out of courtesy to the Senator from Oregon we thought this was the proper course to pursue in regard to resolutions of this kind. The matter being under investigation by both the Attorney General's office and the Interstate Commerce Commission, we thought we would simply refer the whole matter to the Department of Justice and to this body, which is charged with both the investigation of matters of this character and the enforcement of the law.

These gentlemen are unwilling, as they have stated through Mr. Green, to give us the names of the witnesses; and Mr. Green also expressly stated, at page 21, in the following terms, that he was unwilling even to tell the committee why he wanted an open hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] asked him:

Why do you want an open hearing by the Interstate Commerce Com-

Mr. Green. Well, I have my own reasons for that.

I do not think it comports with the dignity of this body to give its backing, as it is sought to have it do, to any such resolution as this. I shall certainly vote for the amendment proposed by the committee, and then for the adoption of the resolution. Otherwise I think I should vote against the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think on page 34 the whole attitude of this witness is disclosed; and possibly, after hearing this, the Senate will draw its own inference as to his attitude throughout his whole testimony

He was asked this question by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend]:

Senator Townsend. Mr. Green, have you in your mind that this committee is hostile to the disclosing of the facts?

Mr. Green. No, sir; but I mean this: That this committee calculates to squeeze everything out of me, irrespective of whether I am permitted to give it. I say, the only purpose I have got to do is to put this out, and yet this matter is put to me in such shape that I can not give it out that way.

In other words, he did not propose to allow that body-the Interstate Commerce Committee—to squeeze out of him certain testimony that he thought it would be the proper thing to give out elsewhere, and he just wanted authority from Congress to give it out according to the strategists at another place.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I wish to refer to exactly what was said in reference to making this a Democratic measure. I wish what I am to say here now to stand as a correction of anything I may have said if it was contrary to this, for I had not seen this report and spoke from memory.

On page 23 of the record this colloquy occurred:

Senator Townsend. Did you tell Senator Norms and the Secretary of State any more than you have told us and Senator Lane?

Mr. Green. I told Senator Norms more; yes.
Senator Robinson. Did you ask Senator Norms to introduce this resolution?

Mr. Green. No, sir.
Senator Robinson. Why did you not do that?

Mr. Green. Because he was a Republican.
Senator Robinson. You did not want to ask any Republican to introduce the resolution?

duce the resolution?

Mr. GREEN. I did not think it was the best strategy; no.

Also permit me to give the testimony of Mr. Green as to his personal knowledge of the matters he desired to be called as a witness to give testimony.

On pages 19 and 20 is the foundation for my statement that the witness said he knew nothing about the facts in the case. I quote first from the top of page 19:

The CHAIRMAN. How is it with reference to yourself? Have you any knowledge of these facts?

Mr. Green. Just the knowledge that I get from hearing them.
Senator Thompson. You have no personal knowledge, then?

Mr. Green. No, sir; no personal knowledge.

And again from the bottom of page 20:

Senator Townsend. All you know about this is what somebody has told you?

Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir. I did not receive any of these rebates.

Mr. LANE. That is right. He said he did not receive any of the rebates. Now, Mr. President, that opens up the subject

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question or two.

It appears from the report of the committee that there was a hearing held by the committee the proceedings of which were not taken down by a stenographer. I notice on page 16 a statement made by Senator LIPPITT, as follows:

I want to say for the benefit of one or two Senators who were not here—Senator Clapp and, I think, Senator Oliver—that the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in his testimony the other day, said that Mr. Green had not appeared before his commission; that a short time ago Mr. Lamar, who was familiarly known as the "Wolf of Wall Street," did appear and came to them with some sort of similar testimony, and that the character of the man and the character of the testimony was such that the laterstate Commerce Commission felt that it was not a matter that they wanted to go into on account of the associations of Mr. Lamar with Wall Street tactics, in the builing and bearing of stock.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan one or two questions.

Did the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission appear before the committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He did. Mr. BRYAN. Was the Senator from Michigan there when he made that statement?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it not a fact that the whole record taken together shows that this resolution was fathered by Mr. Lamar, to whom the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission referred?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was drawn by Mr. Schulteis, according to Mr. Green; but the only man whom it was found necessary for Mr. Green to consult—the only man who was a member of the "board of strategy" which was controlling this matter was Mr. Lamar.

Mr. BRYAN. And Mr. Green said that this strategist, Mr. Lamar, had no confidence in the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do. Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to state that there was no stenographer present at the first hearing, at which the Assistant Attorney General and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission were heard. My recol-lection of the statement of the chairman of the Interstate Com-merce Commission is not that the suggestion of Mr. Lamar was rejected simply because of the general associations of Mr.

Lamar, but that his proposal was rejected because it involved the condition imposed by Mr. Lamar that the commission should allow him to designate the attorney who was to conduct the investigation, and the commission thought that was not a proper thing to do

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my understanding of the testi-

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator from Michigan takes his seat, in view of what the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] has just said as to the testimony or statement of the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the effect that they had investigated this matter and did not desire to take it up and were not prepared to indorse it, I ask again, as I asked yesterday, why do the idle thing I referred to? Why send this resolution which we do not pass but merely refer it without any suggestion whatever?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not understand the Senator from Florida in his question to ask me if the commission had investigated this particular question. Mr. Clark testified, my understanding of it is, that he could not say whether the question here involved had been investigated or not. Neither could anybody, because the witness himself said that he did not know just exactly what questions were involved in some matters heretofore investigated, or what they were; only it was his understanding that they had not been presented to the commission. But there was no way for the commission to answer our question. We could not ask intelligent questions on that subject, because there was nothing to ask about.

This was a sort of blanket charge, but the commission said that in a similar matter involving rebates this man Lamar had been to them and suggested that certain things could be done if Lamar was permitted to name his attorney to make the investi-

Mr. BORAH. Now, if Mr. Lamar went to the Interstate Commerce Commission and advised them of the condition of affairs, in which he said he would like to name the attorney, that would not hinder the Interstate Commerce Commission from proceeding without permitting him to name the attorney.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not a bit.
Mr. SAULSBURY, If the Senator will permit me, I think
I can recall the statement of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would like to have it confirmed by Members who were present, but I think I recall the statement of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission before our committee. It was that, immediately when this resolution was introduced, when the name of William H. Green, of Creighton, Nebr., was mentioned, the commission had instructed an agent of theirs, who happened to be at Omaha or somewhere in Nebraska, to call at Creighton, Nebr., and interview Mr. William H. Green as to what information he had on this subject.

I only mention this as showing the entire willingness of the commission to investigate every subject connected with rebates of this character or in any way connected with the investigation which is pending in regard to the Steel Trust, thus showing to the Senator from Idaho that there was no disinclination on the part of the commission to ascertain any facts. They might, of course, disregard the statements of unreliable witnesses, and probably should do so, but when anything is given to them they will doubtless investigate it. In this case, according to my recollection—and the chairman of the committee confirms that recollection-they had an agent call at Creighton, Nebr., on Mr. Green and try to get the information he had.

Mr. BORAH. I did not ask the question with a view of reflecting on the Interstate Commerce Commission, but rather for the purpose of disclosing the utter uselessness of sending it back to them in this form or manner.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I quite agree with the Senator in that respect. I think I suggested, when the matter was up originally, that all Mr. Green had to do was to go to the commission and this whole matter would be investigated. Mr. Clark stated before the committee that if they could get the facts it would not require any resolution of Congress to induce action on the part of the commission, for they wanted the facts. But I remember the Senator from Idaho suggested that it would go with greater force, possibly operate more strongly upon them, if the Senate called their attention to it.

So, while I did not support this report as it comes here, I wanted more facts by the committee, and if we were not going to have any more facts I wanted to report it adversely, because of what had been disclosed. And yet I can see that the reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission may induce Mr. Green himself to go before the commission, or they may call him before them as they are trying to get him, and he may disclose the names of some of the witnesses so that they can examine those witnesses and find if there is any foundation for the implied charges made by Mr. Green.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission is trying to get Mr. Green before them?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It ordered its representative to stop off in Creighton, Nebr., to see him. We were informed, or at least we understood, that the witness was in the city, but we could not locate him until the Senator from Oregon told us he was in his office.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should like to give a brief history of this resolution and call attention to a number of things connected with it which have attracted my attention.

I brought the resolution here in the manner in which I have related on a number of occasions. Mr. Green is the man who asked me to present it. He stated that he was in possession of and had access to facts which would prove that the Steel Corporation had illegitimately robbed the people of this country out of $75,000,000 or thereabouts; that there was a suit pending now for the dissolution of that trust in which these facts had not been alleged, and if they were not presented speedily and promptly and in a manner which would attract the attention of the Department of Justice to them the people of this country would lose a large sum of money; that the manner of securing these rebates was unfair to the people of the country; and that as a representative of the people of the country he thought it was my duty, if on taking it up I found him to be a reputable man, making a statement in good faith, to present the matter to the Senate and secure their assistance, if I could, in having this nefarious method of doing business discontinued.

I took that view of it. He referred me to the Secretary of State as being a man of his acquaintance. Mr. Bryan by telephone informed me that Mr. Green's reputation as an honorable man was good. I called on Senator HITCHCOCK, and he stated that as far as he knew the reputation of Mr. Green was that of an absolutely honest man. Senator Norris told me the same. I found that the man had been interested at one time in the investigation of the Harvester Trust, and had rendered the Government aid there; that he assisted in breaking up that combination, which was an illegal one and was preying upon the people of this country.

I found he had been a member of the convention which nominated Mr. Wilson. He had more indorsements and more laurels attached to him than the majority of the members of this body. He had better recommendations that many of us could procure. I saw no reason to question him, and I thought the simplest way was to present the resolution. I brought it here in good I saw no reason for questioning him further.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LANE. You may; but when I become real eloquent I dislike to be interrupted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I notice the Senator did not want to interrupt others, and I will not interrupt him.

Mr. LANE. Go ahead. That was a pleasantry. Mr. TOWNSEND. No; all right.

Mr. LANE. So I presented this resolution here in good faith under the assumption that it was simply a proposition purely within the function and right and power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to handle the question. In connection with the criminal side of it, I have not given much thought. I thought that, if the facts exist, here is a commission in whom the people of this country have great confidence. They do have great confidence in the commission; there is no doubt of that; and in a few minutes or a few hours I was assured that they would be able to determine whether there was anything in it or not, and if it was a baseless charge, they would dismiss it; and if they found that the facts justified it, they could report either back here or to the Department of Justice and the thing would be in course of a proper and just adjudication.

So I brought the resolution in here, as I thought the simplest way was by presenting a resolution. Then the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body developed a desire to get it into his committee and secure possession of it by having it referred to that committee. I did not want it before his committee. I said to him that the reason why I did not want it was that there was too much delay attached to our proceedings in committee, and I did not like that method.

I am frank to say, with all due respect to the chairman, I do not like it at all. I do not think it is fair. I do not think we are doing our duty. We are merely the servants of the people and I do not think we have a right to lock them away from resolution, that there would be a preliminary trial of it there, and that is exactly what I did not want.

Now, Mr. Green in his evidence before the committee said the reason why he did not testify before that committee was that he wanted to get it before the commission in an open hearing; what he asked was that it might be tried before a jury of the whole people of this country and not in secret. Now, then, despite my protest—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that the hearings were held with locked doors.

Mr. LANE. I have not said that; I have not come to that.

I ask the Senator to be patient.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was told by one of my associates that the Senator made that statement.

Mr. LANE. I will make that assertion, and I will make it so that the Senator will have no doubt about what I say.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to correct that statement at the proper time.

Mr. LANE. The Senator will have the opportunity.

Now, then, I offered the resolution. We had our battle here on the floor, and I lost out. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I do not know what afterwards happened exactly in sequence. The next thing I remember about it I had a telephone message that the Interstate Commerce Committee was in session and were considering the subject, and I was requested to present myself. I am located on the third floor of the Senate Office Building, down a long corridor. Down the marble hall, at the near end of it, there are large double folding doors, about the size of those of this Chamber, and on those doors was painted in gold letters "Interstate Commerce." It does not say anything about committee. I assumed that that was the room. I tried to get in at the door. I tried the door knob, first one way and then the other, but it would not work; it was stubborn. Then I wandered down to the corner and came to another hospitable-looking double door. I tried that, and it was also locked tight as a drum. Then I went back and tried the other one. Then I began to get a little out of temper. A man came along, wheeling a gocart with a lot of mail. He was delivering mail. I said, "How can I get in here? Is this the Interstate Commerce Committee?" He said, "I do not know." I thought that almost anybody who delivered the mail around there ought to know the room. Another man came along, and I said as much to him. He said. "I think perhaps if you go down there and try that side door you can get in." I went to the side door, and that proved to you can get in." I went to the side door, and that proved to be true. It was smaller than the other door and not so hospitable in appearance. But, still, I got in at that door and found a small room, and on passing through it I reached the committee room, and there sat the distinguished gentlemen of the committee behind locked doors. They were behind locked doors, and one had to go around and work his way through a labyrinth into it. It is a large room, with the doorframes decorated on the side with gingerbread strips of carved marble. and is about the size of the Marble Room, and is most beauti-You could hold a ball in it.

My experience put me out of humor. I was sorry that I had gone to the committee at all. I would have kicked in that double door if I had been sure that I would have arrived in the right room after doing so and have taken the chances of getting licked for it.

Anyhow, there they were. It is said that they had no reporter. There were two distinguished gentlemen present, one of whom I was introduced to as an assistant in the Department of Justice, and the other was the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Clark. They had had some con-versation before I arrived there with the Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LANE. Very well.
Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, Mr. President, that the rooms of the Interstate Commerce Committee are three in number, and that the entrance is through the middle room, my own private room being at one side and the committee room, a very large room, on the other side.

Mr. LANE. I will ask the Senator on which door is the sign which indicates the committee?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are signs, I believe, on all the doors. It is true that the doors of the larger room, in which us. I feared, I confess, that behind locked doors would go this the committee sat, were closed, and when the Senator appeared he called attention to the fact that the doors were closedlocked, as he termed it.

Mr. LANE. They were locked.
Mr. NEWLANDS. I inquired then of the clerk of the committee why the doors were locked, and he informed me that the guides of the Capitol were in the custom of going into this room as one of the show rooms of the Senate Office Building, and that he had locked the doors in order to secure privacy. immediately ordered the doors to be opened, and so informed the Senator from Oregon, and thereafter the doors were open continuously.
Mr. LANE.

Mr. President, that may be. They were not in the habit of being open before that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say that this was at the very commencement of the hearings.

Mr. LANE. Not quite.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not quite, but very near.
Mr. LANE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he has no other signs on his doors but the one. I will ask him to look when he goes back. I do not think he can be very familiar with his rooms. He will find no signs painted "Inter-state Commerce" except upon one door, and on the door of the room through which one enters is his name in small letters, and it is dark there and it is very hard to see them. They are not easily read; they are not like the good old gold-lettered sign which you see so plainly over the door that was locked, as I say, tight as a drum, and through which you could not

I first tried that door and still another and then I found the one that was unlocked. I find he has a double-headed committee and there are two sources of information. In wandering down through the depths of the Capitol Building I came across another set of rooms with double doors with "Interstate Compainted upon them. I ask the Senator if he has rooms here, too? I should like to know. I did not go in, but I am informed that they are very fine rooms. So it is a sort of game of hide and seek as to where to find the committee to begin with, and when I did find it, as I said, it was behind locked doors, and that irritated me and I did not like it. I did not think it was proper. I think the doors should be wide open, and when these hearings take place, hearings of a nature which involve matters of most serious import to the people of this country, the doors should be kept open, and the public should be invited there.

The witness who came before the committee was embarrassed before this committee. He was overawed. He did not use the expression, but looked as if he felt like a stray cat in a strange garret. He said, "Now, gentlemen, I realize that I am up against the greatest brains of the country"—the room is rather dark in the corner where the committee sits—"and I am only just a 'rube,'" and he repeated a number of times that he was overwhelmed to find himself in the presence of such distinguished goat lower.

guished gentlemen.

I will state further that I am informed by the chairman that that hearing was informal. The proceedings were not public. A part of the formal proceedings are here in good legible type, but a part of them are left out. It is formal all right in some respects and informal in others. It gives full acount of that part of the seance in which the "Wolf of Wall Street" casts his shadow over the happiness of the committee, but it does not come out on the first page with the statement of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was that this was a subject which was entirely within the scope and the power of the commission; that they had full power to consider and act upon it; that they would be willing to do so, and would gladly do so if it were presented to them. So, you see, here was an easy way out of this difficulty. I did not want this matter considered in a preliminary trial by the committee and then afterwards be considered in executive session in order to decide what should be done with this matter of great public importance. I wanted it to be considered publicly where I could see what was going on. The chairman of the commission said he would take it, and I asked that he have it.

When this man had been certified to me by such eminent gentlemen, it would have been an insult to them had I refused to believe that he was a good man and a true man, whose testimony was worthy of hearing by the commission. I think he is all right; but, as I have said, he was overawed when he came in there and they put him on the grill. That was at the third meeting-the meeting where they had an official committee

By the way, before we go farther I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that before I called his attention and the committee's attention-and there are some of its members here—to the fact that they were sitting behind closed doors considering this question of great and paramount importance there had been other men trying that door after I had failed to get in, for I stood close to it, down at the end of the table, and I heard them, but they could not get in. That is the reason why I called your attention to it-for the reason that, after I failed to get into your committee room, others were trying your doors and they could not get in. Then you asked your clerkor instructed him-to unlock the door; but he did not open it. No one else came around. I do not think people are in the habit of getting in at that door. There are not many visitors.

The witness whom I offered to present said, upon further inquiry, that he did have knowledge of facts concerning rebates. He said that specifically, although that statement of his is at all times overlooked by those opposing this resolution. His first statement, which he corrected afterwards, is the one which has been played up in the discussion which has taken place upon this subject.

If you will read the testimony, you will find that there was almost no interest evinced in regard to the great matter of the wrong which had been done to the people of this country; that the great Steel Trust and its methods were matters in regard to which little curiosity was evinced; but there was a search all down the line of the testimony of this witness as to what he knew, what other witnesses there might be whom he could bring to prove his assertions, and inquiries into his character and what influence the "Wolf of Wall Street" had upon the matter. You will find but little regard paid to the conduct of these other wolves who in one year steal more money than the "Wolf of Wall Street" could pick up in a hundred years, and who have robbed the people of this country each and every year-indeed, if the truth about them is told, if the information which I have received from many reputable quarters is true, they have robbed the people of this country of more in one year than all the yeggmen and highway robbers take out of the people in a century. There was but little interest in that. I resented the attitude of the committee in that respect. The only information that committee should have desired to ascertain was, Is this a reputable and honest witness; does he think he tells the truth? If so, then it is our duty to help him, not to badger him and to cause him unnecessary embarrassment. Read the testimony. The "Wolf of Wall Street," Lamar, is no doubt nosing about this affair. It is a gigantic one; but here is a direct, specific charge, and it is for you, the servants of the people, to deal with it as you please. It is a charge that a corporation, the largest in existence in this country, has been systematically robbing the people of this country of millions upon millions of dollars by nefarious and thieving processes, and here we are fiddling away day by day, fearing that the Wall Street" will upset us in some way if he has anything to do with it; we are mincing along with it in the fear that we may do something which will not balance with the traditions of this body and in some way compromise ourselves, instead of going directly at the matter and putting it before the Interstate Commerce Commission and letting them settle in three hours, as they will, whether or not the allegations made are true or not. I am assured by other persons, whom I know personally, who do not know either Mr. Green or the "Wolf of Wall Street," who never saw either one of them, that these conditions do exist. There was a man who came to my office since this matter came up, the publicity given it having attracted his attention, who assured me that a committee had been sent out from the Pacific coast to consult the head of the Steel Trust in an effort to secure lower rates upon the structural building material upon which the railroads had refused to give a rate. were told by the railway companies' agents that that matter was in the hands of the Steel Trust, and that they would have to go there for relief. When they came here the boon was denied them by the Steel Trust. This man also told me that not 1 pound of structural steel coming from their mills is allowed to go over any route except that which the Steel Trust designated to go over any route except that which the Steel Trust designation of the steel trust de nates. The man Green may be an infernal liar. I do not think he is; I think he has stated the truth; but since this investigation started, since they have been taking up our time upon this resolution which I introduced here, a statement has been published in the papers of this city and in papers all over the United States, to the effect that the Interstate Commerce Commission has detected one of the subsidiary companies of this great trust accepting rebates to the tune of millions and millions of dollars. That corroborates what the man Green says. The "Wolf of Wall Street" apparently had nothing to do with that. Whether he had or not, if the statements are true, I do not see what difference it makes whether or not he had any connection with the matter.

As I said the other day, if he could wolf Wall Street he has been wolfing among wolves. If stocks went down, that would not be a greater crime than it is to keep the price of stocks up by means of rebates and other evil practices; it would not be as great a crime as these other criminals are committing. seems to be a question, according to some, the solution of which depends upon the "Wolf of Wall Street." The theory is held by many others that it is very hard to get justice from the hands of the large corporations, and that it is hard work to get this Government to act in behalf of the people.

A short time ago there died one of the greatest financiers of the country, who is said to have dug the entrails out of the New Haven Railroad system. Talk about "wolfing Wall Street"! The process of wolfing had been practiced on the people of New England, widows, orphans, and trust funds, to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars by the largest firm of financiers in this country, that of the late lamented J. P. Morgan, who is said to have manipulated that affair. Those affairs, if the truth be told, are absolutely as criminal and as barefaced thefts as were ever practiced on a community, yet he is reported to have said before he died that he relied upon, and that his great desire was to have his son continue to disseminate, the doctrine of salvation and the washing away of sins through the blood of the blessed Redeemer; and then he reached down in his hip pocket and pulled out a harp and lit out for the gates of Para-dise, where I suspect St. Peter reached behind a post and met him with a baseball bat.

Now, as I have said, this is a simple proposition, and it is a fair one. I am not in any wise—and Mr. Green assures me that he is not—depending upon the "Wolf of Wall Street," Mr. Lamar. You can put that theory to one side. I believe if you ever allow him to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission to present in open daylight and before the public the facts which he will produce in relation to the statement which he has made, that this company is guilty of this crime, that he will prove it, and the "Wolf of Wall Street" will stop him not one whit, nor will he help him. I hold no brief for him; I care no more for him than you do. It is a question independent and outside of him; but I do not want this investigation concealed or knocked out on the assumption that that is the crux of the

Now, then, I am going to say one more unpleasant thing, and then stop. Here is your report that you have put in and have been quoting-your report of your proceedings, doctoreddoctored report, played up as to some facts and others minimized; some interrogatories kept out of it entirely. What, the "Wolf of Wall Street"! Yes. If you are going to put in a report to the Senate, put it in full and complete. I challenge it; I challenge it-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?
Mr. LANE. I do not want to do so at this time.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to enforce the rule against charging Senators with improper conduct. That may not and must not proceed in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. LANE. I was stopped before I finished my sentence.
Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order. A distinct charge has just been made here that a committee, or members of a committee, or the chairman of a committee, have tampered with a stenographic report; that questions have been taken from it. Now, Mr. President, all the rest of this stuff about locked doors is not worthy of anybody's attention, but that is a serious charge, which ought not to be made.

Mr. LANE. Will you allow me

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is insisting that charges of bad faith and dishonesty may not proceed in the Senate of the United States

Mr. LANE. I withdraw that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. While the present occupant of the

Mr. LANE. Then I withdraw that. I do not wish to do anything that is unparliamentary, and I do not wish to make any reflections. I was going to qualify that statement by saying that it might have been done by error, but there are questions which were asked that do not appear in this record.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I make the point that the Chair having called the Senator to order, he must take his seat under the rules until the Senate permits him to proceed.

Mr. LANE. I will sit down.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the reading of the Reporter's notes as to what the Senator from Oregon did say. stood him to say that certain features of the report had been "played up" and certain features minimized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Reporter will read from his notes.

The Reporter read as follows:

Now, then, I am going to say one more unpleasant thing and then stop. Here is your report that you have put in and have been quoting—your report of your proceedings, doctored—a doctored report, played up as to some facts and others minimized; some interrogatories kept out of it entirely. What, the "Wolf of Wall Street"! Yes; if you are going to put in a report to the Senate, put it in full and complete. I challenge it; I challenge it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I observe from hearing the language used by the Senator from Oregon read by the Reporter that there is no charge contained in it against any Senator.

Mr. LODGE. It is against the committee; against the whole body of the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator will pardon me for just a moment until I complete what I have to say. The Senator from Oregon did charge that the report was not a correct report, and, apparently, impliedly charged that it was intentionally not correct.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order that debate is out of order. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule XIX, section 2 and section 4, on page 19 of the Manual.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any question of doubt about what the rule is.

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words, impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The charge is directly as to the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, whom the Chair knows are Senators of the United States of America, and when the rule is transgressed it is the duty of the Presiding Officer to call the Senators so transgressing to order, and, when called to order, he is required to sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate and until it is granted.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. HUGHES addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Proceeding with the parliamentary inquiry which I was addressing to the Chair, I desire to inquire whether the Senate has not the right to hear discussed in the Senate, and to inquire, for the purpose of informing itself, whether or not the report of proceedings had before a committee is a correct report of what proceedings were actually had. Is there anything in the rules of the Senate which forbids such an inquiry? If there is anything in the rules which forbids it. I am unaware of it; and if so, it would be a very unfortunate situation that the Senate could not inquire into the truth of proceedings reported to it.

I do not question the ruling of the Chair upon the other matter, as to the prohibition of impugning the conduct of Senators; but the inquiry which I am now making has no relation whatever to any charge of misconduct made against any Senator, but it is as to whether or not, when the statement is made in the Senate that a report which we are considering is not a correct report, if we have not the power to inquire into the truth or falsity of that assertion? If we have not that power, we ought to have it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator to permit the Reporter to read the language of the Senator from Oregon. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that we could not hear it over here.

Mr. JAMES. I move that the Senator from Oregon be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I insist that the notes be read. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has the right to hear the language. The Reporter will again read. Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator from Washington yield be-

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the notes be read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think in the interest of orderly pro-

Mr. HUGHES. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if he would yield the floor for the purpose of having the motion put that is suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, and then the language can be read.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I insist on the reading of the language. Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that the language can be read on that motion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let it be read first. Mr. HUGHES. Then the whole question would come before the Senate as to whether or not the Senate would permit the Senator from Oregon to proceed in order.

Mr. JAMES. The only motion that was in order after the Senator from Oregon was called to order was a motion that he should be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I insist that we have a right to have read the language used by the Senator from Oregon. It has been read, but there was so much confusion in the Chamber at the time that the Senators in this part of the Chamber did not

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi for that purpose

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Reporter will again read the language.

The Reporter read as follows:

What, the "Wolf of Wall Street"! Yes; if you are going to put in a report to the Senate, put it in full and complete. I challenge it; I challenge it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I insist that the motion I made is the proper order of the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I decline to yield to the Senator, for the moment, for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to insist upon my parliamentary inquiry as to the limits of debate upon an assertion made that a report which we are considering is not a correct report. That question is entirely dissociated from the question of privilege, that no Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not a parliamentary inquiry. When the question comes before the Chair, the Chair will rule on it; but the Chair refuses to inject into the RECORD an obiter dictum.

Mr. JAMES. Then, I move that the Senator from Oregon be allowed to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that do not wish to cast any reflections upon it as a body, nor do I desire to do it an injustice in any way. I may make mistakes; if I do, I will make amends conscientiously

As I was saying-and I had about finished-the people of this country will not prosper by the enactment of modified laws dealing with the tariff, with the currency, nor will they suc-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to understand from the Senator from Oregon whether he withdraws the charge which he has made, that this report is a "doctored" report.

Mr. LANE. A doctored report?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.
Mr. LANE. Yes; I am willing to leave that out. Yes; I will withdraw that term "doctored."

I should like to ask a question for information. If there was evidence given there which I heard and it does not appearquestions asked by the chairman—am I allowed to call attention to that without insult to the committee? Is that a breach?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I could not hear what the Senator said. Mr. LANE. I say if there were questions asked witnesses there which were not printed in that report, am I not allowed to call attention to them?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. And if there was evidence given there before that committee informally which was left out of your statement, your edited statement, your preface, am I not allowed to call attention to that without getting in contempt of this body?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. Then what shall I call it? What is the term oy which it should be characterized?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator could certainly make a statement regarding this matter that would be a truthful one and a candid one without impugning the action or the motives of his brother Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about that. Mr. NEWLANDS. The fact was that on the first day of the meeting of the committee upon this subject there was no stenographer present. I had sent notice to the Attorney General, the Chief of the Bureau of Corporations, and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, asking them to appear before our committee with a view to ascertaining whether any action was pending in either one of those bureaus or departments relating to this subject matter; and an invitation was also extended to the Senator from Oregon to be present. We had no idea at that time as to whether there would be any necessity for taking any testimony or having any stenographer present, and statements were made by the Senator from Oregon and by these officials or their representatives which were not taken down by a stenographer; so, of course, in annexing the stenographic report to this report, we were able to give practically only the hearing of Mr. Green, all of which was taken down, and all of which was presented.

Those are the facts. If the Senator wishes to state anything that occurred at the hearing when the stenographer was not there, he is at liberty to do so. Possibly Members who were there may differ as to the exact language that was used, but I am sure there will be no material difference between any who were there as to what took place and as to what was said.

As to the hearings, as I have already stated, there are three rooms assigned to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the central room is the entrance, though there are signs upon the other rooms. The doors of the very large room, in which the committee meetings are held, are generally open. The Senator from Oregon tested one of those doors, instead of the main entrance, and found it locked, and called attention to it as soon as or shortly after he entered the room. I immediately inquired of the clerk as to what was the cause of the locking of the door. I was unconscious that it had been locked. He informed me that it was the custom of the Capitol guides to bring crowds of sight-seers into the large committee room, and that he had locked the outer doors of this room, not locking the main entrance of the suite, with a view to securing privacy for the hearing. I immediately gave him orders to have them opened, and the substantial part of the hearing was held with open doors immediately after the Senator from Oregon called attention to the fact that the doors were locked.

Mr. SAULSBURY. And nobody came in.
Mr. NEWLANDS. And nobody came in that I can recall.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President-

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LANE. I yield. Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to ask whether there is any question of their being a full and complete report here of the hearings when there was a stenographer present?

Mr. LANE. There is a matter which I consider of great importance, and I presume most of you do not, yet it is one which I think is of prime importance to the people of this country, and that is that they shall have access to and full knowledge of the manner in which their business affairs are carried on. I feel that we are the servants of the people and our first duty is to them, and that in dealing with their affairs we should deal with them openly and not go behind closed doors into executive sessions and bar them out. I am further of the opinion-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President-

Mr. LANE. Just a moment, and I will be through. It will not take me a minute more.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask a question right there, if I may.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very much interested in this matter. While I knew nothing about the report, I should like the Senator to answer directly, if he can, whether the report as printed does not contain all that was taken down by the stenographer?

Mr. LANE. I was just going to come to that point, Mr. President. I was leading right up to that.

I claim, and I hold the opinion and the fixed belief, that no good, or not much good, would be accomplished for the benefit of the people of this country until that system is adopted.

When I went to the committee room, the main door of that committee room, which has the sign upon it-if that is any indication of the main door—a double door, with the sign upon it which says "Interstate Commerce"—was locked. I tried it on two different occasions. I heard others try it. I heard them fumbling with the door knob when I was inside the room. Then, afterwards, during the queries which were being made, then, afterwards, during the queries which were being made, when an official stenographer was taking this testimony, the chairman of the committee said to the witness, "You see, now, that you are having a full, free, and open public hearing, that the doors are open"; and I called attention to the fact that there was not a soul in there but the committee, and that an "open public hearing," so far as public access to it was concerned, did not exist. Do you remember that, or something like that? like that?

That is not in here. I consider that important. Why that query should be left out and the other left in is a thing I did not understand; nor did I understand why, on the other side of it, in the preface, which is the report, a part of the proceedings which they say were informal should be given space, and the very most essential statement coming from the Interstate Commerce Committee, in my opinion, should be left out.

That was the reason. Out of respect for the Eenate I want to withdraw anything reflecting upon it, and I will withdraw that language. I wish to say, however, that in my opinion the report is inaccurate. I believe it to be inaccurate. I did not like it, and I do not like it, and there is nobody going to make me say I do if I can help it.

I do not want to have my language unparliamentary, nor to have it do injustice to anyone; but I expect to get fair treatment, and I think I am entitled to it. I do not want to say anything harsh or offensive; but I want to insist that this report does not present the proceedings in the manner in which I consider they should be presented in fairness.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. Has the Senator investigated the stenographic report and compared it with the printed report

What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I mean the notes taken down by the stenographer of those hearings.

Mr. LANE. No. Mr. TOWNSEND. They must be in existence.

Mr. LANE. I do not know anything about them. I have never seen them. The Senator refers to the manuscript, does he? Mr. LODGE. The original stenographic notes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The original stenographic notes would show whether or not there has been any change in the printed report. I was wondering if the Senator had made a comparison of them.

I do not read shorthand. I have not seen them. Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, the Senator from Oregon complains that at one time during the proceedings, when a stenographer was present and taking the testimony, he suggested that the doors ought to be opened and complained because there was not sufficient publicity, and that his suggestion and the replies thereto did not appear in the record of the proceedings of the committee. Is that correct?

Mr. LANE. No; that is not it. I referred to the question which was asked, or the assertion which was made, by the chairman of the committee to the witness, that "Here you have a full and open hearing; the doors are unlocked"; and it struck me as being funny and ridiculous for the reason that the doors were closed, and that there was not a soul there outside of the committee and the witness. That kind of a "public hearing," and an assertion that that was a public hearing, struck me as being funny and I mentioned it. I made sarcastic comments upon it that were cut out.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator if, at the time when he made these observations and the chairman responded, there was a stenographer present and taking the testimony?

Mr. LANE. That is what I am assured by the chairman of Yes; it was the day when these official hearings the committee. were held, and the stenographer was there when the witness Green was upon the stand as a witness.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not know much about this resolution. The principal objection that seems to be urged against any investigation is that the complaints emanate from a scoundrel by the name of Lamar, and that, he being a scoundrel, anything he might say should not be given any consideration.

I do not know whether Lamar is a scoundrel or not. the impression that he is from what I have read about him, but if he has any information relating to violation of the laws by the Steel Trust his character should not be any bar against any investigation of the information that may come from him.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator whether he thinks it was the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to comply with Mr. Lamar's proposition, which struck them as a corrupt proposition?

Mr. BRISTOW. If Mr. Lamar has made a corrupt proposition to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it is a proposition in violation of law, he ought to be prosecuted for it.

Mr. LODGE. He said he would furnish the information, but he required to be allowed to name his attorney as the attorney for the commission.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes. I take it for granted that such a proposition would not receive any respectful consideration from any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other officer of the United States Government who had any character, because certainly they would not let Lamar select the prosecuting officers for anybody. Mr. LODGE. As I understand, unless he got his terms he would not furnish his information.

Mr. BRISTOW. That may be true; but if he has any information, he can be compelled to furnish it, and it is for us to decide whether or not that information is worth anything.

Mr. LODGE. Then let us take a vote right off and decide it. Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator— The Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

A bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for coop-The SECRETARY. erative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President— Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside that the matter before the Senate may be completed.

Mr. LODGE. Let us vote and finish it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Georgia ask that it be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside, in order that we may reach, if possible, a vote upon the matter before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall not object, but I am a great deal more interested in the agricultural bill than I am in the farce which is now going forward in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So am I. Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

Mr. BRISTOW. I suppose the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is making a speech, though he has not addressed the He has said that he is tired of the Senate being dragged around here as the tool of a blackmailer. That may be true. It may be not just as inappropriate for the Senator from New York to make such remarks as it was for the Senator from Oregon to make the remark he made a short time ago, but we seem very tender when it comes to discussing the Steel Trust, the stock of which has gone up 10 per cent, $500,000,000 of which is water and represents not a dollar of invested capital. When that great corporation is under discussion here we examine with great care the witnesses who may be called against it to see whether or not they have a standing that is reputable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Was the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside granted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been granted as yet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I object to the request.
Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York. Mr. ROOT. I regret that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow], casually overhearing, and without any fault or purpose on his part, a remark I made to the Senator from Iowa, should have seen fit to make it a matter of public discussion.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Kansas is in the habit of doing those things. Personally I am tired of it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection has been made to proceeding with this matter.

Mr. BORAH. If we are going to continue this discussion, we will all continue it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I objected to the request to lay the unfinished business aside. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] as being entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President— Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada? Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada for any question touching the bill that is now before the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas on the same condition

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the remark made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], which I did not distinctly hear, read from the Reporter's notes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that the request at this time is not in order. Many Senators are in a somewhat bad humor, and I think the best course is to go along with the regular order. I insist upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether the Senator from Iowa yields for that purpose to the Senator from Kansas or does not yield to him.

sas or does not yield to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. For the purpose of having a remark made by the Senator from Missouri read, assuming that no discussion of the question will follow it, I have no objection to yield.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is that demanded as a question of personal privilege?

Mr. BRISTOW. My demand is as a question of personal privilege, if necessary.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from Iowa will permit

Mr. CUMMINS. Let this matter be determined.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let one question be decided at a

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for that purpose, but following it I will not yield for any discussion.

Mr. STONE. I hope the Senator will yield for a discussion and let us settle the whole thing now.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Georgia desires to yield to the Senator from Kansas, I am willing.

Mr. STONE. I have gotten tired of this performance of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator yields for that purpose, he ought to yield for the purpose of a reply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will Senators take their seats? The Senator from Iowa having yielded to the question of personal privilege, if the Reporter heard the language he will read it.

The Reporter read as follows: Mr. Stone. The Senator from Kansas is in the habit of doing those things. Personally I am tired of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope we may now turn from the resolution, which undoubtedly will be taken up again on Monday, to the bill under consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to make one statement in a single sentence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator to make the statement, but not for the purpose of discussion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is all. I am not sure whether the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Lane] made a complete withdrawal of the charge that this report is doctored.

Mr. LANE. Yes, Mr. President; I wish to say that I withdrew that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well; then I accept your withdrawal. I was about to state to the Senate that if a withdrawal was not made fully and completely I should ask for a committee of investigation

Mr. LANE. I withdrew it.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7951) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, one aspect of the comparison I made yesterday between Georgia and Iowa related to the size of the improved farms. When I examined the report of the Census Bureau I was surprised to find that the average size of an improved farm in Georgia was 42 acres. I was not so much surprised to find that the average size of a farm in Iowa was 135 acres, because I happened to know it before.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the Senator's source of informa-

Is it from the census report?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is from the census report. I had the good fortune to receive a little information upon the point after the Senate adjourned last night, and with the consent of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], who gave it to me, I may be permitted to suggest that the ownership of farms in Georgia is probably quite as large if not larger than in Iowa. But I am told that the owner of land rents upon some terms, either in cash or for a part of the crop, small pieces of his holding, and that each of the persons thus cultivating a small tract of land is regarded as a farmer, as he well might be, and that the tract of land which he holds and cultivates in this manner is regarded as a separate and distinct farm. With that suggestion, which did not occur to me at all, the explanation of this diversity in size between the two parts of the country is easy and clear.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Iowa will yield to me-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At this point I will state that I think the Senator's last explanation is unquestionably correct. There are quite a number of large tracts of land owned in the State where small farms are rented and rented perhaps continuously for years by the same family. I am told in the Census Office that under those circumstances they treat a piece of land occupied by a distinct family as a distinct farm. The term of rental usually is one of joint participation in the gross receipts, the landlord furnishing the stock and advancing the provisions and furnishing the money to buy the fertilizers, and the cropper, as he is called, occupying a farm perhaps of 50 acres with his family, handling it practically as his property under the direc-tion and supervision of the owner of the land, and continuing it frequently for quite a number of years.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest another comparison between Iowa and Georgia. I think it must be assumed that, generally speaking, the men who vote are the more responsible people of the Commonwealth, and that their influence will do more toward improving the conditions of the State, and more toward improving the manner in which the soil is cultivated, than an equal number of people who do not exercise the high franchise of the voter. I find that in 1912 there were cast in Georgia for presidential electors 121,524 votes. In the same year there were cast in Iowa, with practically the same population, 492,356 votes. I do not suggest, Mr. President, that this comparison creates a standard which should in and of itself be accepted as the proper one for the distribution of this anpropriation. I only mention it as one of the things that indicates that States like Iowa are not fairly dealt with in the distribution.

I group several States in order that the comparison that I have made may be seen to be not peculiar to the two States I have mentioned.

I have before me a table upon which there are noted certain statistics regarding 12 States of the South and 12 States of the North. I have taken from the North the chief agricultural States. The Southern States that I have named are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia. Alabama is to receive out of this appropriation 3.58 per cent;

Arkansas, 2.78 per cent; Florida, 1.08 per cent; Georgia, 4.19 per cent; Kentucky, 3.51 per cent; Louisiana, 3.22 per cent; Mississippi, 3.22 per cent; North Carolina, 3.83 per cent; South Carolina, 2.62 per cent; Tennessee, 3.53 per cent; Texas, 5.99 per cent; Virginia, 3.21 per cent.

These 12 States receive in the aggregate of the appropriation 29.89 per cent, practically 40 per cent, and I shall hereafter use that percentage because it abbreviates my address. These States produced in 1910 an agricultural output of the value of $3.236,-398,813. The 12 States I have taken for comparison in the North are Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, and Wisconsin. Without reading the percentages which each of these States receive, it is sufficient to say that the 12 receive 36.11 per cent, which, for brevity sake, I will call hereafter 36 per cent, and which, for brevity sake, I will can hereafter 50 per cent, and these States produced in 1910 agricultural crops and produce of the value of $6,184,292,673, practically double in value the product of the 12 States which I first mentioned. These 12 States receive of the appropriation here provided for 36 per cent, against 40 per cent received by the Southern States.

I can not believe that such a mode or plan of distribution does justice to all the people of the country. I am forced to the conclusion that if the purpose is to increase the general volume of agricultural products so that prices may decline with-out interference with the fair profit of the producer, we ought to give more attention than is here given to the 12 States which produced in 1909, I think, quite 50 per cent of the entire agricultural product of the country. The value of all the agricultural product of the country, as I take it from the census report for 1910, was $12,337,644,446, and the 12 Northern States which I have mentioned, produced 50.12 per cent of the whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What year was that?

Mr. CUMMINS. 1910; the year adopted by the Census Bureau for their last census report upon agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is the census of 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be 1909. I thought the statistics were for 1910, but I may be mistaken about that. The value of the agricultural product for that year, whether 1909 or 1910, in the 12 Southern States was 26.25 per cent of the whole, and yet in the effort to increase the aggregate output, to make each acre of land that is capable of cultivation bear more for the use of the country, the States which produced but 25 per cent re-ceive 4 per cent more of the appropriation than do the States which produce 50 per cent of the whole.

I agree that this appropriation can not be divided by any plan that may be conceived with exact equity. I know that some arbitrary basis must be adopted and that inequalities and injustice will result; but we ought to reduce those inequalities and that injustice to a minimum by finding some test or some standard that would, in the greater number of instances, result in justice.

Allow me to make a comparison between some other States. We will take the State of Nebraska as an illustration. Nebraska receives, under the plan of the bill, 1.79 per cent of the appropriation. Nebraska produced in 1909, or, according to the last census report, agricultural products to the value of $466,865,189. Florida receives of the appropriation 1.08 per cent, nearly as much as Nebraska. Yet Florida produced in that year but $65,375,202.

I take another State, Missouri. Missouri receives under this distribution 3.84 per cent; but Missouri produced of agriculture in 1909, $591,094,522. There are but one or two States that in that year produced an agricultural output of greater value than Missouri

Now, remember, she receives under this bill 3.84 per cent of the whole. I will take a State that receives exactly the same amount, and I am glad the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] is listening to me. North Carolina receives 3.83 per cent of the appropriation, but North Carolina produced in 1909 but $241,882,595 worth of agricultural products, very much less than one-half of the product of the State of Missouri. And yet in the effort to increase the fertility and the productivity of our soil, in the aid that we are giving to the States to carry forward their educational work, notwithstanding the fact that Missouri is capable of doing so much more for the people of the Nation than is the State of North Carolina, the latter is given the same aid as the former. I do not believe that is just or fair. I think Missouri is entitled to more than North Carolina, because I believe that the money spent in Missouri will yield greater results than a similar amount of money spent in North Carolina.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi. Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator any figures to show the per capita production of each of the citizens of the different States? Has the Senator any facts showing the relative productive power or capacity of the citizens of the State of Missouri to the citizens of the State of North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not, Mr. President. I do not be-

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the difference in population? Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe there are any such statistics. Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator the population of the two

Mr. CUMMINS. I will give the population.
Mr. VARDAMAN. The rural population.
Mr. CUMMINS. I will take Missouri. Missouri, according to the statistics, has a total population of 3,293,335.
Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the rural population?
Mr. CUMMINS. The rural population of Missouri is given as

1,894,518

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the rural population of North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course practically the same, or the perlation, so called, of 1,887,813, practically the same as Missouri, because that is the basis of the computation of these per-centages; and inasmuch as North Carolina receives the same percentage as does Missouri, her rural population must necessarily be the same.

Mr. VARDAMAN. According to these figures, Mr. President, the productive capacity of the rural citizen of Missouri is very much greater, as shown by the census report, than that of the rural citizen of North Carolina, is it not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; assuming that the 1,800,000 people of Missouri who are listed as of the rural population are all engaged in agriculture. They produce, as I said a moment ago, $591,094,522 of agricultural output; and the 1,887,000 of rural population in North Carolina, if they are all engaged in agriculture, produce but $241,882,595.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the purpose of this bill is to enhance and increase the capacity of the citizen to produce.

Mr. CUMMINS. Ah, Mr. President, that is quite true; but we must not only take into account the capacity of the citizen to produce, but we must also take into account his opportunity to produce. This money ought to be expended where it will be of the greatest service to the people of the United States. do not believe that we ought to divide the appropriation upon the theory that the people of North Carolina are more in need of education or instruction than are the people of Missouri. If that were so, my answer would be at once, "Let us give North Carolina proper aid"; but we must depend upon the States themselves to equalize, if you please, the educational stages at which their people have arrived.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I thought the purpose of this bill was to develop and improve the man, for, as the old saying goes, "there is very much more in the man than in the and if the people of North Carolina are backward, if they are not so progressive as are the people of Missouri-

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not ready to say that. Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me that, if the Government is going to lend aid in a matter of this kind, it should be given to those who most need it. We do not want to send missionaries to Christians. It is the heathen that we are trying to bring to righteousness.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is, of course, a great deal of force in what the Senator from Mississippi says, but he ignores one thing, and that is the opportunity to increase the agricultural output. I do not believe that a similar number of people in North Carolina could produce as much as the same number of people in Missouri, no matter how much education were given to those people, because I do not think their opportunity is so great.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, to be candid with the Senator from Iowa, there is an element in this question which has not yet been discussed. About 33 per cent of the population of North Carolina are of very different character; they are a different race; radically different in every respect from a large majority of the citizenship of the State of Missouri; and it does not make any difference what you may do, the capacity for producing can not be given to the colored population which the white man possesses. That is really the cause of this disparity.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall come to that presently, although I have not desired to enter upon it at all; but I may. I desire, however, to suggest, in answer to the former part of the inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi, that I have been led to believe, and I do believe, that the people of North Carolina are as far advanced in the science of agriculture as are the people of any other State in the Union; I think they have given as much attention to the subject as have the people of any State in the There have been some most gratifying examples of their Union. forwardness and their progressiveness exhibited in the Senate from time to time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, when he uses the word "people" he may be using a double middle. If he means by "the people of North Carolina" the white people of North Carolina, I have no doubt at all of the white people of North Carolina, I have no doubt at all of the correctness of his statement that they equal any part of the United States, but if the Senator means by "the people," as I suppose he does, the entire population of North Carolina, then there remains no doubt that the people of Missouri are more progressive and more intelligent than are the people of North Carolina. The percentage of the colored population in North Carolina, as given by the census, is very much less than the percentage of the colored population on the farms as a part of the representation. Most of the darkies live in the country. centage would not be the same. Let me give the exact figures. percentage of the colored population on the farms as a part North Carolina has a population of 2,206,287 and a rural population. Most of the darkies live in the country,

If the Senator will pardon me, I find fallacy in every parallel which he has drawn. If there be anything unfair about this basis of distribution, he has not thus far demonstrated it, because he has chosen in every instance to compare a State with a free, progressive, intelligent, initiative population of the white race with a State a large percentage of whose population consists of a backward, uninitiative, unintelligent, incapable black race. If the Senator were to take Iowa and compare it with Minnesota; if he were to take Kansas and compare it with Nebraska; if he were to take Alabama and compare it with Mississippi; if he were to take North Carolina and compare it with Georgia, so that there should be something comparable compared with something comparable, he would You can find that this basis fixed in the bill is fair enough. not abolish a race fact in connection with this distribution. It would be an absolute shame to the white people of the State of Iowa if they had failed to produce twice as much per capita as the entire population of Georgia per capita, with the colored race existing in Georgia. It is not at all astonishing that a State with twice the white population of Georgia should produce twice as much as Georgia produces, although that is not strictly true, for Iowa does not produce quite twice as much as Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to assert most positively that Iowa produces nothing like twice as much as Georgia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Iowa does not produce anything like twice as much?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will discuss that later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I will guarantee that the percentage of negroes constituting the rural population in Georgia is at least 45 per cent, and probably 55 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. About one-half.

Mr. VARDAMAN. A good deal more than half, Mr. President. Mr. WILLIAMS. The percentage in the State is how much, I will ask my colleague?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Forty per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A little over 40 per cent. Mr. WILLIAMS. But I will undertake to say that the percentage of that as constituting the "rural population" is at least 57 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I recognize the fact stated by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator, before he goes on, allow me to add one more fact, and that is, if there are any people in this country who do need instruction it is the southern darkies?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we are reaching the real proposition toward which I was coming. I was undertaking to show that, unless we began with the assumption that there was a part of the country that needed instruction more than another, unless there was a class of people who needed education more than another class, the basis adopted here is wrong; and I asked the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Smith], when I began, whether this bill was to be considered and this basis debated upon the assumption that there was one part of the country that needed education more than another or that there was one class of people who needed instruction more than another; and I think he replied to me, if not expressly, tacitly, that the bill was not based upon any such theory. The comparison is perfectly fair, and just for the purpose of demonstrating that, assuming equal or even stages of progress or education in the different parts of the country, the standard here adopted is very unfair to the people of my State and generally to the agricultural States of the North. I agree that there is a vast difference between the educational stage to which the negroes of the South have arrived and the educational stage to which the white people of the North have arrived.

And the Senator will add to that, I hope, WILLIAMS. that he admits that there is a vast difference between the productive capacity of the one and of the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. I agree that there is a great deal of difference between the competency, if you please, of the colored people in the South and the competency of the white racerace that has enjoyed from time immemorial advantages and opportunities which have been denied to the colored race.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to enter upon the question of whether the colored people are capable of taking on the same competency and the same education as are the white people; that is foreign to this discussion, and I shall not be led into it; but I know that they ought to have the opportunity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.
Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say, Mr. President, that I yield to no man in my desire to promote the material interests of all the people of America. I am not an enemy to the colored manor the negro, as I prefer to call him, because that is the correct term-but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the negro has not been denied the opportunity for developing which the Caucasian enjoys. As a matter of fact, in the morning of time they started together; neither had anything to lend or to borrow from the other. By reason of the initiative and the inherent qualities of the Caucasian he progressed, he evolved, he created the civilization which glorifies the beginning of the twentieth century. The negro remained stagnant; and as Charles Francis Adams found him in the heart of Africa in 1906 living in the same huts, governed by the same clubs, speaking the same language, enjoying the same no-literature, and worshiping the same voodoo that he did when the Pharaohs ruled in Egypt. Notwithstanding the fact he was touched by the tides of civilization that swept over the eastern continent in the forenoon of the ages, it made no more impression upon him as a race than a drop of water upon the oily back of a duck.

There were no stars, no earth, no time, No check, no change, no good, no crime; But silence and a stirless breath, Which neither was of life nor death; A sea of stagnant idleness, Blind, boundless, mute, and motionless.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Mississippi will recognize that he ought not to interrupt my argument for a speech of that character.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will just pardon me for a moment, the Senator's remarks indicated that he thought the negro had not been given a chance. He has been given a chance. As a matter of fact, he has received more help from the white man and has done less for himself than any race on earth. He has never had any civilization except that which has been inculcated by a superior race; and it is a lamentable fact, as proven by history, that his civilization lasted only so long as he was in the hands of the white man who inculcated it. I deny that he has been oppressed. He has had just the same opportunity that every other race has had, and if he has not improved his opportunities it is because of his racial characteristics.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, Mr. President, I do not concur with all that the Senator from Mississippi has said. I had not intended, however, to discuss that old and difficult discussion which he has injected into the debate. I said that the negroes have been denied the opportunities which the white race have enjoyed. I did not refer, of course, to the dawn of creation. I had not in mind Noah's ark and the equality of the races as they emerged from that refuge. I do say, however, that the power, no matter how it was acquired, which the white race in one way or another gained over the colored race has been abused; and in that respect they have been denied the opporwith the advance toward their maximum capacity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not yield for another speech on that subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am not going to make a speech, if the Senator will permit me. I want to correct him.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi, of course, will have an abundant opportunity to answer me. However, I yield for any question that he may desire to ask.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was simply going to make this suggestion to the Senator, because I know he wants to arrive at the truth. His mental processes are always honest and his desire universally is to reach the truth. When the Senator stated that the negro had not been given a fair, square deal, I want the Senator in his ratiocination to contrast the condition of the negro-I know what he has reference to-in 1861 in the United States with his condition when he was brought here 200 years before, and see if the white man has been his oppressor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know, Mr. President, that he has very greatly advanced since his ancestors came here 200 years ago or more. That, however, does not disprove my suggestion that he has not had the same opportunity that our own race has had; but I do not want to enlarge upon it, because I agree that we ought to extend to him now every opportunity that we can to fully enter the field of his competency, whatever that may be.

We have now come to an admission on the one side, which is accepted, I think, upon the other, that one of the reasons why the States in which the negro is found in large numbers are to receive a greater proportion of the appropriation than their circumstances or conditions would warrant, is because the negro farmer needs instruction more than does the white farmer, and that the public throughout the country will be better served and their welfare will be more greatly promoted if a larger per-centage goes into those States to give this race, which has suffered such singular misfortune, an opportunity which they otherwise would not have.

If it is put upon that ground, and if some provision can be found by which the citizens of our country who confessedly need the instruction more than other citizens of our country can enjoy the appropriation which is here provided for, would be very slow to oppose that appropriation; but to make that the basis of distribution, the real spirit of distribution, and at the same time reach it through the standard of rural population, without any recognition of the real reason, seems to me to be unfair to the country and unfair to Senators themselves.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, would it annoy the Senator for me to make another suggestion?

Mr. CUMMINS. It will not annoy me at all if the Senator will propound a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator—
Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would be unfair to the Senator from Mississippi to have his address incorporated in mine.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am always glad to be associated in any way with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is very kind, and I yield to the suggestion of the junior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thank the Senator. I wish to say to the Senator that in the discussion of this question I think we ought to be absolutely candid with each other. I think the time has come in dealing with this great problem when the Members of the United States Senate should speak candidly and should tear off the mask. I think the representatives from the South should tell those from the North, who know nothing about the question, the whole truth. The Senator from Iowa, in the very nature of things, can not understand this question as the Senators from Mississippi understand it, because in the entire State which the Senator has the honor in part to so ably represent upon this floor, there are fewer negroes than there are in the little city of Jackson, Miss.

In the distribution of this money whatever progress the negro farmer may make must be made under the direction, by the assistance, and through the counsel of the white man, because, I say to you-and I challenge any Senator upon this floor to question the accuracy of the statement-that the negro has never enjoyed any civilization except that which has been inculcated by the white man, and that civilization has lasted only so long as he was under the control and domination of the white man. When left absolutely to himself he has universally retrograded to the barbarism of the jungles. Take Haiti, for instance, where he has had control of the country for a hundred years, and where they have a revolution every year, where they worship the voodoo, and where cannibalism is common. Except in the seaports, which are dominated by the whites and mulattoes, there is no semblance of civil government upon that island to-day, which, when the negroes got control of it, was the gem of the Antilles.

In the distribution of this money the fact should not be overlooked that the South has a fearful burden to carry; it is a tremendous handicap; and while the white farmers and the white people of Mississippi and Georgia and Alabama and the Carolinas are doing everything they can to improve the moral and material interests of the negro, they have got to do it. You can not with any sort of prudence or any hope for good results leave the disbursement of this money, or any part thereof, in any other hands except those of the white people.

In my State 59 per cent of the population are black. There are counties in Mississippi where 95 out of every 100 of the population are as black as my coat. When the Senator understands that as we feel it and know it he will realize the necessity for giving to us whatever assistance there may be in this bill, in order to enable us to lead this benighted race, congenitally an inferior race, to higher and better endeavor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume that this appropriation must be expended by some government, either the government of the State or the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States is under the control of the white race, and I believe it to be true that the government of every State is under the control of the white race. I was minded to ask the junior Senator from Mississippi how much the State of Mississippi had expended, or is expending annually, in order to educate the negro farmer in the science of agri-

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be glad to know. Mr. VARDAMAN. We are maintaining the We are maintaining there one of the bestequipped agricultural and mechanical colleges in America. We are giving to the negro not less than four months, and in some instances nine months, of common-school educational oppor-tunities; and I might say, for the benefit of the American people, that the white man is paying 90 per cent of the taxes that maintain this system.

Mr. CUMMINS. My question was, How much is the State of Mississippi annually expending for the education of the negro farmer in the science of agriculture, and how is it spent?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The negro farmer has the same opportunity that the white farmer has. The negro youth has the same opportunities in the agricultural and mechanical colleges that are extended to white yout...s.

Mr. CUMMINS. We are discussing here farm-demonstration work, and we are intending to enlarge the field of that work. How many demonstrations have been made upon the farms of negroes in Mississippi during the last year?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not tell that exactly, but there have been some. There are no negro demonstrators.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not asking that; I say, upon the farms of negroes?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not tell how many there are on the places belonging to the white farmers either, but the negroes are given the same instruction, the same opportunities to learnwhich they do not embrace, of course—that the white people enjoy.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is, when a farm demonstration is going on in a community, all the people, whether they are white or black, come in to see what is being done and how it is being done? That is the way, I assume, that the work is carried on there?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; I think that is true.
Mr. CUMMINS. I infer, then, from what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi, that there is no discrimination whatever between the white and the black with reference to the demonstration work?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, I think that as a matter of fact 99 out of every 100 of the farms upon which the work is done are farms belonging to white farmers, because it is not very safe to leave that work to be done by negroes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. Then does the Senator from Mississippi think that this large proportion of the appropriation which is to be expended in the South, as compared with that which is to be expended in the North, will be expended in fair proportion for the benefit and the instruction of the negro farmer?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Absolutely, as much as he will take; as much as he is capable of absorbing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I just asked the Senator from Mississippi, in these farm demonstrations that are being made upon the farms of white men-and that is natural-whether the negro renter, the negro farmer in the vicinity, is called in to see how it is done and why it is done?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why, certainly he is. If the Senator could understand the relationship between the white man and the negro of Mississippi, he would understand that it is cordial. The negro has his place. He does not vote. He has very little to do with the government of the country; but he has in the white man a cordial, well-wishing, helpful friend, who is glad to assist the negro in any way he can to make his land produce more, to enable him to make two blades of grass grow this year where one grew last year, to instruct him in the raising of stock. There is nothing in the world that affords the average southern white man more pleasure than rendering this kindly assistance to the negro.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I understand that very well, and I have no doubt of the facts stated by the Senator from Mississippi; but it establishes just what I attempted to say, or at least what I have ventured to believe—that the real demonstration work in the South is intended to educate and instruct the white farmer, or the white owner of land, who then takes his renters or those who work his farm and gives them the benefit of the instruction he has received in demonstration work.

That shows, as I think, the inequality and the injustice of the distribution, for we need that in the North just as much as you need it in the South. Whenever you turn every white farmer into an educator, as you are trying to do, and as we all ought to try to do, he then reaches, in his way and a great variety of ways, those who actually till his soil.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator overlooks the fact that many negroes in Mississippi own their own farms, and a great many of them are prosperous, and a great many of them are absorbing ideas from the white man. If the Senator understood the negro as I do, he would understand that he is essentially an imitator. He is devoid of the initiative. He has no power of origination. He is a follower. He is controlled by his passions and his appetite and is utterly incapable of that pertinacity of purpose which is so essential to progress and permanent betterment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi is simply proving my case as rapidly as he can. That is just what I have been asserting; that you intend to take this appropriation and put it into the hands of your schools, which are, of course, controlled by the dominant race, and these schools will teach the men who are best adapted to take the instruction, and from them the information will go out to the negro farmers respect-ing the best way in which to cultivate the tracts of land which have been allotted to them, either through leases or some form of sale.

If that be true, Senators-and I am now appealing to the sense of equity which I know is uppermost and dominant in the minds of Senators, both on that side of the Chamber and on this—why should Georgia, with a vastly less population than Iowa of farmers owning the soil, and who are expected to receive the instruction directly and disseminate it, have 1.06 per cent more of the appropriation than we are to receive?

My complaint is not with regard to the conditions in the South. I know how difficult, how insoluble the problem is. have never yet heard a philosopher, no matter how impartial, present an answer to that great racial question. I do not know whether it can ever be answered; at least, I have never heard an answer that satisfied my mind.

Mr. VARDAMAN rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire me to yield again?

If the Senator desires me to answer the VARDAMAN. question why Georgia should have the assistance that this bill I will say that Georgia has over a million negroes. I hope the Senator will realize that fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. I realize that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. She has that burden to carry. She has that incubus upon her material progress

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, it is a burden to carry.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is the purpose of this bill, as I understand, to assist the individual and so to educate and develop him that he may be able to find in the soil all of its latent and undeveloped riches.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. With this great load which Georgia is carrying, I can understand why she should have this advantage over Iowa, whose population is made up of a pure-blooded Tenton or Anglo-Saxon race, the greatest race of people on earth, and the only race of people who are capable of understanding the genius of American institutions.

Mr. CUMMINS. I appreciate the compliment bestowed upon my State, and I think it is deserved; but I decline to be led away from the inquiry we are pursuing. After all, this bill is not to relieve Georgia of a burden which circumstances have put upon her. This bill is not to help Mississippi to carry a lead which time and evolution and war and all the strifes of humanity have created for her. That is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is so to distribute the money we are willing to give as to increase most greatly the product of the soil. The junior Senator from Mississippi is insisting that, in fact, it ought to be distributed according to the rural population, because both Iowa and Georgia are largely populated by men and women who fall within the class named in the bill. I have been attempting to show that that is a false basis, for the very reason that the people of Georgia intend to take the money and have it used by the white people, and the instruction or benefit which the colored people will receive from it will be derived from the knowledge gained by the dominant race. There is no question about that. Then why should the vast colored population be reckoned for the purposes of this distribution and not reckoned for any other purpose in our system of government?

Mr. VARDAMAN. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to make another suggestion. Has the Senator any doubt that a great truth can not be developed in the cultivation of the soil of Georgia and a method discovered by which those lands will produce more than they are now producing without benefiting every citizen within the confines of the Commonwealth?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. VARDAMAN: Then, if the Senator admits that, in connection with the fact that the white man is bearing the burdens of the colored man; that the white man is leading the colored man out of the darkness; that the white man is civilizing and improving the colored man, does he not think, in the name of God, that the white man ought to have all the assistance a law of this kind can give him in the solution of that great problem?

Mr. CUMMINS. When it comes to determining whether the General Government should make an appropriation to aid certain States in civilizing or educating a certain class of their people, I shall not be found wanting in generosity or liberality; but that is not the question I am discussing. I have no doubt that the soil of Georgia is capable of producing more than it does produce. I have no doubt that the developments of science will multiply twofold, threefold, fourfold the products of Georgia; nor have I any doubt that the same science will multiply twofold. These are separate and distinct problems, and the point under it all is this: A certain number of people are interested in tiply twofold, threefold, fourfold the products of my own State. We reckon it to be a large average if our cornfields produce 40 bushels of corn per acre. Indeed, that is a miximum average, taking the years in the past, rather than a fair average. I have no doubt that when the science of agriculture is mastered by the farmers of our State, and when these principles are honestly and diligently applied, Iowa will produce 80 or 100 bushels of corn for every acre that she plants in that crop; and therefore we need the aid just as much as do the people of Georgia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. Mr. WILLIAMS. I wi I wish to make just one suggestion to the Senator. He seems to have the idea that the darky in Mississippl or Georgia would acquire benefit from the operation of this bill solely by a process of infiltration. I desire to disabuse his mind of that impression by calling his attention to what would be the actual fact.

Even if this demonstration work were done upon the land owned by a white man, in nine cases out of ten the actual labor would be done by the black man. He would be brought into direct, not indirect, connection with this work. It would affect him more directly, in proportion to his intelligence, of course, than it would the white man who owned the place. It would be under the direction of the demonstrator that the black man would do the plowing and whatever else was to be done, the fertilizing, and everything else; so it would be an actual object lesson of which he would be a part, and magna pars at that. Therefore the Senator is mistaken in thinking that whatever benefit came to the black man from this bill would be indirect.

It would be direct.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to ask the senior Senator from Mississippi a question. The average number of acres in an improved farm in Mississippi is 32.8. The average size in my own State, as has been said so often, is 135 acres. We will say, then, taking the same area, that there are four farms in Mississippi to one in Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Giving a different definition in the two States to the word "farm," of course, owing to the difference of conditions

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, certainly. The reason that the rural population is taken as a standard must be, then, because upon 135 acres in Mississippi there are four times as many people living as there are upon that number of acres in Iowa.

Does the Senator from Mississippi believe that the fact that in his State there are four times as many people living upon 135 acres as there are in Iowa entitles Mississippi to four times as much aid from the General Government as is given to Iowa when the object is to make each one of those acres as productive as possible?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the problem is one of both acreage and population, as far as that is concerned, when you come to the operation and the effect of it.

The Senator has cited the fact that the farm in Mississippi is very much smaller than in Iowa. As a matter of fact, of course, what you are in the habit of calling a farm-not in the census sense-in Mississippi is from three to four or five times as large as in Iowa. There would be upon one man's plantation 50, 60, or 70 farms; very frequently 10, 20, or 30. Each one of these men is raising a totally different crop from yours, and that is the reason why the farm of the tenant farmer-the share farmer-is smaller.

You can take machinery and raise wheat, and one man can cultivate I do not know how many acres. In corn one man will cultivate 75 acres or so, I am told, with machinery. A totally different growth prevails in your country. You may go over a Mississippi field to-day with one of your machines and clean it thoroughly of all the weeds upon it, and if it rains as soon as you are through you can go back day after to-morrow and start over afresh. That does not take place in Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, when you come to raising cotton, there is practically no machinery that has been adapted to it, for the simple reason that there is no particular use in adapting it to the cultivation, because with the present methods one man can raise more cotton than he and his family can pick, and as a consequence he must hire somebody to help him pick it. Therefore there never will be any great application of machinery to cotton planting until a machine to pick cotton is invented. As soon as a machine to pick cotton is invented, if it ever is, it will be followed by the application of very much of the machinery already existing to the cultivation and planting agriculture, and the Government and the people of the United States are interested in making those agricultural producers better producers. Therefore the main thing to be considered is the man who is doing the producing. It is a matter of in-struction by demonstration. If you had two schools, one with a thousand pupils and one with five hundred, I take it for granted that you would want to devote more money to educating the thousand than to educating the five hundred.

The Senator can turn it around as he pleases, and in as many different ways as he pleases, and he is doing it with perfect intellectual honesty; but when he gets through with it all he comes back to the fact that instruction requires an instructor and a man to be instructed, and the chief thing to be considered is the man to be instructed. Therefore the population to receive instruction is the best basis, although no basis can be

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi has stated the question with entire fairness. I agree to every word he has said. The question is, though, Who is to receive the instruc-I agree to every word he

This is not for the purpose of teaching a man how to handle a hoe. It is not for the purpose of teaching a man how to handle a plow. It is for the purpose of teaching the responsible man, whoever he may be, who controls these acres, how to select his seed, when to plant his seed, how to cultivate the ground, and when and how to harvest whatever shall be produced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And when and how to fertilize it. Mr. CUMMINS. It is a false conception to think of the whole population that may be upon the soil as receiving this instruction. We shall not be able to make all of the workers upon farms scientists in agriculture, and it is for that reason that I am protesting against the unfairness of this distribution.

Take 135 acres in Mississippi or in Georgia, and I venture to say that instruction to fewer men will be required in order that the land may yield its full harvest than for a similar number of acres in Iowa or Minnesota. If it were intended that each worker who contributes his labor to the farming pursuit should receive this instruction, then there would be much to be said in favor of this basis. That is not the purpose, however. It is utterly impossible to accomplish any such purpose, and if it were intended to devote enough money to this purpose to educate every man in the country in the science of agriculture I for one could hardly favor the proposition.

A man works upon a farm. He may be a worker there this month; he may be a worker in the city next month; he may be a worker in a dozen avocations within the course of the year. However valuable it would be to the country to educate every man, no matter what his avocation is or how various his employments may be, to the highest point he is competent to reach, that is not the purpose of this bill.

I again say that it seems to me the very argument made by the senior Senator from Mississippi adds to the strength of the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator concludes I should like to ask him a question, with his permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, take the percentages of the mountain States. They would be allowed 64 per cent on the basis of the rural population of the United States. On the basis of the improved land in farms, according to the amendment offered by the Senator, the allotment of the mountain States would be only 10.8 per cent.

In other words, if the money should be distributed under the Senator's amendment, the mountain States would be penalized for all of the mountains that are within those States; the allotment would not be based upon the rural population or the population that is engaged in agricultural work; and it certainly would work very great hardship to all of the mountain

Mr. CUMMINS. Montana is the first one. I desire to be entirely fair, and I desire now to take up the mountain States. Under the plan of the bill Montana will receive forty-nine onehundredths of 1 per cent of the appropriation. Under the plan I have proposed Montana will receive seventy-six one-hundredths of 1 per cent, nearly double the amount provided in the bill.

The next State is Idaho. Idaho will receive under the plan proposed by the bill fifty-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent. Under the plan of my amendment Idaho will receive fifty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent, an increase of six one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Wyoming under the plan of the bill will receive twenty-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent. Under the plan of the amendment she will receive twenty-six one-hundredths of 1 per cent, an increase of five one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Colorado under the plan of the bill will receive eighty onehundredths of 1 per cent. Under my amendment she will receive ninety one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Under the plan of the bill New Mexico will receive fifty-seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent and under the plan of my amendment thirty-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent, the first State to receive less under my amendment than under the bill.

Arizona, under the plan of the bill, receives twenty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent. Under the basis of acres in improved land Arizona receives but seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Utah, under the plan of the bill, will receive forty-one onehundredths of 1 per cent. Under my amendment she will receive twenty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Nevada under the bill will receive fourteen one-hundredths of per cent and under the amendment sixteen one-hundredths of per cent. The Mountain States, in other words, will receive more under my amendment than under the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield. Mr. SMOOT. The figures of the Senator may be right, but they are not in conformity with those that were handed to me, taken from the census. Before I say anything more about it I shall check them up and then call the Senator's attention to them if I find them wrong. The percentages that I spoke of were of the whole of the States and not of any particular State; but, of course, if the percentages which the Senator has just read are right the percentages here do not conform to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, one further suggestion and I shall bring my address to a close. As is well known, the Department of Agriculture has been doing a great deal of work in farm demonstration in the last few years under an appropria-tion made in the ordinary agricultural appropriation bill. Those who are familiar with the matter understand that a very large percentage of the money so appropriated and expended by the Department of Agriculture has been expended in the South. I do not know just what the percentage is, but the Senator from Georgia will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was trying to hear the Senator. Mr. CUMMINS. I have said that a very large part of the appropriation annually made for the Department of Agriculture for the purposes of farm demonstration was used in the South; I think somewhere between 80 and 90 per cent. I have no complaint of that. I think there was a good reason for so dis-tributing the money. I assume, and I think the Senator from Georgia also understood, that this bill was to take the place of the former arrangement with regard to farm-demonstration work, and that we would no longer continue the appropriations under which the Secretary of Agriculture had been proceeding. That, I am sure, was the understanding of the Department of Agriculture. That would have been the effect of the bill introduced by the Senator from Georgia.

But during the passage of the bill through the House the Department of Agriculture presented an amendment, so I am informed, which I now read. I do not mean that the department formally presented it, but it was instrumental in presenting an amendment to the bill on its passage through the House. That amendment was:

That pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

There could have been no objection to that. It simply provided for a period of transition, a period of organization, a period of preparation. But the House, in the bill before us, accepted a part of that amendment and declined a part. It eliminated the words "pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized and adopted this amendment:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

So we are not only distributing, as I believe, an unfair proportion of this money in the Southern States, but we are continuing the work already organized, and which was very properly done largely in the South, whereas I am sure that it was the intention of the Senator from Georgia that the work I have last mentioned should continue only long enough to put the plan we are now establishing in full and complete operation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS, I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say that the Senator is right, in my view of the original bill and in my view clearly as to how the bill will finally work out. I understood that the suggestion was made to gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol that they might desire to continue some of that work at some time in the Agriculture appropriation bill, and if the language used in the bill as introduced was adopted, it would be necessary to repeal it or else a restriction would be put upon the Agricultural Committees and the department in doing any work of that character. However, I think we all still agree that, generally speaking, the purpose is to absorb the Now, just one word more. I think it is true that more of the past demonstration work has been done in the South than anywhere else, because it really originated there. It originated by Dr. Knapp's experiments in Texas in an effort to fight the boll more. weevil. But I think it has been rapidly spreading from the South to other sections. I do not think anything like the same proportion as that which the Senator mentioned is still being spent in the South. I think the policy of the department for the past two or three years has been to carry it into any State where there was a desire to have it used. It has in the past been controlled in its distribution by a Secretary of Agriculture from Iowa, a very great Secretary, too, I think, and certainly there was not any effort sectionally to absorb it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that it was done with a sense of equity and fairness by the Secretary of Agriculture. I have no criticism for it. I believe it was well done. I absolve every Representative from the South of any purpose to secure in that work or in this appropriation an undue advantage. But, Mr. President, it is unfair to continue the work as it has been originated. If the appropriation we are about to make is to be made, I intend at the proper time to move to strike from the bill the words I have read and which were engrafted on the bill in the House.

Mr. President, it is of vastly less importance to the people of this country that appropriations be fairly distributed so far as the money itself is concerned than it is to preserve in the minds of all the citizens of the United States an abiding sense that the Congress of the United States intends to deal fairly with all the people for whom it makes laws. There is nothing so disintegrating, there is nothing that so tends to draw the people of the country apart, nothing that so effectually sows in their hearts the seeds of discontent, there is nothing that so shatters the confidence that citizens should hold in their Government as the suspicion, the belief of discrimination, the conviction of

We have already experienced it once. I do not intend to debate the tariff bill, but I repeat here what I said when the tariff bill was under discussion. It is a bill which does discriminate in favor of the East and against the West. It is a bill which does not afford to people of my part of the country the same protection it confers upon the people of another part of the country. It is not sectional in the sense that it favors the South as against the North. It is sectional in the sense that it favors the East and the manufacturer against the West and the farmer. That, however, is water which has gone over the wheel and it can not, at this time at least, be recalled.

But let us avoid introducing a like injustice in the bill now before us. Let us attempt to divide this appropriation in a manner that will appeal to the general equitable sense of the people. None of the people want an advantage, either South or North, either East or West. We will not be faithful to them if we give to any part of the country an advantage over any other we give to any part of the country an actual age or any part. I say again that this standard was not brought forward by the Senator from Georgia, and I do not believe that his committee is originally responsible for it. I know something of the origin of the bill. I know that it was proposed—I think somewhat impulsively proposed without due reflection—by men who have but one object in view, namely, the promotion of the agricultural interests of the United States. I do not think it has ever before received great consideration. That is the reason why I have felt impelled and felt warranted in opening it up in this rather elaborate way, so that we can now without bias, without prejudice, without any sectional feeling, reach a conclusion that will satisfy the highest conscience of the whole people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to call the Senator's attention, before he takes his seat, to some of the figures that he that I am not able to verify, and therefore I wanted to hear from the Senator about them. I refer to the comparison of agricultural products between Iowa and Georgia, in which he gave Iowa credit for $789,000,000, according to the last census, when I find that all the crops of Iowa for that year are given by the census at $314,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not limited the agricultural products to crop product, neither in the case of Iowa nor in tlo case of Georgia. There are included within these items all the products that are ordinarily known as agricultural products. They include, of course, cattle; they include swine; they include sheep; they include all the things that a farmer produces

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask leave to suggest, further, to the Senator that, having added up the entire list, embracing all that he has mentioned. I do not make it as much as the sum he gave. I wish also to suggest to him whether he thinks it exactly just to count the animals and also to count the corn that was fed into the animals? Is not that a double claim of production?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I do not think it is; but I will say with regard to these figures that they were prepared for me by a statistician and used by me in an address that I made during the course of the debate upon the tariff bill. are the same statistics that I used at that time, in so far as the agricultural products of the various States are concerned. I have had no reason to doubt their correctness, although I do not pretend to have gone over them item by item and verified them myself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I desire to ask the Senator here also this question: Was there a deduction made in the estimate of the animal products of Iowa for the number of animals brought into Iowa from other sections before they were sold in Iowa, having been brought there to be fed with Iowa's splendid corn?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not answer the Senator from Georgia definitely, because I simply gave a direction to a statistician, who was formerly, if not then, in the employ of the Census Bureau, to ascertain for me from the census reports the value of the agricultural products of all the States in the Union, and he prepared for me the list or table which I used during the tariff debate. I am not able to say just what items were included in his general results. I assume that he did his work properly and faithfully, and, having used it in the tariff debate and no one having questioned its correctness, I thought the table was probably authentic and right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is one more question I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield further. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under the plan the Senator suggests is it not true that 83 per cent of Iowa's land classed as improved agricultural lands would form the basis of distribution to Iowa, while the average percentage throughout the United States of improved agricultural land is only 25 per cent, and is it not also true that the Senator's plan would increase the percentage as to 12 States and reduce it for practically all the balance?

I have not undertaken to determine how. Mr. CUMMINS. many States would be increased and how many diminished. I have undertaken to find what I believed was an equitable standard. I believe that Iowa has 83 per cent of all her land under cultivation, and if Iowa is to contribute to the people of this country her products raised upon those acres, and if it is necessary that they shall be made more productive, then she is entitled to that proportion which her acres which she puts to the service of the people bear to all the acres that are used

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I was undertaking to suggest to the Senator was that the figures of Iowa's real production were about $250,000,000 in excess of what I thought was a proper calculation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so, Mr. President, but I value any suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and I will undertake to analyze before the bill is put on its passage the statistics relating to Georgia and Iowa, and if I find that the statistician I employed introduced factors that ought not to be introduced, I shall be very glad to make it known to the Senate, whether it affects Iowa disadvantageously or whether it affects Georgia disadvantageously.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No class of figures can fail to give Iowa a splendid position among the agricultural States of this country. I do not want it to be understood that I do not recog-

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure of that.

Mr. President, I have now concluded what I desired to say upon this amendment; but before I close I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks the various tables which I have used and to which I have so constantly referred during the course of my observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. They are several in number, but I assume I need not describe them in order that they may be identified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the request is granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa referred to the proviso on page 2 of the bill which reads as follows:

That nothing in this art shall be construed to discontinue either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work as now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

And he suggested that it be made to read:

That pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized, nothing in this act shall be construed—

And so forth.

Did I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that he would accept that amendment to the proviso?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I did not say that. I said that the original policy was to use the language contained in the bill as first drawn, and that the change was made, as I understand it, solely upon the idea that Congress might deem it advisable at some time in the future to direct some demonstration work by the department and carry it in an appropriation bill, and that the language of the bill as first drawn might prevent it. It was done not so much on the theory of keeping up the present demonstration work as that we would leave Congress in an attitude where without special legislation repealing this act it could not be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that the object the Senator has in view, as just stated, meets with my hearty approval, but the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa was recom-mended by the department itself, and I am told that if the provision as it appears in the bill, approved by the House, is passed, it will probably embarrass the Secretary of Agriculture in working out a comprehensive plan.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator refer to the first provision suggested by the department or the last one?

Mr. SMOOT. The first provision; that is, the provision suggested by the Senator from Iowa adding the words "pending the words "pending the words." the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized." That, in connection with the House provision, was recommended by the department, and the department itself claims now that unless those words are included in the proviso there will be embarrassment to the Secretary in working out a comprehensive plan.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not exactly understand the Senator. Does he mean to say that the department prefers the language as first used or the language contained in the House

Mr. SMOOT. As first used and not in the House provision. I call it to the Senator's attention because I apprehend that we can not pass the bill to-night, and in the meantime I should like to have the Senator look up that question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would prefer the original language myself.

Mr. SMOOT. I say frankly, so do I; and I think those words ought to be included in the proviso. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will communicate with the department and find out. I was under the impression the change was made to preserve a latitude for the department, if the department found out at any time it wanted to ask for a special appropriation for some additional work.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been informed just the opposite, Mr.

President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may have misunderstood it.
Mr. SMOOT. Therefore I ask the Senator to look it up between now and Monday.
Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I was engaged when the Senator stated the proposed change. Will he please state again his proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that the amendment approved by the House to the original bill, as introduced in the House, and found on page 2 of the bill, beginning on line 15, reads as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to discontinue either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work as now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

I was suggesting to the Senator from Georgia, as the Senator from Iowa had suggested, to add the words "pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized," so that the proviso would read:

Provided further, That, pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized, nothing in this act shall be construed to discontinue either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work as now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to have the Senator from Utah put the suggested modification in writing, so that we might have it before us.

Mr. SMOOT. I will do so with pleasure. Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], as they consider further the question of division, look at the provision of Senate bill No. 3, with reference to this

These additional sums to be allotted annually to the States in proportion to their population engaged in agriculture, as shown by the Federal census next preceding the year for which such allotment is made.

I want to say in behalf of this language that when it was written not the slightest thought was ever given as to how it was going to affect any particular State. I would not for a moment have it inferred from this statement that I believe that the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Iowa have not designed to be absolutely fair in their respective provisions, but when Senate bill No. 3 was drawn I gave this question a good deal of thought, and it seemed to me then, and it seems to me now—and I say it after having listened with a good deal of care to the discussion that has been going on in regard to this measure—that we are seeking to educate by this bill men engaged in agriculture; we are not legislating as to improved farm lands, we are not educating the rural population, but we are seeking to educ men engaged in agriculture. How it will affect Vermont is not material. I certainly did not know, until some friend called my attention to-day to the fact, that Vermont would not be materially benefited or injured by the change which would be made if the language of Senate bill No. 3 were used; and it occurred to me that, if between these two wings of the discussion, the position of the Senator from Iowa and that of the Senator from Georgia, perhaps this was a very proper and happy medium which might be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, unfortunately, the position of the Senator from Vermont is not between that of the Senator from Georgia and myself; it is far beyond that of the Senator from Georgia. If the standard suggested by the Senator from Vermont were used, it would very greatly increase the proportion of the appropriation passing to the States in the South I have been discussing and diminish the proportion of the States which really produce the bulk of the agricultural products of the country, and that for a very simple reason. Practically all of the colored people in the South are classified as persons engaged in agriculture-I think so large a proportion of them that the remainder would be negligible-and while I have not worked out in its effect upon the States the basis suggested by the Senator from Vermont, I think that, upon a little reflection, it would not be insisted upon by anybody. I do not think the Senator had this in mind when he inserted it in his bill. The truth is, we are trying to educate the people who control the manner in which the land shall be used, who control, as I said before, the way in which the soil shall be tilled, the crops that shall be planted, the manner in which they shall be cultivated, and the way in which they shall be harvested. If we depart from that idea and enter upon a general scheme of educating in agricultural science all the people who may at any time work upon the farm, we have quite a different proposition.

I do not know how the Senator from Georgia feels about the matter, but I have not a doubt that he will agree with me that the basis of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits would make the disparity that I have been endeavoring to emphasize still more marked.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not examined the matter or conferred with officers of the Census Bureau upon the subject. I inquired for the figures showing the number classified from each State as engaged in agriculture, and I was informed that they had not been completed and that we could not procure them for several months. So I abandoned any further inquiry upon the subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator could obtain them probably as to a few States; at least, I have that information from

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should not be at all surprised, from my knowledge, if the view of the Senator from Iowa was

Mr. SMOOT. I think the view of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] would be borne out by the statistics from the few States which I have already seen. I think he is perfectly correct in the statement he has made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it had been my purpose to address the Senate this afternoon and present the views which I think sustain the language contained in the bill upon the subject of the distribution, not with the opinion that I could show that they were all we would wish, but rather that they were the best plan to carry out the bill that we could obtain. I find, however, that a number of Senators, even of the few who are still here, are quite anxious for an adjournment, and I will only make one reference to the subject.

wish to say-and I say it now because I wish it to appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning-that this plan of distribution was not the work of the Representative from South Carolina or of myself; indeed, I do not think either of us had any idea how it would affect the different States. It was the work of a committee from the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations, who acted in connection with Dr. True, Director of Experiment Stations. The committee consisted of Dr. Thompson, of Ohio; Dean Russell, of Wisconsin; Dean Butterfield, of Massachusetts; Dean Jordan, of New York; and Dean Curtis, of Iowa. It was from them that we received this plan of distribution, which they, viewing the matter not in any way sectional, but contemplating it broadly in the interest of the entire country, submitted to us.

Mr. President, I hope to be able to present on Monday some views in reply to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cummins]. I now ask that the bill be laid aside, after which I shall move to adjourn, unless some Senator desires to have an executive

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION. .

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 2, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 31, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Mr. Ferris as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the fol-

Be Thou, O God our Father, our inspiration, our counselor, our guide, that we may be the instruments in Thy hands for the furtherance of the great eternal plan which Thou hast ordained, setting above the material the intellectual, moral, and spiritual attainments, that as individuals and as a Nation we may be worthy of the trust Thou hast reposed in us as free moral agents, and we will ascribe all praise to Thee, our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and ap-

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the previous order, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 6060, the immigration bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentlemen opposing the bill use some of their time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair please inform me how much time has been used by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], and also how much by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] has used 2 hours and 3 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has used 62 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] 45½ minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] 45½ minutes.

Mr. Sabath. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Coady] five minutes.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill now before the House for its consideration because it contains the literacy test. Such a test is not only undesirable but it is, in my judgment, unfair and unreasonable, and it violates every principle of justice and fair dealing.

It violates the principle that this country shall be a refuge and asylum for the oppressed of other lands, a principle that we were all taught at school and at home to revere and cherish.

The only questions with which we should concern ourselves respecting the immigrant are those that concern his health, his morals, and the condition of his mind.

We should rigidly exclude as undesirables the criminal, the insane, the permanently disabled, the diseased, and all others who are likely to become charges on our communities. believe we have at this time ample provisions in our statutes to meet such cases.

I would have no opposition to offer to this measure with the literacy test stricken out.

We heard a great deal here yesterday about the vetoes of President Cleveland and President Taft, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] sought to excuse the veto of President Cleveland, and said that conditions were different at that time. But, Mr. Chairman, President Cleveland, in sending his veto message to this Congress, did not say that he was governed by conditions, but he said, on the contrary, that he was governed by principles. [Applause.] Let us see what he said. He said that the ability to read and write, as required in the bill sub-that the ability to read and write, as required in the bill sub-mitted to him, did not afford a test of contented industry, nor did it supply satisfactory evidence of good citizenship. Prof. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, said in a very recent interview published in our papers, that there had been no destruction of our ideals by the immigrants, but that they had lived up to and cherished them.

Yesterday when somebody asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] about the veto of Mr. Taft, the gentleman said the people of this country at the last election demonstrated what they thought of Mr. Taft's veto. Why, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the gentleman from Alabama, that is the most absurd statement that I have heard in this whole debate, and it is just about as strong and convincing as the other arguments that I have heard on the other side of this question.

Mr. BURNETT. I made no such statement. Mr. COADY. You said it by inference, and the RECORD will prove it. You may have been urged on to say that by the oracle of wisdom who sits at your right, and who has prompted you several times during this debate.

Mr. GARDNER. Is there any necessity for the gentleman being personal?

Mr. COADY. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I only intended that in a pleasant sort of way.

Mr. BURNETT. It did not sound that way.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, the great metropolitan dailies of our big cities are opposed to this test, and in this course they are upheld by the overwhelming sentiment of their communities.

I am in favor of education-free public education-for the children; it should be free as the air we breathe, and I believe in making it compulsory.

But I would not contend that the lack of an education, undesirable as it is, and unfortunate, too, unfits a man for the duties and obligations of citizenship. I know that it does not. Some of the best men I have met were illiterate. They could not read or write, but they were honest, industrious, lawabiding citizens.

They accumulated property; raised large families, and reared them well; gave them education; showed them good example, and by their labor contributed to the welfare and prosperity of their adopted country.

Only the other day a prominent man, descendant of foreignborn parents, said to me right here in Washington, and he is a man who has met with great success; he said that if a law like this had been in effect when his parents came to this country, they would have been excluded, for neither could read nor write. And this is true of many other prominent men in -prominent in the church, in business, in the prothis countryfessions, and prominent in the activities of organized labor.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] well says in the minority report submitted by him, that this bill fails to take into account the rough manual work that must be done in a great country like ours, and which the educated and morefavored citizen will not do.

It is not only the educated and more-favored citizen who will not do such work, but it is a difficult thing to get anyone for this class of work, except the kind of people this measure seeks to exclude.

For some time past we have been witnessing the flow of people from the country into the big cities and centers of population. We want immigrants to take the places of these people on the farms. I believe we can get them. I am told that of the foreigners who came here last year, 300,000 are men who till the soil. We want these men, and we want more like them. The trouble lies not in the influx of too many foreigners, but in their locating in the big cities.

And I believe the time is coming-and soon, too-when the problem of distributing them over the country will be successfully solved.

The people of my district are opposed to this bill.

I have received numerous protests, written and oral, against its passage, and few-but very few-have asked me to vote

I sincerely hope it will be defeated, as it deserves to be, because the literacy test it provides is undesirable and unjust, and it will keep from our shores the unskilled labor we need in the great work of developing our resources. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, on December 19 I received the following telegram:

The 2,000,000 members of the National German-American Alliance vehemently protest against the passage of the immigration bill now before the House. We particularly object to the educational test, which we believe to be foolish and iniquitous. Please present this protest to the House of Representatives.

President of the National German-American Alliance of the United States.

This protest is significant for more than one reason. In the first place, it represents the deliberate judgment of 2,000,000 American voters, and therefore alone is entitled to respectful consideration. But what makes it still more significant is the altruism which has dictated it. In this you will agree with me when I remind you that the pending bill will affect but very little, if at all, the immigration of Germans into this country. The percentage of illiteracy among Germans, I am happy to say, is not even 1 per cent—hardly worth mentioning. It is less than that of any State of the American Union. Consequently the barrier which the bill proposes to erect will not keep out any Germans to speak of. Yet that element protests most vigorously against its enactment. How do you account for it? Permit me to give you my explanation. In the first place, they do not want to deny to others the opportunity which they or their ancestors have enjoyed. In this they are actuated by a simple sense of justice. But this is not the whole explanation of their attitude. There is something else, even more important than a sense of fairness, and that is a sentiment of lofty patriotism. That element of the population, I dare say, without speaking boastfully, clings most tenaciously to American ideals and tra-ditions. One of those traditions is that America is the asylum of the downtrodden and oppressed of the world. Pass this bill and that proud boast will be forever silenced; pass this bill and you will rob Columbia of one of her crown jewels and at the same time you will commit the identical wrong which formed one of the main indictments hurled by the American colonists against George III. Thus think and speak our fellow citizens of German birth and descent, and I call special attention to their position because it shows that in protesting against a proposed violation of a sound American principle and a needless departure from a time-honored American policy they are again as true to the genius of the Republic as is the magnet to the

I am fully aware, Mr. Chairman, that arguments will not avail anything in this debate. If they did, the fate of this bill would be sealed. There would not be a single vote cast in its favor, because as against the patriotic intellect which condemns it, there is not one valid argument to uphold it. What are the reasons which the advocates of this measure assign for its alleged necessity? Latter-day immigration, they say, is not what it used to be. It has deteriorated, and the elements that are coming now are not as desirable and as easily assimilated as the former immigrants were. It will be remembered that identically the same objections were raised by the Know-nothings in the fifties against the German and Irish immigration and have been raised ever since against every kind of immigrants who came in considerable numbers. It is admitted now that it was mere prejudice against foreigners in general which swelled the sails of the Know-nothing Party, and if it was prejudice then, what is it to-day? A few years ago the so-called Boxer movement in China culminated in infuriated mobs shouting, "Kill the foreign devils." Is it not humiliating to confess that, in spite of our boasted Christian civilization, we have a similar movement in America? We have, Mr. Chairman, and the only difference is one of degree. We do not kill, but we propose to build a Chinese wall around our country for the purpose of accomplishing what? For the purpose actually of excluding the people we do need and of admitting many we do not need. However, to this feature I shall refer later on. First, let me enumerate some of the other so-called arguments constantly advanced in justification of this Boxer movement in America.

Some are actually afraid that the country will soon be overcrowded. Mr. Chairman, if you move the whole population of the United States into Texas, that State will not be populated as densely as Belgium is to-day. When the United States will have a population of ten times a hundred millions, then its population will be about equal in density to that of the German Empire to-day, and not until then. America supports 30 people to the square mile, Europe more than 300. In view of these indisputable figures, how ridiculous the cold sweat of our fainthearted friends must appear to those who come after us and will live a hundred years from now.

will live a hundred years from now.

The advocates of the literacy test no longer pretend that this test is to be imposed in the interest of education. They admitted in the last Congress that their real purpose was restriction. They lack the courage to name the Italians, the Poles, the Russian and Galician Jews, and so forth, and so they proceed to exclude these classes by shrewdly imposing conditions which many of them can not fulfill. This may be very smart, and we may pat each other on the backs on account of our smartness, but I wonder what the civilized world will say when a Yankee trick, as they will call it, is to be clothed with the dignity of American law? As much as I believe in immigration, as essential as I hold a continued healthy influx of newcomers for the future development of our country. rather see the gates of the Republic closed altogether than have it said that in the enactment of any law this Nation was hypocritical and insincere. If you object to the immigrants of southern Europe because that part of Europe is mostly Catholic, say so like men, or if you want to deny the right of asylum to the Jews fleeing from Russian oppression, make a manly declaration to that effect in the bill, but pray do not creep behind a subterfuge and dignify Anglo-Saxon hypocrisy with the name of law.

In the last Congress during the debate on this bill some of its advocates went so far as to even slander the immigrants by asserting that immigration was proving a menace to the country. This "scum of the earth," they said in so many words, "is lowering our standards, is tending to corrupt the American people physically as well as morally, and is causing trouble everywhere." It is the old charge, Mr. Chairman, of the wolf against the lamb muddying the water, though the little innocent lamb was standing below stream. The ratio of a year's immigration to our total population is like 1 to 300. If every one of the poor fellows who come here merely to better their condition and to make an honest living can spoil, physically and mentally, 300 of our citizenship, then our morality and our physical health as a Nation must, indeed, rest on a pitifully weak foundation. To assert it is really an insult, not to the immigrants, but to the American people. And I challenge the friends of this bill to cite one single case, one single event, in the history of our country in which the attitude of the immigrants and the adopted citizens was other than patriotic to a fault. They rallied around the flags of Washington to fight and die for American inde-pendence. They fought almost to a man under Abraham Lincoln for the preservation of the Union. Indeed, history credits them with having enlisted on the right side of every great question, and with having helped to uphold right and liberty either by their bullets or their ballets.

To cite only one instance of more recent history, it is an admitted fact that by their almost solid vote for sound money they saved the country from the calamity of a corrupted mone tary system and national dishonor. Cause to find fault with our immigrant population, therefore, have only those who in the dark hours of the country's crises were on the wrong side of those great questions. Query: Will the American people, with their proverbial sense of fairness, permit the proposed legislative revenge on the newcomers because the older immigration dared to do what was right for the country? In this connection we may again be told that the new immigration is not what the old was, but I deny it. A man is not inferior to me simply because he was born in a part of the world other than where my cradle stood, and even a lack of education does not make him morally inferior, for the simple reason that education and character are two entirely different things. character alone should be the test of a man's worth.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the immigrant has taken part in labor disturbances, for wherever, in field, factory, and forest, the hardest work is being performed there you find the immigrant. But these troubles are not racial, but economical, and where they occur native workmen are usually the leaders. the immigrant joins hands with his native comrades in these emergencies, he simply proves what I have often asserted, namely, that when he finds he has to pay American prices for American goods he also demands American wages, a fact, by the way, which is a complete refutation of one of the stock arguments of our labor leaders, namely, that he, the immigrant, is an unfair competitor in the labor market. And this brings me to the only objection which I recognize as really sincere. the objection of labor to immigration as an economic problem. However, the protest of labor is being paraded on this floor. not out of friendship for labor, but because it suits the purposes of the restrictionists. The workingman looks upon each immigrant as an unwelcome rival, whose presence lessens his opportunity of employment. As will be remembered, he regarded every new invention and every machine in the same light, and yet he has learned that through the introduction of labor-saving machines the opportunities of labor were increased rather than diminished.

The same is true, I claim, of the immigrant, for he is not only a producer but also a consumer, and his coming here and casting his lot with us and spending the earnings for his support in this country is a thousand times preferable, from an economic standpoint, to his remaining in Europe and merely sending the product of his labor to the United States. If immigration would really injure American labor, this bill would not be a proper remedy, for it excludes not only the lowest class of toilers, such as do not compete with our own workingmen, but also admits those who do compete with them, namely, skilled laborers, who as a rule are not illiterates. If the reasons which prompt the protest of organized labor against immigration were economically sound, then the advocates of this legislation were handing labor a gold brick, and, indeed, the western miners appear to have seen through the scheme when in their recent convention they resolved that the gates of the country should be completely shut as long as one American workman is out of employment. A beautiful idea, by the way, but as long as they sincerely believe is feasibility you can not fool them with a bill like this. The arch of a long as they since the state of the like the bill like this. By such a demand on the part of labor I can not help being reminded of a simile. I see before me a vivid picture of that terrible disaster which befell the Titanic, when hundreds of the unfortunate shipwrecked were struggling with the waves, trying frantically to reach the lifeboats and rafts. Supposing those in the boats had prevented these unfortunates from getting a hold and had pushed them back into the roaring sea, though there had still been ample room in the lifeboats, what would you think of such an act? The immigrants who come to our shores are shipwrecked, too, Mr. Chairman, and I will never believe that, if this was made the issue, the arm of American labor would ever earnestly be raised to push the downtrodden of the world back into the sea while attempting to board our wellsupplied craft. [Applause.]

So far I have endeavored to enumerate and answer only a few of the alleged grievances against the immigrant. There are more—in fact, there seems to be a universal outcry against him—and he is commonly regarded as a sort of general scapegoat. If all the several elements of our population could pass by him in rotation, each single one would probably give him a kick, and each one for a different reason. The capitalist and manufacturer denounce him when he joins a strike, the laboring man when he refuses to do so.

The farmer inveighs against him when he stays in the city, and the city man because he does not go to the country. A. P. A.'s kick him when he happens to be a Catholic, and other people with religious prejudices abuse him when he happens to be a Jew. In fact, a veritable religious war has been kindled on his account, although we live in the enlightenment of the twentieth century; and while this war does not appear on the surface here, for obvious reasons, it is nevertheless being waged with a bitterness which, as a Protestant, I can not characterize otherwise than disgraceful. But he is not yet sufficiently punotherwise than disgraceful. But he is not yet sumclendy plusished. There are others who would like to add their kicks. There are our good friends, the professional prohibitionists, who are afraid that the influx from Europe will eventually swell the ranks of those who oppose their foolish fad, and so they mix their shrill voices in the chorus of condemnation, causing a general hubbub which reminds us vividly of the time when the pious Puritan ancestors of the gentleman from Massachusetts burned witches at the stake. It is a most remarkable social phenomenon, Mr. Speaker, one which is worthy to be described by the future historian as an exhibition showing a strange lack of the Christian virtue of tolerance and humanity. I had almost said a lack of knowledge, too, because the most intense prejudice against the immigrant seems to be displayed by those who do not know him from personal contact, while the only sympathy shown him comes from the representatives of districts which are overrun by and actually congested from immigration.

Even this spectacle, with all its repulsive features, can not shake my abiding faith in the sense of justice of the American people. And justice, plain, simple justice, is all the immigrant asks. He will get it when his case rises above the vote-catching stage and reaches a forum before which his friends can successfully plead the cause of American fair play and the true interests of the country. Two American Presidents, a Democrat and a Republican, have had the courage to stamp this bill out of existence by a veto, and there is no reason to doubt that President Wilson will rise to the same height of consistency and self-respect as his predecessors have done.

It is easy to plead the cause of immigration. Traduced as it is, no shortcoming of any kind can justly be laid at its door, and in no instance has its influence been other than highly beneficial to the country. The immigrant comes to us with good and honest intentions. In return for a living he offers us his brain and brawn. He is eager to learn and to identify himself with our institutions, for, even if uneducated, he has one trait which fits him superbly for American citizenship. It is his love of liberty and his hatred of oppresson and injustice. Our whole history is an irrefutable witness to the fact that he becomes a law-abiding citizen and taxpayer, loyally devoted to the flag, and most anxious that his children become good and true Americans through education in the public schools. And do you ever consider that in order to pass through the gates of Ellis Island he must be well-nigh a perfect human being? No country on earth, no matter how densely populated, has immigration laws as strict as the United States has. An immigrant must be absolutely sound in body and mind. His past conduct, too, must have been exemplary, and anarchists, polygamists, or persons who do not believe in the present order of things are rigidly excluded, the same as those who were so reckless as to procure the promise of a job before leaving their homes. If finally admitted, it is only on probation, because for a period of three years they can be deported if they do not behave. Can you beat it? But not enough; it is now proposed to add the requirement of a certain school education. The "land of opportunity" is to penalize those who are guilty, without fault of their own, of a lack of opportunity. No matter how pure their lives, how good their character, how desirable their presence here, if they can not read the door of a happier future will be shut in their faces. They would be readily admitted in heaven, and according to the standards of the Almighty they would be most welcome there, but they are not good enough to enter this free country. In the language of the Latin proverb, it is difficult not to write a satyre. Think of how deeply imbued with the Christian gospel of brotherly love must be the originators of such a plan, and how mindful they must be of the fact that, as a nation of immigrants, we owe everythingour growth, our development, and our very existence-to the source which they now propose to stop!

But let me proceed to the conclusion of my argument. From what I have already said it must be plain to all that not one of the objections raised against a continuance of the timehonored American immigration policy is well founded, unless it be one which I have not yet mentioned, namely, that the advocates of this bill are expecting something unforeseen and are anxious to take precautions, the same as the people out West do when they take to the cyclone cellar and fasten all the doors behind them. If this is one of their motives, I want to warn them that such precaution might easily hasten the very crisis which they dread. If the majority of this House has confidence in the tariff legislation which they enacted, then they should not deem a further restriction of immigration necessary, and if the new tariff should work out well, which we all hope in the interest of the country, then it would not be necessary. But if, on the other hand, idleness on a large scale should result, this restrictive measure would be no less unnecessary, for the simple reason that immigration, as a rule, regulates itself. In good times it comes and in hard times it goes. If the official figures are any indication-and I think they arethe human influx is not only receding, but the departures of immigrants to their home countries have already begun to an unprecedented degree. In the Immigration Bulletin for December, just issued, I find, under the classification of laborers, that in December 16,911 arrived, while 22,031 departed; in other words, we had over 5,000 more departures than arrivals during During the last fiscal year 220,992 laborers arrived and 191,604 left the country, a surplus of only 29,000 in the whole year. If this keeps on, Mr. Chairman, immigration will be even less of a problem by the time this bill reaches the President than it is supposed to be to-day.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me again warn this great body against coining race prejudice into law. It is unworthy of any nation to be actuated by motives such as are the propelling force behind this bill, and it is especially unworthy of the American people, because they are a Nation of immigrants. Immigration has made America what it is to-day. It has kindled the fires in the furnaces, cleared the forests, tilled the soil, built the railroads, and worked the mines. It has identified itself with the country and its institutions, defended liberty and law, and supported loyally every movement for progress, for the betterment of social and industrial conditions, and for the elevation of the race. In peace and war it stood shoulder to shoulder with the American patriots, and in no crisis of the country's history has it been found wanting. It is not because 60 years ago the Know-nothing Party accomplished its purpose, but rather because that party failed in carrying out its exclusion program, that the country has made those strides in industrial development, wealth, and general growth which are the marvel of the world to-day. Therefore, do not undermine the foundations of future growth and development by killing the goose that lays the golden eggs, and do not withhold the protection of the Stars and Stripes from those who wish to escape from the oppression of the Old World and with a heart full of love of liberty are auxious to cast their lot with us and make for themselves a brighter future in the "land of the free and the home of the brave."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sharp].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this limited time to-day because I shall not be able, unfortunately, on account of serious sickness in my family, to be present and vote on the measure when the roll is called. It is on that account that I wish to express myself in favor of this bill, as I did at the last Congress, when I also voted for practically the same bill. It has seemed to me in considering the arguments that have been made in opposition to the measure, both at this session and in the former Congress, that one important fact has been overlooked, and that is that if we are to undertake to please everybody and to meet with everybody's views we never will have any kind of restriction adopted to prevent the indiscriminate immigration which we have seen coming to our shores in such alarming volume within the last few years. As an illustration, we heard a good many arguments made against the recent banking and currency law, but everybody admits now that there was need of reform in that direction. had waited to conform to the views of every financier and everyone who thought he was a financier, we never would have had this law or any other kind of law on our statute books. This leads me to observe, in criticism of the arguments of my very good friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], that, however serious may have been some of the objections to the banking and currency law, I did not hear anyone bold enough to urge as an argument that because the conditions that then prevailed in the country as regarded the banking and currency laws of 100 years ago were satisfactory we should have no other system or policy now. And for the same reason it seems to me preposterous to undertake to compare conditions that existed 100 years ago with reference to immigration laws to the very serious problems that confront us to-day, when during every year more than one-third as many people come to our shores from foreign countries as were living in this country in those colonial days.

So, Mr. Chairman, if we are to wait until we get a perfect bill we never shall take the initiative. I admit here, having examined the subject somewhat with care, that this literacy test is by no means conclusive. Of course it is not. The mere fact that a man may be required to read some language, even his own, may not make him a good upright citizen in every respect, but it is a step in the right direction, and if we are to-day to answer the appeal-that which I believe to be the almost universal sentiment and desire of nine-tenths of the people of this country-we certainly will take some forward step at this time and put a law upon the statute books that will make for reform. It will not be a perfect law. There may be other needs of further restriction based on better criterions very apparent before it is in operation very long; but as those problems arise I trust the wisdom, patriotism, and justice of this body to solve them in a proper manner.

In making these few remarks I cast no reflection on that sturdy and patriotic body of men who came here years ago from foreign shores and contributed so much to the material prosperity and development of this country. I have all praise for those men.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would not interrupt me now, as I have only a very short time. I would be very glad to answer his question, but I can not take the time to do it now. Surely the time has come to take at least a very careful survey of conditions which will permit upward of a million a year to come to our shores of all grades and classes of people, many of whom have no intention of becoming American citizens and whose competition in the field of labor has at times become most distressing with that of our own people to whom we emphatically owe our first duty. I may further say, in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] that instead of its being a stain on the escutcheon of fair Columbia, as he said, it will rather be an additional mark of honor that there is one country on the face of the earth at least where some sort of test of the standard of citizenship is required before such newcomers, many of them so for-eign to a knowledge of our institutions, can take upon themselves the obligation and privilege to exercise the American franchise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Peterson].

Mr. Peterson. Mr. Chairman, since the creation of this Government we have said to the enlightened nations of the world, "Come; the door is open; there is room enough for all."

We are now asked to inaugurate a new policy—to close the door; put up the bars; and say to the world, "Stay out; we want no more of you."

Are we ready and can we afford to do this? This is the ultimate question for solution.

Gentlemen say, "Oh, no; this is a very mild and reasonable exclusion act; it will only arbitrarily exclude a certain per cent"

Mr. Chairman, that is not the purpose of this measure. This is the beginning of the end; it means final exclusion of all aliens. That is the purpose prevalent in the minds and hearts of those who are urging the passage of this bill. That is the ultimate question we are facing to-day.

We know what an illiteracy test means. It means whatever those charged with its enforcement choose to make it mean.

We have illiteracy tests now relating to the right of franchise, and wherever these tests are enforced it results in total exclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I shall assume that this course of legislation means in the end the final exclusion of all immigrants. Now, are we ready to adopt that course?

We have listened here with much interest to the gentleman from Alaska, Judge Wickersham, who so graphically described to us a few days since the great possibilities of that Territory. He told us of its wonderful opportunities for agriculture, its wealth as a mining country, and one gentleman told us a great fish story. We are going to build a great system of railroads in that Territory. What do we want there for the development of that country? We want people.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] also told us that there were 360,000,000 acres of unsold Government land in this country in this country.

The gentleman from Oklahoma also suggested that there were many times that many acres of unoccupied land in the United States. What do we need for the improvement of this land? People. A few days ago I made a trip through the South. I saw thousands of acres of unimproved lands, much of it susceptible of cultivation. Gentlemen from the South tell us of the wonderful possibilities of their country, that land of sunshine and perpetual summer. As I rode along in the car I picked up a newspaper published in Mobile and noticed a headline which was the single word "shame." The paragraph read:

Alabama can raise the best corn in the country, yet we shipped in 20,000,000 bushels last year.

I have no doubt there is a shortage of other cereals in that country. What is most needed in the South? People. It is true they have the black man, but the colored man is not a constructive man. He works for to-day. He has no thought of the future. The immigrant works for to-morrow. Gentlemen have spoken of the old immigrants. They have been fulsome in their eulogies of those who came here from Ireland, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries. I venture to say, however, that if this illiteracy test had been enforced against them large portions of them would have been excluded. Perhaps one-half of them came here, as the saying is, "with tags on their backs." If that test had been enforced against this class of foreigners, one-half of the Members of this House would not be here to-day. They might possibly be members of the British Parliament.

There are two objections urged to the present immigrants; one is that they come in competition with American labor. I shall not take the time of the House to answer this argument. It has been fully and conclusively answered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Babtholdt]. The other argument is that these people are poor, ignorant, and do not readily assimilate with our people. I admit that they are poor; they are not ignorant, and they will assimilate with our people.

I live in the great manufacturing district of Indiana known as the Calumet district. There are 80,000 foreigners in that district, chiefly from southern and eastern Europe. In the city of Gary there are perhaps 12,000 adult foreigners from these countries. I hold in my hand a newspaper printed in my home town. I desire to read a paragraph therefrom:

More than 3,000 men and women are enrolled in the night schools in Gary.

What city in this country of the size I indicate can make such a showing. These foreigners display an intense desire not only to learn to read and to write, but to familiarize themselves with our institutions. Let us take the second generation. I have here a public document printed by the Government. is known as Bulletin No. 51, issued by the Department of Education here in Washington. On the first page of this bulletin is a letter from P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education, and addressed to the Secretary of the Interior. Speaking of these immigrants, the writer says:

That these people are interested in the elementary education of their children, or at least obedient to the school-attendance laws, is shown by the fact that the least illiterate element of our population is the foreign-born children of foreign-born parents. The illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among the native-born children of foreign parents.

Speaking of these immigrants and of the people who oppose them, on page 19 of this bulletin are the following statements:

Such people in their zeal forget that the immigrant frequently brings his contribution to enrich our civilization. The things of the higher kind—the spirituality, the reverence for authority, the love of art and music are valuable to soften the materialism that has accompanied our great advance in prosperity, and they should not be crushed out in the attempt to remake the immigrant.

These people are a people of our blood and our race. are the descendants of some of the greatest and most patriotic nations in the world's history. "Rome in that early day sat upon her Seven Hills and ruled the world." One of the great generals of the Revolutionary War was Kosciusko, the great Polish patriot who came here and offered his services to fight for American freedom.

Mr. Chairman, there is no logic, justice, or reason in favor of the adoption of this literacy test. Further, it is un-American and undemocratic. In our last national convention the Democratic Party declared in no uncertain terms against such unreasonable exclusion acts as the present bill provides for. In approving the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan], like he, I desire to disclaim any opposition to the interests of American labor. I am in favor of American labor and the organization of American labor. in favor of its protection, both from improper competition and unreasonable legislation, and I desire to take this opportunity to declare myself in favor of the passage of the Bartlett-Bacon bill. I will support that bill and vote for its passage.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

[Mr. RAKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to use some of his time now.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to this immigration bill. If it becomes a law, the Democratic Party will have to shoulder the responsibility for its passage. Its enactment will be an acknowledg-ment upon the part of those who favor it that national bumptiousness has been substituted for economics, and that antipathy to the foreigner has taken the place of social science. To the satisfaction of a vast majority of the American people the Democratic Party has recently redeemed its promises and fulfilled its pledges by tearing down the Chinese wall of protection, behind which the special interests of the country fattened for many years upon the vast body of the public. We have liberated trade and bidden the American manufacturers to go forth into the markets of the world in honest competition so that the people may derive a long-deferred justice. Under the stimulating influence of real tariff reform and a currency bill, whose sponsors are the people and not the bankers and manufacturers alone, the country gives evidence of a splendid awakening to renewed opportunities in the commercial arena. And having torn down one Chinese wall, this Congress proposes to erect another without logic or sense. The only argument that ever had substance in support of a measure of this kind was that which was based upon the unfair advantage the manufacturers of the country enjoyed under a high protective tariff; it was argued with plausibility that the bars were up against foreign goods but open to foreign labor, and the cry went up for equality and fair play under the law. But now that we have removed the bar which gave a special advantage to the manufacturer, what just cause is there for complaint? Do we not put ourselves in an indefensible position if we legislate in favor of one class and against another?

I take it that what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander. Now, illogically, the Democratic Party proposes to say to valiant men and women throughout the world, "Keep out; we do not want you here, because, forsooth, you can not read 40 words." Oh, what a humbug and what a preposterous test for admitting aliens! We will have to change the pose of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, now bidding a thousand welcomes to the men and women who seek our shores in order that they may benefit themselves and their posterity. We will have to change the statue so that with a forbidding countenance and with a defiant hand it shall say in effect. back; we do not want you. The statistics of America prove that your children love Americanism; the statistics of America prove that your children are fond of education. They prove that men like you have made ideal citizens." Educationally considered one seeks in vain for any argument to support it. If we love to consider the liberalizing influences of American civilization, we must stand appalled at the hard-heartedness of those who would deny the extension of our beneficent laws and embracing citizenship to those whose lives attest a love of it. Let us turn for a minute to the statistics dealing with the children of the native and foreign-born whites. We find in the Census of 1910 that the lowest percentage of illiteracy, was among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage, while among the native whites of native parentage the percentage was 3.7. Here is an eloquent answer to those who decry the influence of the foreigner upon our American institutions. We find their children avid for learning, and their parents making every sacrifice so that their children may fit themselves for the duties and responsibilities of prospective citizenship.

We can not stop the process of evolution. Those who are so furiously engaged in restricting immigration should remember that the despised immigrant of years ago is the honored citizen of to-day. All around us we have seen where the German was displaced by the Irishman, the Irishman by the Pole, the Pole by the Hungarian, and the Hungarian by the Italian. All of them have been necessary in their time and place in the upbuilding of this great country of ours; in opening up new land, in bridge work, in mining, in the construction of railroads, in the building of sewers and trenches, in the crection of the great buildings in our many cities which house a residential and commercial population. It is farcical to say that we are suffering from a congestion of population. The mountain States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and Nevada have no more than a population of 3.1 inhabitants to the square mile.

Washington, Oregon, and California have 13.2 inhabitants to the square mile. So I might go on with the other divisions of States, showing that only in 10 out of the 48 is there a population of more than 100 to the square mile. In this House men talk of the opportunities of the West, and only a day or two ago the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], in speaking against the Alaska railway bill, spoke of the opportunities awaiting the settlers who would come to cultivate the thousands of acres which were waiting for ownership and labor. The men supporting this bill, consciously or unconsciously, are but drawing a herring across the trail. They are fastening the eyes of the Nation upon the worthy immigrant, painting him in false colors, and diverting the people from a consideration of our own failures and derelictions. migrant laborer here gets but a scanty wage, the fault lies not with him, but in the distribution of the fruits of labor. Let us lay the blame upon our own industrial system and not upon those who have to make their bread and butter under it. Let us have more of the spirit which actuated the great dry goods merchant, Altman, of New York, whose will testifies to his consideration of those who helped him make his fortune. Let us have a multiplication of the beneficence of Henry Ford, of Detroit, who labors not for himself alone, but thinks of those who labor and cooperate with him in his great industrial plant. We have hampered trade by restrictive tariffs and bartered away our natural opportunities for a song. And now, with the sanctity of the Pharisee of old, we are preparing to visit our own sins upon the heads of innocent immigrants. Another thought comes to me: One would imagine, listening to the debate in this House, that immigrants do nothing but labor and that they existed without eating and ran around without clothes. us remember that they are consumers as well as producers and that their needs vastly broaden the market of commerce. If there is no reason other than the obsession of some people on this subject, and that is all there seems to be to it, then this bill should meet with the defeat it deservedly merits.

Oh, my friends, you will be writing a black chapter in the history of American politics the day you enact this legislation.

[Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Aus-TIN] is recognized.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, something has been said in this debate about the vetoes of immigration bills carrying the illiter-When Prestacy test by former Presidents Cleveland and Taft.

dent Cleveland exercised his veto the percentage of illiterate aliens coming into this country was less than 3 per cent. To-day the illiterates entering our country are over 33 per cent. President Taft vetoed a similar bill to the one we are now considering in a 12-line message, in which he stated that he did it with much reluctance. Now, I wish to submit to the House the utterances of two other ex-Presidents and the present occupant of the White House on the immigration question. President McKinley, on this identical kind of legislation now under discussion—the great McKinley, who was wise, just, and humane—in a message to Congress said:

Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safe, a better, and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the Republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and beneficence of our institutions and laws, and against all who come here to war upon them our gates must be promptly and tightly closed. Hilteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world, under Providence, we ought to achieve.

The Republican convention which nominated President Mc-Kinley placed this plank in the platform:

For the protection of the quality of American citizenship and the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Mark you, when this plank was adopted and approved by a large majority of the American voters the percentage of illiterate aliens entering the country was less than 6 per cent, to-day it is more than 33 per cent.

President Roosevelt, one of the political idols of the American people, and twice their choice for President by unprecedented majorities, made this statement to Congress in one of his mes-

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure a careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent pacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American institutions.

President Wilson, to-day the head and leader of the Democratic Party, when not seeking as a candidate the so-called "foreign vote," wrote as an impartial historian in 1902 this statement, which will be found in volume 5, page 212, of his History of the American People:

History of the American People:

The census of 1890 showed the population of the country increased to 62,622,250, an addition of 12,466,467 within the decade. Immigrants poured steadily in as before, but with an alteration of stock which students of affairs marked with uneasiness. Throughout the century men of the sturdy stocks of the north of Europe had made up the main strain of foreign blood which was every year added to the vital working force of the country, or else men of the Latin-Gallic stocks of France and northern Italy; but now there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland—men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence—and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population, the men whose standards of life and of work were such as American workmen had never dreamed of hitherto. The people of the Pacific coast had clamored these many years against the admission of immigrants out of China, and in May, 1892, got at last what they wanted—a Federal statute which practically excluded from the United States all Chinese who had not already acquired the right of residence; and yet the Chinese were more to be desired, as workmen if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

[Applause.]

The gentleman [Mr. Sabath] signing the minority report on this bill tells us that had this bill been in operation he would have been denied admission to this country as an alien, and yet in his personal biography carried in the Congressional Directory he states he attended the "grammar and high schools in Bo-hemia," and I submit that if he attended said schools and could net read 40 words in his own language, then he was, indeed, a very dull scholar. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not unless the gentleman gives me some time. Mr. SABATH. That is not the reason I assigned. It was the money test that I assigned.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; but this bill, so far as the money test is concerned, is a copy of the very law which was in existence when the gentleman landed, a lad of 15 years of age.

Mr. SABATH. Not the same rules, however. Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman's own statement, printed in the RECORD this morning, is to the effect that if this bill had been the law at the time of his arrival in this country he would have than 100,000 unemployed in that city and that every charity agency is overtaxed as never before; that they have been compelled to house and care for the unemployed in the public buildings and in the various churches.

I submit the following letter from the officers of the United Charities of Chicago:

Dear Sir: This is a personal letter to you, respecting a public matter of vital concern. The statement accompanying it contains compelling facts about present poverty conditions in Chicago. Prompt emergency methods must be used to meet this situation, otherwise we will be unable to care for all the families that come to us.

Almost unprecedented conditions of unemployment exist. There is much suffering that the United Charities can alleviate, and more that it can prevent if provided with the means to do so.

Human understanding can not encompass the suffering that results from failure to heed the cry of the destitute. There are many thousands of them.

We are sure that only a very special reason will prevent you from answering this appeal with a contribution as generous as you feel you can make.

Please send your check—now.

Urgently, yours,

Chairman Finance Committee. C. R. Henderson, President.

On the back of this letter I read the following extracts:

HERE ARE THE FACTS.

HERE ARE THE FACTS.

1. The present is a period of almost unprecedented business depression in many circles. It has resulted in more unemployment among small wage earners than Chicago has ever experienced. We believe that fully 25,000 families, or 100,000 individuals, will suffer the cruel sting of poverty here this winter.

2. Two weeks ago in one section of Chicago over 6,000 men out of 36,000 normally employed were reported laid off, while one-half of the remainder were working on half time, with half pay. We have statements to this effect from superintendents of the plants over their own signatures. The cold fact is that thousands more have been laid off in Chicago since then, and employers unite in saying that not a man will be reinstated for three months.

Unemployment is given as the cause in S0 out of every 100 families calling upon us for ald right now. One father of three children was sent to 10 big shops, without getting a job. Unemployment is the forerunner of illness, intemperance, discouragement, and desertion, thus increasing the seriousness of the situation.

3. Appeals for aid from homeless men and boys have increased nearly 400 per cent over last year. From December 1 to 17, 1913, 1,410 families not known to us before came for aid, compared to only 779 during the entire month of the previous year. Our district offices looked after 4,925 families of all kinds from December 1 to 17, 1913, this being 645 more families than we carried during the whole month of December, 1912. Approximately 75 poor families that had been served with eviction papers came to us in one day in December for help to find roofs to cover their heads. Twenty full days' overtime was put in in one week in our west side office by 16 of our workers responding to the avalanche of appeals that poured in upon them.

Because of these facts we have had to spend more money for relief than in other years. Four hundred thousand dollars will be needed for 1914. We need $148,000 in addition to what we expect to get from our regular subsc

Even in the face of this appalling story of the condition of the unemployed people in the city of Chicago, one of its Rep-resentatives [Mr. Sabath] is demanding that we permit a still further increase in the number of the unemployed in his home town by keeping our doors wide open and continuing to permit more than a million of aliens to land on our shores every year.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] says there is no demand for this legislation. Let us see. The American Federation of Labor, with a membership of more than 2,000,000 wage earners, in every national convention of recent years, with every State represented, has asked for this legislation. The United Mine Workers of America, with 450,000 deserving and industrious members, favor restriction. In fact, the last resolutions they adopted a few days ago demanded the suspension of all immigration until the million of unemployed mer now in this country could be furnished work.

The Farmers' Union, with a membership of 3,000,000, men who till and cultivate the soil in the United States, demand it. The National Grange, the Farmers' National Congress, the Rail-Trainmen's Association, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Conductors, and Firemen, and practically every patriotic organization of this country insists upon and demands this legislation. Pennsylvania, a State having the second largest number of aliens, through its legislature has demanded it, and the Legislatures of Ohio, Vermont, Tennessee, and other States have joined Pennsylvania in its demand. This bill passed the Senate in the Sixty-second Congress without a roll call, for the law at the time of his arrival in this country he would have been embarrassed and perhaps prevented from becoming an American citizen.

Let us see if the city of Chicago, from which the gentleman [Mr. Sabath] halls, is in need of any aliens. During the past 30 days the Chicago daily papers have stated there are more says there is no demand in this country for this proposed legislation.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am sorry I can not yield, but I have not the me. I commend to my able and genial friend [Mr. Gold-FOGLE], who wishes to interrupt me, the article in last Friday's Washington Times, wherein is told the story of a great public meeting held in his home city, New York, a meeting in the in-terests of the unemployed. The article states that strong men and women broke down and cried over the many stories of hardships, misery, and unhappiness in the ranks of the army of the unemployed in New York City.

The public authorities in that city have not only overcrowded every charitable institution, but have been compelled to even utilize he recreation piers and the boats owned by the city to house and relieve thousands of allens without work. Yet the gentleman from New York City [Mr. Goldfogle] insists that we shall continue to annually accept more than 1,000,000 aliens in this country seeking employment, a great majority of whom are unloaded in the harbor of New York. We have received in this country, 1,500,000 aliens from one of the countries of southern Europe and 850,000, or 54 per cent, of them can not read or write, and only three-tenths of them have become naturalized.

Our last national census was taken on February 15, 1910, and at that time we had in the United States 13,515,886 persons born in foreign lands. From the 15th day of February, 1910, to December 31, 1913, we have received 4,278,889 aliens, making a total of 17,794,775 persons in this country of foreign birth on January 1, 1914.

The opponents of this bill have taunted us with the great amount of ignorance and illiteracy in the Southern States. They have declared it to be a drawback and an evil to the South. of the South know it. We feel and we realize it, and therefore the Members from the Southern States, almost to a man, wish to reduce, and not increase, ignorance and illiteracy by keeping our doors closed to that class of immigrants from all the world. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. AUSTIN, I can not yield. Ill does it become the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan] to taunt the author of this bill [Mr. Burnett] about illiteracy in Alabama and the South. The Civil War destroyed our southern homes and cities. The southern Union and Confederate soldiers returned to their homes possessing practically nothing but a brave and undaunted spirit and determination to rehabilitate the South. We had turned over to us 4,000,000 of slaves to educate and train for citizen-

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUSTIN. No; I will not yield unless the gentleman will yield me more time.

We know the evils, we know the hardships and difficulties of illiteracy, and we are opposed to illiterates entering the Southern States from Europe, Mexico, India, Japan, Turkey, or any other portion of the world. We have sufficient burdens and responsibilities of this character.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] is certain the labor leaders of this country and their two or three million followers do not understand this important question, and has assured us that if he and Louis F. Post had an opportunity to address them, they would be convinced of their mistake in be-lieving that this bill is in the interest of the American work-

Samuel Gompers, Frank Morrison, John Mitchell, and the men they represent and speak for, as well as the nine able and distinguished men on the Immigration Commission created by Congress seven years ago, who spent four years of study and investigation in this and foreign countries of every phase of the immigration question, no doubt could be highly enlightened, informed, and convinced by the modest Member from Minnesota.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Manahan] after criticizing the labor leaders stated the great West needed more farmers and for this reason we should not restrict immigration. I believe the record shows that only 2 per cent of the aliens we are now receiving go upon the farms, although many efforts have been made by various organizations and local, State, Federal, and railroad officials and newspapers to induce a greater number to do so. There are thousands of unemployed aliens at present in our overcrowded cities of the Eastern States from whom Minnesota can recruit its farmers without keeping our doors open for additional millions in foreign lands, who could not be induced or even forced to locate on the farms of the country if permitted to come in. Thirty per cent of the aliens return to their foreign homes to enjoy what gentlemen call tyranny and oppression. When do they go? After they have saved their wages and accumulated money, never having had any intention to make this their permanent home. Last year $90,000,000, $7,500,000 per month, made in America, were sent to their foreign homes in international money orders alone. Yet you say they came here for freedom and the blessings of Republic.

Mr. Speaker, they tell us that we are receiving a blessing in having over 300,000 illiterate aliens land on our shores every 12 months. In this connection let me read a letter from the prosecuting attorney of Somerset, N. J., addressed to President Taft on February 8, 1913:

My duties as prosecuting attorney of Somerset County, N. J., have given me an excellent opportunity to check up in one important particular the investigations and conclusions of the Immigration Commission with reference to the illiteracy test. During the last two years I have kept a careful record of the last 114 criminal cases that I have prosecuted against allens, with the following interesting results:

	Illiterate.	Literate.
Homicide Atrocious assault and battery Simple assault and battery	3 34 9
Lareeny Sexual crime Perjury Excise	14 7 2	1
Marriage Frauds Miscellaneous	3 2 6	1
Total	91	22

The following conclusions are deducible from the above:

(1) Of the 114 crimes committed by allens 54 were acts of personal violence; and of these 54, 46 were committed by illiterates, while only 8 were chargeable to those able to read and write.

(2) Of the 46 committed by illiterates, 3 were homicides, 34 were atrocious assaults (by maiming and wounding with a deadly weapon), and only 9 were simple assaults, showing conclusively that the illiterate alien 37 times out of 46 makes use of a deadly weapon in order to avenge his wrongs, fancied or real.

(3) Out of 16 cases of larceny (stealing of all kinds), 14 defendants were illiterate.

(4) Out of 8 sexual crimes, 7 were committed by liliterates, 3 of these being carnal abuse of infants under 10 years of age.

(5) Out of 3 perfury cases, 2 were against illiterates; that is, of those brought to justice.

(6) Out of 16 cases for violation of excise laws, 11 were illiterates, showing an utter diregard for laws.

(7) Of the 4 crimes against the institution of marriage, 3 were illiterates.

(8) Only in cases of fraud did the literate exceed the illiterate.

I am, Mr. President, sincerely, yours,

FREDERICK A. POPE.

Prosecutor of Picas, Somerset County, N. J.

Another interesting document, and one to which I call the special attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-FOGLE], is that of Secretary McGarr, of the New York State Commission in Lunacy, printed in the New York Daily Times of March 23, 1913:

INSANE ALIENS.

INSANE ALIENS.

The Times is informed by Secretary McGarr, of the State commission in lunacy, that of the 31,432 insane patients under treatment in the 14 State hospitals on February 10 last, 13,163, or 41.9 per cent, were aliens. Foreign-born patients have increased since the Federal census of December 31, 1903, by 1,552, or 13.4 per cent. In the two State hospitals for the criminal insane there were 1,230 patients on February 10, of whom nearly 44.4 per cent were of alien birth; the Federal census of 1910 showed a percentage of aliens to total population in this State of 29.9 per cent.

The prevalence of insanity among immigrants is evidently much greater than among the native born. Of the 5,700 patients admitted to the civil hospitals for the year ending September 30, 1911, 2,737, or 48 per cent, were aliens, and 1,481, or 26 per cent, were of alien parentage, while only 1,224, less than 26 per cent, were of native stock. Of the whole number, the nativity of but 218, which is 3.8 per cent, was not ascertainable. Insanity among the foreign peoples of this city occurs in a still larger percentage of cases. Of the first admissions to the hospitals, 2,006 out of 3,221 residents of the city were of foreign birth; that is 64.1 per cent, although the foreign-born population is but 40.4 per cent of the whole.

A recent Democratic governor of New York issued an appeal

A recent Democratic governor of New York issued an appeal to the governors of other States for a conference to take steps to provide for the enormous expense of caring for the alien insane that have landed in this country under the present immi-gration laws. Had these laws been rigidly enforced it would have saved the taxpayers of New York State alone from three to five million dollars per annum, and the taxpayers of Pennto nve minion domais per annum. The administration of our im-sylvania $1,000,000 per annum. The administration of our im-migration laws as it affects the insane, criminal, and pauper class is a fraud, a farce, and a delusion. [Applause.] I make this statement because I was for more than a year in a position to observe and study the American method of immigration inspection.

The very fact that the insane asylums, hospitals, prisons, and other State institutions in New York and Pennsylvania are filled with aliens; that the Black Hand Society, the white slave operators, the gunmen have flourished in New York and other places; that out of more than a million aliens admitted in 12 months, and less than 25,000 rejected, is convincing proof of the inability or unwillingness of our immigration authorities to rigidly enforce existing laws.

This bill will not accomplish what we hope and expect unless there is greater vigor and thoroughness in its administration and enforcement than we have had under existing immigration

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to say something about the foreign steamship companies that are responsible, in a large measure, for inducing, encouraging, stimulating, and working up foreign immigration to this country in order that they make from this business $50,000,000 per annum and use our country as a dumping ground. While in Europe I had occasion to visit the office of a steamship company, and was informed that that company alone had 1,200 agents scattered all over Europe, and I take it that every other steamship company has an equal number of local or field agents. In every attempt we have made to protect our country from the unwise, unjust, and unpatriotic continuation of a policy which brings burdens upon us in caring for the insane and criminal classes and the education of the illiterate of foreign lands we are antagonized and opposed in every conceivable way by the foreign steamship companies. They have no care or concern for our land or people. god is mammon. Their action is selfish and at the expense of our beloved country. We are here to represent the best and highest interest of the American people, who by their votes commissioned us to legislate for them and not for a foreign steamship trust. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the literacy test in this bill. I think the balance of it is good legislation, but the literacy test is sufficiently bad to outweigh all the good in the bill, and for that reason I shall vote against it. literacy test not only prevents good men and good women from coming to our shores to establish a home, but it absolutely destroys the best part of our liberal policy, the text of which is found in the Constitution of the United States, in the Declaration of Independence, and in our legislation which has heretofore encouraged honest, healthy, sane men and women to find homes in this country.

In spite of the fact that this committee and the commission heretofore appointed by this House have recommended the literacy test as one of the best means to arrive at a proper solution of the question as to what kind of immigrants are considered undesirable in this country, I hold in my hand a sheet which has, boiled down in epigrammatic sentences, the consensus of the best thought in the United States of America on this question.

It is the thought of educators, of men at the head of educational institutions throughout the length and breadth of this land-sectarian and nonsectarian, Catholic, Protestant, and Jew-and each and every one of them say in unmistakable terms that it is a reversal of one of our best policies, as well as a right about face on our traditions, and that it is not the proper method of producing legislation that will keep undesirable people from our showes, but its results will be to prevent coming into our country men and women who would make good citizens.

into our country men and women who would make good citizens.

Among these men are Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago; Lyon G. Tyler, LL. D., president of William and Marys College, Virginia; George Lewis Mackintosh, president of Wabash College, Indiana; George S. Davis, LL. D., president of the Normal College, city of New York; John Cavanaugh, LL. D., president of the University of Notre Dame, Indiana; James A. B. Scherer, LL. D., president of Throop College of Technology, Pasadena, Cal.; Stephen M. Newman, D. D., president of Howard University, Washington, D. C.; Herbert L. Stetson, LL. D., president of Kalamazoo, Mich.: Winthrop E. Stone, LL. D., president of Purdue University, Washington, D. C., President of Purdue University, Washington, D. C., Stalamazoo, Mich.: Winthrop E. Stone, LL. D., president of Purdue University, Washington, D. C., President of Purdue University, Washington, D. C., Stalamazoo, Mich.: Winthrop E. Stone, LL. D., president of Purdue University Mich.; Winthrop E. Stone, LL. D., president of Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.; Dr. John A. Earl, president of Des Moines College, Iowa; Leo Haid, president St. Mary's College, Belmont, N. C.; Dr. H. B. Brown, president of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Ind.

To this list can be added the name of almost every wellknown educator in this great country. President Cleveland, in 1897, perhaps stated as succintly as possible the principal objection to the literacy test when he vetoed a similar bill to this one because of that objectionable test. He said:

The ability to read and write as required in this bill in and of itself affords, in my opinion, a misleading test of contented industry, and supplies unsatisfactory evidence of desirable citizenship, or a proper apprehension of the benefits of our institutions. If any particular element of our illiterate immigration is to be feared for other causes than illiteracy, these causes should be dealt with directly instead of making illiteracy the pretext for exclusion to the detriment of other illiterate immigrants, against whom the real cause of complaint can not be alleged.

President Taft also gave expression to his unalterable opposition to this test when he vetoed practically this selfsame bill in the last Congress.

Secretary Nagel was of the opinion that illiteracy was often due to oppression, and that it was because of this that many of these immigrants, thus sought to be excluded, were coming to our shores; that they were really striving to free themselves from the conditions which made them illiterate. Ex-President Eliot, of Harvard, states his position as follows:

PRESIDENT ELIOT'S VIEWS.

I beg leave to invite your attention to the following statement of the principles which should govern the national legislation on immigration:

(1) Our country needs the labor of every honest and healthy immigrant who has the intelligence and enterprise to come hither.

(2) Existing legislation is sufficient to exclude undesirable immigrants.

(2) Existing legislation is similarent to exclude undestrable immigrants.

(3) Educational tests should not be applied at the moment of entrance to the United States, but at the moment of naturalization.

(4) The proper education test is capacity to read in English or in the native tongue, not the Bible or the Constitution of the United States but newspaper items in some recent English or native newspaper which the candidate can not have seen.

(5) The attitude of Congress and the laws should be hospitable and not repellant.

The only questions which are appropriate are: Is he healthy, strong, and desirous of earning a good living? Many illiterates have common sense, sound bodies, and good characters. Indeed, it is not clear that education increases much the amount of common sense which nature gave the individual. An educational test is appropriate at the time when the foreigner proposes to become a voting citizen. He ought then to know how to read.

So that I think that I did not overreach the mark when I said in the beginning that the position of the committee was opposed by the consensus of the best thought in America, and the names I have mentioned are but a few, as compared to the vast number of experts in education who take this position. I have before me a statement made by Commissioner of Educa-tion Claxton, a man of broad view and profound learning, as any member of the Committee on Education who has heard him can testify. He said:

The least illiterate of our population are the native-born children of foreign parents. Illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among native-born children of foreign parents.

I think that there is but little demand in this country for this legislation, and were it not for the spirit of intolerance and bigotry there would be no legislation of this character. district which I have the honor to represent, which has no city in it of more than 10,000 and which has few immigrants within its confines who have been in this country less than 20 years, is not demanding this legislation. I have not received more than 20 letters on this question. It is true that all of these were opposed to the bill; but I am more than satisfied when I consider that less than half a century ago this splendid district in northwestern Ohio was sparsely populated because of dense forests and almost impenetrable swamps. That this condition does not exist to-day is due to the fact that countless thousands of immigrants left the Old World and in that portion of Ohio sought a home and freedom, at least one of which in too many instances had been denied them at home. These men, some of whom with their wives and their children, might have been excluded from participating in this great work had this literacy test been upon the statute books at that time. Their descendants and themselves are as hardy and robust in their Americanism as any within the sound of my voice.

They have made from a swamp and forest as fine and productive a country as the sun shines upon, and I would be wanting in a proper sense of loyalty to these people if I did not oppose with tongue and vote this measure. It is said by the proponents of this bill that this literacy test will exclude a very small percentage of the German and other desirable immigrants of northern Europe. We can not even spare any small percentage of this very desirable class, who, coming here during every period of our national life, have learned to appreciate and to revere our institutions and have made our best citizens. In any event, even though none of the immigrants from northern Europe would be affected, we are not willing to sacrifice the principle, and we are not going to write ourselves as so supremely selfish as to deny others the privileges which we enjoy, particularly since our country can house and take care of, without any inconvenience, millions more.

I am opposed to this bill because I believe, as some one has expressed it, that this country can afford to use and ought to give opportunity to every man and woman who is sound in morals, mind, and body, and who comes here in good faith to spend his or her energies in our life. I am opposed to this bill because it contravenes the consensus of the best thought of our country; because it turns its back upon our country's best traditions; and because it is dictated by a spirit of intolerance, narrowness, and bigotry, the same spirit of intolerance which but half a century ago dictated legislation of a similar character aimed at the good people who made smiling farms of the forest and impenetrable swamps which once covered the district which I represent. Despite the fact that it is regrettable, every student of our history knows that even though so broad a statesman as Benjamin Franklin bitterly opposed the encouragement offered to the thrifty German immigrants, who in those early days sought here a home; and Otis prided himself in his denunciations of the same class of immigrants who came in in that day from Ireland. Others denounced the immigrants from Denmark, Holland. Sweden, and Norway; and I unhesitatingly say that had the desires of these statesmen been crystallized into legislation the United States would now be a byword and a reproach instead of what it is to-day, foremost among the nations of the world.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now use some of his time.

Mr. MOORE. I wish the gentleman from Alabama would continue, because I have no one at present to yield to. We are so far ahead in the quality of the arguments and the time consumed that I wish the gentleman would proceed. [Laughter.]
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie].

Mr. McKenzie. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of a great public question such as is involved in this bill for the restriction and regulation of immigration to our country all personal or individual interests and prejudices should be laid aside, and we should enter upon the discussion with open minds, striving solely for the ultimate and lasting welfare of our country. I regret that in this discussion and in former discussions on similar measures some of the speeches delivered have bristled with statements plainly indicating the prejudice and bias of those engaging in debate. For myself, I feel that while an advocate of the pending legislation I am not constrained in my support of the same from any desire to unjustly curb or handicap the aspirations of the people of any other land in their efforts to better their condition in life.

I trust that not only I but all who believe in the wisdom of the proposed legislation have more exalted reasons to offer in support of our position. In passing I wish to say that it is true that our country has been peopled by those coming from foreign lands in order that they might enjoy greater opportunity for improving their condition. It is true that in the past they came by thousands from the sturdy middle classes of northern and western Europe-the Irish, Dutch, English, Scotch, Swiss, Germans, Russians, French, and Scandinaviansand here with turgid muscles and hopeful hearts they proceeded to make new homes for themselves. It is true they felled the forests and reclaimed the wilderness and quickly adjusted themselves to our form of government. Practically all these different nationalities were of Anglo-Saxon, Celtic, and Germanic origin, all races well qualified by nature to understand and submit to constitutional representative government, being able to readily comprehend the great basic principle underlying our form of government-majority rule and peaceable acquiescence by the minority.

At this point I wish to say that my position on this measure has been criticized, and it has been said to me, "Your father was an immigrant. How can you favor such legislation?" True, my father was a Highland Scotchman of the most pronounced type, and the memory of old Scotland's lochs and hether were ever dear to him; but he, like the millions from the countries I have mentioned who migrated to our country, became an American citizen and gloried in the institutions of his adopted country. In view of my origin, I might be charged by some with lack of charity for the unfortunate of other lands and that I am narrow minded. God forbid that any other motives than love of country and patriotic devotion to the welfare of our people should influence me in the performance of my duty as a representative of the people.

In the enactment of laws such as is proposed in this bill, bearing directly on the very life and destiny of our Government, we should not be controlled by the present or immediate future effect of such legislation. But we should have in mind the welfare of unborn generations and its effect upon the perpetuity of the Government. I contend by this legislation we aim to remedy some present evils, but the great controlling factor in it is to forestall future impending danger to the Republic. This danger may now seem to be remote, but is none the less certain. For my part, I am willing to concede that some of the provisions of this bill are aimed at the immigration from southern Europe and oriental countries. It is contended by those opposing the bill that the immigrants from southern Europe, while perhaps illiterate, are honest and industrious and make good citizens, and that we are unjustly and purposely discriminating against them. It is further stated that we need them to perform our common labor and should welcome them with open arms, assuring us that the shrine of liberty will never be desecrated by them. True, they admit that the standard of living of these people is lower than the American's; but what of that? They dig our ditches, grade our railroads, and perform the bulk of our common labor. We need them in our business, so let them come. They dwell on the magnanimity of such a course on our part, extending our hands to the poor and the oppressed of the earth. Have we not listened to the recounting of the long list of poets, philosophers, soldiers, and statesmen of southern Europe? Certainly; and we also read that the light of liberty flickered for a time in Greece and Rome, until extinguished by corruption and barbaric force centuries ago. I am willing to concede all these things to be true. But we are legislating for the future welfare of America. not Greece and Rome.

I intend to support this bill because the class of immigrants it is intended to prevent from coming here, by their ways and manner of living, tend to lower the standard of American labor, and by this statement I do not simply mean the lowering of the wage of labor, but also the social tone or standard of labor. am inclined to think no one will dispute this. However, if such there be, permit me to ask him, if he had a son, would he consider him occupying as high a plane of labor when placed upon a public work with a gang of such laborers, with whom he could not converse and who inhabit crowded tenements or box cars, as if he were laboring alongside men who recognize the American standard of living? I am speaking of the son who labors, not a foreman or timekeeper. Of course no one would admit such to be the fact. What has been and is the present effect on the standard of labor? To any observer it is plain, so far as common labor is concerned upon public works in our country, the standard has fallen to a level where Americans refuse to engage in it, both on account of the wage and the association. All will agree that labor should be exalted, and no man should blush to admit he labors for a livelihood, and that callouses on the hands produced by honest toil should be considered badges of honor rather than disgrace. But under existing conditions the American youth feels humiliated and disgraced when classed as a common laborer. Why? To my mind it is, in a great measure, due to the lowering of the standard of labor.

While it may be possible for the present generation of American boys to escape common labor, the unborn generations of the future will be unable to do so, and we should have a thought for them.

This is our country. Our posterity must abide here. Shall we consider their welfare, or shall we, unmindful of them, rush recklessly on, blocking every avenue of opportunity, and all done in the name of the downtrodden of other lands? Let us raise the standard of labor now, or at least make an effort to prevent it going still lower. How much better it would be if those who employ a large number of laborers would aid in raising the standard, pay better wages, and get better results even from Americans. I am fully aware that many of those opposed to this legislation are governed by humanitarian instincts, but I fear there are those more selfish and whose sentiments are expressed in the following lines—the name of the author I do not know:

Breed us more men, ye daughters of toil; Ye alien mothers in far-off lands, Sire them strongly, clean brawn and bone, For we sift from the chaff the wheat alone, When they come to die at our hands.

Think on our greed in your travail throes, Think of us when ye bare your breast, Mine and smelter shall claim their toli. Roads shall be broken and reach their goal, Though ye smell their blood from the west.

We build us strong on your woman's woe Pier of granite and iron span, Glare of furnace and caisson's gloom, Of him whom ye gave us—a man.

Seas shall not bar your sons from harm; Steppe or ferest or alpine slope, Our arms are long to grasp what we need, The New World springs from your trampled seed; Ye drain the dregs of our draught of hope.

So much for the effect of immigration on the standard of American labor. What of the ultimate effect upon our Government of the unlimited immigration of southern European and oriental races? Is it problematical? We are assured there is no danger. I am apprehensive. Not that I consider these races more criminally inclined than others, but the nature and characteristics of these people and freir past history causes me to doubt their proper assimilation without danger to our country. I do not make this assertion intending to cast any reflections upon them. I know the story of the many brave and brilliant men of southern Europe. But I can not but feel that the people of northern and western Europe have demonstrated to a much greater degree their capacity for self-government and the ability to control themselves at such times when a more hot-blooded race would have plunged into revolution. I am satisfied in my own mind that the admission of countless thousands of immigrants into our country from southern Europe and oriental countries is a danger—remote, perhaps, but no less certain—to the life of our Government. It is revolution within, not danger from without, that will be the ever-present menace to our country.

The congenial assimilation of races so different in temperament and traditions as those of southern Europe and oriental countries with the races of northern and western Europe is a practical impossibility, even in this land of freedom. The former, lacking in comprehension of the true spirit of our institutions, can not be elevated to the true standard of American citizenship by assimilation, but the tendency would be to proportionately lower the present standard. The incentive which brings these people to our shores is different from the incentive which caused the migration of northern and western Europeans to our

With perhaps some exception the immigrants we seek to bar from our shores do not come here with the avowed purpose of making this their permanent abiding place, but for the time being to take advantage of the greater opportunities here af-forded to earn and save some money and later on to return to their native land, there to spend their declining years in comparative comfort on the small fortune accumulated here. do not come with any clear understanding of the meaning and purpose of our Government, nor do they join with patriotic impulse in the hopes and aspirations of our people; they simply come to labor for the gold given as a recompense, never realizing the true sentiment of American citizenship. Strangely different were the feelings of the men of northern and western Europe, who, perhaps, possessed as great a love for native land, gave it up when they landed on our shores, and not only entered into the labor necessary to carve out for themselves homes here but they enter into the spirit of our political institutions, and, as soon as possible, under our laws, swore allegiance to our flag, and with joyous hearts sang in unison with native-born Americans "My country 'tis of thee" and so forth. More than More than this, when revolution threatened our country's existence these men rallied around the old flag, and no braver defenders did it have than the sons of Erin who followed the banner of Sheridan and Birney and brave Phil Kearney; and the Scots, under Mc-Pherson, McArthur, and others; and the Germans who fought with Sigel, who after a hard day's battle in defense of our flag could be heard around their camp fire singing the songs of the fatherland. Thus was our country made strong and mighty by these classes of immigrants. But it is no argument, because this is true, that we should have unrestricted immigration into our country.

Much of the criticism of this bill is directed against that provision which provides for a literacy test, alleging that this is an unreasonable and indefensible provision. That it will permit the educated criminal to come in but will bar out the honest, industrious illiterate. I do not contend that illiteracy necessarily makes one a bad citizen, but I do contend that in a country such as ours the safety of the Government depends upon the intelligence of the people. To my mind it is not an unreasonable requirement to ask of those coming from foreign lands seeking all the privileges and opportunities of American citizenship. Surely to ask a man to be able to read 30 words in his native language as a passport into this land of ours is a very insignificant limitation, and will not be seriously objected to by anyone who favors restriction at all.

In supporting this bill I feel we are performing a patriotic To charge us with having no charity for the unfortunate of other countries is idle declamation. If our friends who are opposing this bill are sincere in their devotion to the poor and unfortunate of other lands, why bar the pauper immigrant? Why not let him come in where he will have an opportunity to participate in the generous charity and hospitality of our friends, who undoubtedly are better able to contribute to his need than his own countrymen? The truth is that the Fosition of the advocates of this legislation is reasonable, logical, and patriotic. We have our own poor needing our care and charity; we have our own laboring man, whose interest we should guard; we have our country's future welfare to consider. Our own people, our laborers, artisans, and tradesmen, are entitled to our first consideration. Our institutions should be become burdensome to our institutions.

protected from destruction by improper immigration. Certainly this is our plain duty, and I would say, in the language of that great American, Abraham Lincoln, "with malice toward none and charity for all," I stand first for America, her citizens, her homes, her hopes and aspirations, with a profound desire to see her flag, the emblem of the free, continue to float with ever increasing glory through the coming years. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill because I conceive it to be my duty here as a Representative on this floor to cast my vote and participate in legislation, first, for the United States and for our people; and when I say people," I do not limit that term to the native-born American, but I include within that term all who are now here, whether they were born here or whether they have come from a foreign I shall support this bill, Mr. Chairman, because I am unwilling for a vote I may cast upon this floor to be considered in any way as lending any effort to bringing about any condition of affairs whereby an American born 100 years from to-day, 500 years from to-day, or 1,000 years from to-day shall be denied the privilege and the opportunity of exerting his power and directing his efforts in enterprises, the result of which may be the fullest success and the fullest prosperity which he may deserve. I do not look upon the United States as a temporary institution, but I look upon it, on the contrary, as a permanent institution which shall not only live 100 years, but which shall live for 1,000 years; and it is an economic fact, Mr. Chairman, that the more the population increases, the more thickly any country becomes populated, the more people an acre of land must support; and if conditions of immigration, as they are to-day, shall continue for 100 or 200 years, or a shorter period of time, I can conceive of a condition which will make it necessary for an acre of ground in the United States to support more people than it can possibly support, and that it will be necessary, in order that the American child and the American citizen may be supported and have an opportunity to bring about a condition which will bring prosperity to him, to find an avenue of exit instead of an avenue of entrance. I am unwilling that my vote on the floor of this House shall contribute to a condition, however far removed it may be, when the American-born citizen shall be compelled to find a new avenue of escape into other countries in order that he may find the opportunity to bring about success, the opportunity for education and prosperity which we believe he ought to enjoy here at home. [Applause.] I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, to cast a vote upon this floor which will, now or hereafter, take from the mouth of any American-born baby one spoonful of food in order to give it to a child born on some other shores. I am unwilling to cast a vote which will, now or hereafter, bring about a condition which will take one single job from an American citizen in order to give it to some one born on a foreign shore. And I do not say that with any prejudice against any man who comes from a foreign nation.

My ancesters, in common with those of every man who sits upon this floor to-day, emigrated from a foreign shore to the American Continent. Why did they do it? Because they sought a betterment of their condition. Why are millions coming to-day from foreign shores? In order that they may better their condition. I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, to cast a vote here that may be construed as an approval of a continuation of those conditions, so that in the future, however far removed it may be, it will become necessary for my posterity to emigrate to another country in order that they may better their condition and obtain that to which they are entitled here. [Applause.] And I am unwilling that those who come after me and those who shall come after you and all of us shall be compelled to exist in penury, want, and squalor in order that we may afford temporary relief to those who are existing in similar conditions in foreign countries to-day. It is not a political question in the sense that it is partisan; it is not a religious in the sense that it is denominational; it is not a geographical question in the sense that one State wants it and another is opposed to it. It is a question whether we shall continue to exploit our own country to the same degree as in the past, and thus rob millions yet unborn of their rightful patrimony in order that we may give it to others. It is a question whether we shall in haste to-day exhaust the storehouse of our own resources instead of preserving and conserving it for those who shall come after us. whether we shall now and in the long years which shall follow withhold from those now amongst us the opportunities for which they yearn to work and prosper in order that we may accommodate others we do not need and whose presence may

But, Mr. Chairman, I am thoroughly convinced of my duty, as I said at the outset, first to vote in favor of the people of the United States, and if other countries want to bring about a condition which will enable their people to enter here under this bill, let them enact laws to bring about such conditions both as to the people and their Government as will enable them to come in under the provisions of this law.

I am unable, Mr. Chairman, to see why those Members of this House who have heretofore cried out against the importation of the manufactures and products of foreign labor into the United States on the ground that it interfered with American labor are now willing to turn their faces upon that proposition and vote to let in the foreign laborer who makes the foreign product which they do not want to come into the United States. How can a man believe in the policy of shutting out the manufacture of the Italian or of the Greek or of the Pole or of the Russian because it will come into competition with the American laborer, and yet at the same time raise his voice in behalf of that same man who comes into the United States and takes a position away from the American laborer, whom he pretends to protect upon the floor of this House? It is not a question, Mr. Chairman, as to whether the ignorant man is either a better or worse citizen than a man who is educated. I admit that may not be always a fair test, but it will bring about a decrease in the immigration and permit us to use our efforts and our energies to better the conditions of those already here, and that is the object which is sought in this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to use some of his time.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS].

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House No. 6060, known as the immigration bill, has aroused considerable public discussion, both favorable and unfavorable, on account of the proposed literacy test.

Those opposed to the bill and those in favor of it might well be divided into three classes-those in favor for patriotic reasons, those opposed for sentimental reasons, and some in favor of the bill and some opposed to it for economic reasons.

It would perhaps be well to take up each class separately, and after studying what must be the fundamental reasons for the stand taken, place the bill in the balance for judgment.

The first of these great classes are those in favor of the bill for patriotic reasons. Let us examine their contentions. They believe that it is time to call a halt upon the great number of immigrants arriving annually; that the admixture of races foreign to American practices and without education is detrimental to the country; that the continued influx of these people will eventually break down American institutions and cause revolution; and that the various classes of people who are now immigrating to this country have neither the moral nor intellectual standing to make good American citizens.

Those opposed to the bill for sentimental reasons have an argument equally in their favor. They contend that to stop anyone from entering this country on account of being illiterate is un-American; that being illiterate does not interfere with his or her intellectuality, morality, or civic worth; that in most cases illiteracy is not of one's own choosing, and that the illiterate immigrants have in the past, and will in the future, contribute their fair share of the upbuilding and expansion of our country; that this country would still be undeveloped had it not been for the many thousands of immigrants, many of them illiterate, who have been welded into a homogeneous mass to make America the greatest Nation on earth. There is a kindly feeling for those people who are suffering under burdens that their forebears were able to cast aside when they came to this country.

It must be conceded by every fair-minded person that both of these arguments are very strong and that the opponents of the bill and those in favor of it have an argument equally convincing.

The economic question, however, is one that should be most carefully considered. After all, it is important to consider the public welfare of our country from this standpoint,

From 1899 to 1910, inclusive, there were admitted into our country 9,555,673 immigrants, of whom 2,506,713 were without occupation-including women and children. The remaining 7,048,953 reported as having occupations. Of these, 234 per cent were farm laborers, 35.9 per cent were laborers, and 20.2 per cent were employed in skilled occupations.

There should be no doubt in our minds that a great number of our laborers employed on the farms, in our great public works, or our railroads, must be recruited from this mobile force of workmen reaching our shores almost daily. Therefore, is it possible for us to successfully continue our great public improvements without their assistance?

A study of the following table, showing the countries from which immigration is now the greatest, will lead to some solution of the problem.

Taking all the emigration from the country at 100 per cent, we find 10.7 per cent are skilled workmen; 1.5 per cent are farm laborers; 1.4 per cent are farmers; and 64.2 per cent are laborers, showing that labor seeks a market the same as any other commodity, and the farming demand for labor retains a greater percentage of the immigration than either skilled cr ordinary labor.

Take the immigrant from the south of Italy. During the years 1899 to 1910, inclusive, 1,471,659 came to the United States, over half of them being illiterate. Had the bill under consideration been in effect during these years at least 750,000 would not have been able to enter. The statistics for 1908, 1909, and 1910 show that 55 out of every 100 immigrants return home. It will therefore be seen that the ebb and flow of the labor market has evidently taken care of any surplus immigration. But out of the 1,471,659 immigrants, 77 per cent were either farm laborers or labors unskilled, doing work of the kind that is least desirable to American born or educated workmen. The same is true of the Croatian and Slavonian, the North Italian, the Magyar, and the Slovak, and to a less extent among the

During the years 1899 to 1910, taking the six races given, there arrived in the United States 3,364,558 immigrants who had occupations. Of these about 1,100,000 were farm laborers and about 1,500,000 were ordinary laborers. Had this bill been in operation during this period about 1,200,000 of these immigrants would have been excluded.

After consulting the report of the Bureau of Immigration, which shows the number of foreigners leaving the United States during 1908, 1909, and 1910, and by applying the same ratio to the period of 1899 to 1910, I find that over 1,640,000, or about 50 per cent of the foreigners from the six aforesaid countries have left our shores for other climes. The permanent growth of our foreign population from these races has therefore become much smaller than the reports of the Immigration Bureau would lead us to believe.

The recent report of the Department of Agriculture shows that only 27 per cent of the tillable land of the United States is actually under cultivation. This report is based upon the reports of over 35,000 correspondents. In other words, for every 100 acres that are now tilled about 375 more acres may be tilled when the country is fully developed. In the development of the agriculture of the country the land which was most easily brought into a state of cultivation, as the great Mississippi Valley, was the first to be brought into such use. Extension of tilled acres will be at greater expense for clearing, drainage, and irrigation unless we have sufficient labor.

The same is true of our public works. We in Philadelphia are contemplating an extensive system of subways, together with many other larger improvements. Men to do this kind of work are very hard to find among people who have education, no matter what price the labor is paid. This is a fact that must be given serious consideration.

The American Federation of Labor weekly news letter of January 10, 1914, contains this paragraph:

This literacy test is very broad and liberal. When it is enacted into law it will prove to be equally valuable as a means of protection to native-born American workmen, foreign-born workmen already here, and foreign-born workmen who may come in the future. A foreign-born workman able to read will not be so easily imposed upon as the foreign-born workman who can not read. It will enable such to become more easily acquainted with American institutions and American tradeunions, and protect all from the greed and rapacity of the big corporations that are striving their utmost to keep labor in this country under their subjection.

Theoretically this statement is very true, but as a practical proposition it can easily be seen that an unnatural restriction of the ebb and flow of any commodity such as labor is exactly the same as an unnatural restriction of the ebb and flow of Such a condition is sure to cause trouble and disaster.

money. Such a condition is sure to cause trouble and disaster.

If 150,000 immigrants per year are restricted from coming into this country from the six races mentioned, what will happen to our contemplated extensions of public works? What will become of the present public works which are being carried on in all of the larger cities? What about the great railroad extensions under contemplation? Who will gather the crops during the two or three months of pressing demand made by the farming districts every year, thereby preventing the rulnation of those crops? Will it be possible to recruit from among our present population sufficient workmen to meet the demand even at higher wages? There is not a Member of Congress who does not know that every year during certain months there is a scarcity of labor in his district and that a surplus of labor only exists during a business depression.

The cry has been raised that the foreign laborer does not spend his money here, but takes it back home with him. This is undoubtedly true; but for the wages paid does he not give his labor in return?

The Panama Canal would not have been finished for years had the literacy test been in operation on the Isthmus.

Since the report of the Immigration Commission medical science has made such strides that we should in the near future be able to restrict our immigrants to those who are healthy and fit in every way to become American citizens. The proper solution of the immigration question would be for a strict inspection on both sides of the water, so as to prevent any immigrant with either a moral or physical defect entering our

I firmly believe that we should be willing to give opportunity for admission to every man, woman, or child of sound morals, mind, and body. While the bill under discussion contains some very good features, until the literacy test is eliminated, however, I am compelled for the economic reasons given to vote against it.

Mn MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I happened into the Chamber this morning when my colleague [Mr. RAKER] protested against the criticisms that had been launched against the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration [Mr. Bunnert] because the latter's State of Alabama had been pointed out as having a large percentage of illiterates. I think that the criticisms hurled at the gentleman from Alabama are just. When a physician has a remedy or nostrum with which he proposes to cure an evil, if he be afflicted with the disease which his remedy is supposed to heal, he ought to be willing to take a dose of his own medicine to cure himself; and when a barber wants to sell a hair restorer to his baldheaded customers, if he himself be baldheaded, he should be willing to use it first upon himself and bring back the hair on his own head. [Laughter.] cian, heal thyself," is certainly applicable in such cases.

All too frequently prejudice, bigotry, and race hatred are brought into problems of this kind. Questions of this character have cropped out frequently in this country ever since the foundation of Plymouth Colony. The Pilgrims who landed at foundation of Plymouth Colony. The Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth Rock left their native land on account of religious persecution. They had been in the New World but a few years before they drove out into the wilderness Roger Williams because he had broader ideas. broader views on religious subjects than they had. He was the first to proclaim the doctrine of religious liberty in the Colonies, and was exiled by religious exiles in consequence.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said frequently that we are living in an age of hysteria. The sentiment for much of the legislation we are called upon to enact in these days of fads and faddists has been worked up by hysterical men and women. Why, only last Monday this House passed a bill of that character—the so-called red-light bill. No one on this floor can stand up and defend vice; we all agree that vice, wherever it exists, ought to be eradicated; and yet after that bill was passed what happened? I have heard that some of its most earnest advocates rushed to the White House and asked the President for God's sake not to sign that bill until they had a chance to do something for those unfortunate women that that red-light law would drive into the streets. Why did they not look out for the unfortunate women first? Why did they not try to secure employment for them beforehand? Oh, if they had only taken to heart the lesson that one finds in the New Testament. call the incident of the woman taken in adultery, who was brought before the Christ. Under the Hebraic law she would have been stoned to death. But when the lowly Nazareen was informed of her offense he meekly said, "He that is without sin among you let him first cast a stone at her." Abashed, her accusers sneaked out of the room, and when they had all slunk away and he and she were alone, he exclaimed to the woman in God-like spirit, "Go and sin no more." How much better to meet these questions and these problems in that kind of spirit rather than in the narrow, bigoted, prejudiced spirit in which many of them are met nowadays.

And so, urged on by fanatical, hysterical, but probably wellmeaning, men and women, we are now requested to take another leap in the dark. We are urged to enact this illiteracytest immigration law regardless of the consequences upon those American industries that require the kind of labor that the illiterates alone seem to be willing to perform.

Mr. Chairman, I know that there are certain publications in the United States that are vigorously advocating this kind of They are also denouncing with bitterness and vinlegislation. dictiveness the members of a certain religious denomination in our country. They carry at the head of their columns the words "For freedom of speech," "For freedom of the press," but they seem to forget or overlook the words "For freedom of religious worship." And to show that the fathers of the Republic held of paramount importance the freedom of religious worship, to show that the right to worship one's God in one's own way was esteemed even a higher right than freedom of speech or freedom of the press, let me call attention to the first amendment to the Constitution, which reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

That language must convince every American citizen that the founders of the Republic held freedom of religious worship ahead of freedom of speech or freedom of the press

Sir, the petitions I have received in favor of this legislation come almost entirely from the same classes that would ostracize many of our fellow citizens on account of the religious belief of these fellow citizens. The spirit that actuates them in the latter instance—the spirit of blind, unreasoning prejudice is the same spirit that inspires them to ask for this illiteracy test.

Mr. Chairman, we are all agreed that we should oppose the admission to our shores of criminals, paupers, the physically and the mentally unfit. There is no difference of opinion so far as their exclusion is concerned. But these illiterates do a class of work that the native Americans will not do.

The American native born ordinarily does not do the hard work of laying railroad ties and rails, of digging trenches, of balancing roadbeds, and work of that character that these illit-You find this same character of immigrants in England; you find them in Germany; you find them in all of the progressive countries of the world, because the natives of those countries do not do that hard, manual, physical work which educated men everywhere refrain from doing. It is your illiterate, your uneducated man, who has to work with his brawn and not with his brain, who is willing to do it; it is he who is your hewer of wood, your drawer of water; and you want to shut the door upon that kind of immigration. I say you could better afford to keep out some of your educated skilled labor than lose the benefit of the brawn and muscle of the illiterate laborer who is content to take that employment which the educated man can not or will not perform.

Why, sir, the application of the illiteracy test provided for in this bill will deny 250,000 immigrants the right of admission to our shores every year. If that be what you contemplate, why are you not honest enough to say so? Why hide behind a subterfuge of this kind? Why do you not say right out and out, "We want to close the doors against further immigration; we do not want any more immigrants to come here, because we are opposed to their coming on principle"? But you dare not do that. Oh, no; you cloak yourselves behind the illiteracy test.

Mr. Chairman, Nancy Hanks, the mother of President Lincoln, was an illiterate, and Andrew Johnson, who became President of the United States, was educated by his wife after he was married. Many of the men who fought in the Revolutionary War, from whom Sons of the American Revolution and Daughters of the American Revolution are proud to be descended, were illiterates who could not write their names. Many of the early colonists could neither read nor write; they had to make a mark in place of a signature in signing important documents. It was not their fault. They did not happen to have the opportunity to learn how to read and write. After all, education is largely a matter of opportunity. And many of the illiterates who come to this country to-day are illiterate because they were denied educational advantages. But we have had this question of excluding immigrants before us at every stage of our history. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] stated awhile ago that even when we were Colonies the great philosopher, Benjamin Franklin, opposed the further immigration of Germans into Pennsylvania. About 20 years later he evidently found that his theories were wrong; that his fears were unfounded; for he was one of the committee of five of the Continental Congress who helped draft the Declaration of Independence, and in the Declaration of Independence one of the complaints against the King of Great Britain is that he refused to pass laws to allow foreigners to migrate to this country. In the early part of the nineteenth century the agitation against immigrants was directed against the Germans and the Irish. Why, even the children of Irish immigrants were insulted in the public schools in the larger cities of this country. The turner halls of the Germans were frequently attacked; the doors were broken and the windows were smashed by the prejudiced haters of foreign immigrants.

Even as late as 1898 there was complaint against the Swedes coming to this country, and it is universally conceded in these days that the Swedes, as well as Scandinavians generally, make a splendid type of American citizen. It is universally conceded in these days that the Irish and the German immigrants of half or three-quarters of a century ago were a fine class of men and Their descendants have added materially to the upbuilding of this American Commonwealth. And yet, if you were to read the attacks made upon them during the period they were flocking to our shores in great numbers, you would find that the language used against them was just as bitter, just as vindictive, as is the language that is being used against the immigrants of our day.

Mr. Chairman, statistics show that an overwhelming percentage of the immigrants of to-day are farm laborers and unskilled workmen. There is a crying demand for farm labor all over the Union. In the West millions of acres of arable land lie undeveloped on account of the scarcity of farm labor. With the opening of the Panama Canal much of this immigration will go direct to the West. We in California have already provided for an immigration commission that will try to locate these immigrants in our orchards, our vineyards, and our farms. The products of the soil will be greatly increased in that State. We will be able to send a greater abundance of the good things of life to the teeming masses of the East. And what is true of country under this Burnett bill, whose presence here will be the real menace to our institutions and our country's welfare.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Seldombidge].

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, if we allowed our judgment upon this legislation to be controlled by the eloquent addresses to which we have listened from the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldforder] and the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn], I am sure that we would lose sight of one of the most important elements to be considered in determining our action. As I approach the discussion of this measure I do so entirely from an economic standpoint, because I believe we should so consider it.

If the present volume of immigration is a national asset instead of a national liability, we certainly should not consider favorably legislation looking to its restriction. But after the consideration which I have been able to give to the measure, and after listening to the arguments which have been presented to the committee, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the course of wisdom and of national prudence lies along the line of the passage of this bill. It is, indeed, a pleasing picture which has been unfolded to us this morning of the great tide of immigration coming to our shores which is to be influenced and affected by contact with our free institutions, rising from childhood to manhood under the influence of American principles and of American government; and were these conditions universal and general so far as the immigrant is concerned, I am sure that our verdict upon this measure would be different. But, Mr. Chairman, as we follow this tide of immigration, and as we see it coming, like the tread of armed men, through the gateways of our country, and as we see it scattering into regions ways of our country, and as we see it scattering into regions of this country where conditions portrayed by the gentleman from New York do not exist, we must admit, Mr. Chairman, that this flow of immigration has been largely due to the demand and to the market furnished by syndicated greed and mand and to the market turnished by syndicated greed and monopoly. When the history of the past 25 years shall have been written by those who are able to give it impartial consideration and portrayal, the record of the thousands of lives which have paid the penalty to human selfishness and to human greed upon the altar of this Moloch of monopoly will arise to condemn this generation for not having adopted and passed legislation of this character years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I come from a section of country which to-day is being visited by an industrial disturbance of serious import and effect. And that disturbance and that trouble is largely due to the presence there of this element of foreigners who have been lured from their homes across the sea by attractive promises of reward and now find themselves exposed to all the hardships and sufferings which can be visited upon that type of people under conditions of labor which exist in our coal-mining camps. The history of West Virginia and of Pennsylvania and of other great industrial centers corroborates, in my opinion, the statement that, were it not for the commercialization of immigration causes for this legislation would largely have disappeared.

Mr. Chairman, I question seriously whether this country has not reached the acme and limit of its absorptive power. I believe with all my heart that America forever should be the land of the free and the home of the brave, but the question with me is whether we do not owe a greater duty to the chil-dren of our own nationality, to those who are already here, to keep and preserve for them the ideals of Americanism and patriotism which have been inherent in the life of this country from its very beginning.

Mr. Chairman, 50 years ago the tide of immigration broke over our borders and found its home in the great prairies of the West. The people who came to us then were those who were stimulated with a hunger and a desire to occupy the land. to-day that tide breaks itself within the great congested centers of population, and the burden put upon the producers of the country by the great growth of our cities, with all the influences that grow out of such a condition, is rapidly weakening our productive energy until we find to-day that the cry is going up with increasing volume from the agricultural sections of this country for relief and for help in order that they may be built up and developed as in years gone by.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill.

Its provisions are most wise and generous. It will tend to California is equally true of all the Pacific Coast States.

I for one have no fear of the illiterate immigrant. It is the educated scoundrel, who could easily work his way into this it will also serve notice to those who live in other lands that this country must ever remain a home for those who are capable of understanding and appreciating the benefits of American civilization and who are willing to come here and join hands with us in the development of those principles of government which have been the characteristic of a true and free people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Colorado consume all of the time-seven minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. He did.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] proceed?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes re-

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Logue].
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Logue] is recognized.

[Mr. I.OGUE addressed the committee. See Appendix.] Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

FINLEY] is recognized.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe in a restriction of immigration for the reason that I believe it is necessary in order to protect and preserve our standard of American citizen-I believe it is necessary not only to protect and preserve our standard of American citizenship, but also to raise that standard, because in my opinion in no other way can we perpetuate and hand down to posterity the institutions of our

Mr. Chairman, a number of gentlemen have made the assertion on the floor of this House that Americans, being themselves only a few generations removed from immigrants, have no right to exclude others from coming to this country. I contend that such an assertion is both incorrect and based upon an inac-curacy of terms. The early settlers who came to America and laid the foundations for its future greatness were colonists, not immigrants. They came both to escape religious persecution and for the purpose of bettering their economic condition. They faced difficulties and evolved a civilization which, though complex, has to a great extent remained Anglo-Saxon in character. It is to a civilization already founded and a country in the full tide of its national career that these later persons, properly termed immigrants, are coming. They seek to share the advantages of this great Republic equally with those whose forefathers made it possible, nor would we wish to exclude any who bring with them health, intelligence, and a desire to have a part in the permanent upbuilding of the country. America has always held itself out as an asylum for religious and political refugees who are worthy and qualified in a proper sense to become American citizens, and against such we never wish to close our doors. It does not follow, however, because of the rather liberal open-door policy which has so long been maintained, that the people of this country have lost their right to say who shall come among them. This privilege has been enjoyed by all peoples since the earliest time. The Hebrews, the Greeks, the Romans, all hedged about their citizenship with the most rigid restrictions. America chooses to be liberal in this respect, but it does not follow that the people of this country have not the right to say what the character of its future citizenship shall be

Immigration has already been somewhat restricted; we do not allow the admission of alien criminals or insane, which in the early days of the immigration movement were freely admitted, to later become a burden upon the taxpayers of this coun-To show the extent of the burden imposed, the census of 1890 disclosed that 33.2 per cent of the insane in the United States were of foreign birth. In 1904 the New York State Lunacy Commission reported to the Department of Commerce and Labor that in Greater New York 60 per cent of the insane were of alien birth. In a recent tabulation of statistics it is pointed out that in 1912 of the 31,624 insane patients of the New York hospitals 13,728 were of foreign birth. Of this latter number 9,241 had never become naturalized citizens, so that 29.2 per cent of the total number of insane cared for by New York State were aliens. The average length of residence of the inmates of insane hospitals is 9.85 years, consequently the 9,241 aliens in the New York hospitals in 1912 represent a future cost to the State of New York of $25,412,038.44. It can be contended with great show of justice that it is unfair to impose upon New York the burden of meeting a condition for which the National Government alone is responsible. As regards diseased foreigners the immigration commission kept a record of all charity 1908, to February 28, 1909, and of the 23,758 cases 52.3 per cent were foreign born. The expense of caring for these cases fell entirely upon the people of this country. No one now contends that we have not the right to exclude such undesirables. It would be illogical to say that we have no right to go further and exclude illiterates also, provided that we are convinced that their admission is having a detrimental effect on the country.

That the admission of such hordes of illiterates does have a harmful effect is not open to doubt. The statistics do not conclusively show that the illiterate and other foreigners are more criminal in the commission of certain crimes than are the native Americans, but they do disclose the fact that the children of immigrants are more inclined to crime. The report of the Immigration Commission contains the following statement:

The proportion of the more serious crimes of homicide, blackmail, and robbery, as well as the least serious offenses, is greater among the foreign born.

It is not solely on the ground of their criminal inclination, however, that we wish to exclude the illiterates. It is undesirable for any State to have a large body of uneducated men, and particularly is this true of a republic, where each one can exercise the rights of citizenship. They must be educated, and the cost of doing so falls upon the taxpayers of this country.

We do not desire to aim a restrictive clause at any particular nation, yet it is a fact that the great majority of illiterate immigrants come from the countries of southern and eastern Europe. These are the countries with which we have least in common and whose people we find most difficult of assimilation. The number of immigrants coming from Europe is constantly increasing, and the great majority come from southern Europe and the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, Caspian, and Black Seas. Not all but many of these people are of mixed races. For thousands of years people from Asia, the north of Africa, and the south of Europe have contended for supremacy along the borders of these seas, and this in a large measure accounts for the mixed blood of the people living there to-day. The immigrants who came to this country prior to 1883 were mostly from England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland. Those who came after 1883 were chiefly from Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Greece, Italy, Montenegro, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Spain, Syria, and Turkey. Many years ago the State of South Carolina passed a law intended to encourage immigration from the north of Europe and by implication to discourage it from the southern European countries. The number coming into the United States from the north of Europe in 1882 was 563,170, as compared to 83,320 from southern European countries.

In 1907 the conditions were reversed, the northern Europeans numbering 227,851 and the southern ones 971,608. Computing from tables for the years 1899 to 1909, the per cent of illiteracy among northern Europeans was found to be 2.7 per cent, while among the southern ones it was 35.6. It will thus be seen that the literacy test will have the effect of excluding many immigrants from the countries of southern and eastern Europe. These people differ from us in their ideas of both government and religion, and coming in such large numbers are very difficult and to a large extent impossible to assimilate. A certain amount of new blood brought into a country may do good, but we do not want so many peoples of such different characteristics, or they will in time change the entire character of our civilization. Last year the immigrants coming to this country exceeded 1,400,000, and the present indications are that the number for this year will exceed 1,800,000. The United States already has one race problem on its hands-what the final solution will be nobody can say with certainty, except that the white race in this country will always rule.

It is also true that the present-day immigrants from southern Europe compose the large part of that class of transient immigrants which we find becoming such a factor in our civilization. Statistics show that of all the immigrants coming to this country about 30 per cent return home after a stay of a few years

Among the immigrants from eastern and southern Europe about 40 per cent return. Such a course is most beneficial to Europe, and the authorities there never discourage immigration where the immigrant expects to return shortly and invest his savings in his native country. Not only does the capital he brings with him increase the wealth of the home country, but the new ideas he has absorbed in America, the business methods he has learned, and his training there all contribute to make him a more desirable citizen than he was when he left home. He enjoys a state of affluence which makes him the envy of all the natives of his village and stimulates them with a desire patients entering certain New York hospitals from August 1, to follow his example by emigrating to America as he has done and returning home better off financially and in every other

It would be difficult to estimate the amount of American wealth which eventually finds its way to Europe. The news-papers always herald a new foreign alliance or marriage, dwelling upon the millions which will go out from America in the purchase of a foreign title, but the amount of wealth lost in this way is small as compared with the steady stream which flows every year in the wake of the returning immigrant.

It can not be said, however, that the return of the immi-grants' earnings is an absolute loss to the United States. But looking at the question from our standpoint, it would be far better to secure a class of immigrants who intend to remain permanently and have a part in the upbuilding of this country. Then America would have the benefit not only of their energy, but of their accumulated capital as well. The immigrants of the older type from the north of Europe, being mostly of Anglo-Saxon extraction, easily adapt themselves to conditions in the United States and as a rule remain here. It is the races of southern Europe, alien to us in religion, blood, and ideals, that chiefly compose the birds of passage, coming to America for a few years and then returning with all they can carry away. As the literacy clause mostly affects these southern Europeans, it will have the effect of excluding many of the immigrants who come to this country for only a temporary stay.

In looking at any question of this nature it is well to see in just what way it is productive of most good or harmful effects. The demand for restriction comes with greatest insistence from the labor organizations throughout the country, and undoubtedly it is on them that the greatest influence of immigration is The president of the American Federation of Labor, speaking for that organization, as did the officials of the Farmers' Union and many other organizations, including the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and substantially all other patriotic orders in this country, demanded that further restrictions be placed on the admission of aliens.

A great many immigrants from eastern and southern Europe go at once into the mines upon their arrival here, the great majority of them being unskilled in any line of employment. Being unable to speak English, and often to read even their own language, they are unable to comprehend intelligently the instructions given them or read the notices posted for their safety. As a result of both their ignorance and carelessness many accidents have occurred, rendering conditions under which the work must be done much less safe than formerly. Many of the later class of immigrants come without their wives or families, and being thus able to live, banded together in camps, they can accept lower wages than those on which the native laborer can As a result the scale of wages has been lowered to the point that the American laborer has been almost driven out of certain lines of employment, and this without benefit to the American people generally in the cost of living or otherwise. It is not the low tariff that results in low wages, but unrestricted immigration. Had the last Republican President been so solicitous for maintaining high wages he would not have vetoed a bill which had that end in view and was desired by labor organizations all over the country.

The literacy test seeks to remedy these evils so far as possible. No one test would absolutely result in separating the wheat from the tares, the good from the undesirable immigrants. By excluding the imporent area because the tares, the good from the undesirable immigrants. By excluding the ignorant ones, however, we rid ourselves of many dangers. Neither do we absolutely close our doors against any persons honestly desiring to better their condition by emigrating to a land of equal opportunities. To learn to read and write one's own language is not an insuperable difficulty, and those persons here will make better citizens if we require who wish to come here will make better citizens if we require of them that they acquire some of the essentials for good citizenship before leaving their native country. I would also have the examination of their fitness made, if possible, at the point of embarkation. Then, at least, America will not be put to the expense of their education, and it will result in giving to us a better, because a more intelligent, and ambitious class of immigrants.

Mr. Chairman, I heartly approve of section 3 of the bill, which I shall insert at the close of my remarks:

which I shall insert at the close of my remarks:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeclies, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelled in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the minawful assaniting or filling of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to heir reamplying for admission; persons who have come maintain in the United States a status or occupation blacing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission intereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or bereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to eater. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips, of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the United States; to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigrantion officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States; and mission to the United States; and mission to the United States; and in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude: Provided further, That skille denomination professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided further. That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of a concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such alien mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of his country, as may be necessary for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powers].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powersl is recognized.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House for consideration is in substance the one that passed the House and Senate last year by a vote of about 2 to 1, and but for the veto of a former President would now be a law. Last year I strongly advocated this measure, and I desire at this time to offer some observations upon it.

It has been contended here by gentlemen opposing this bill that it is un-American, and that we are reversing our policy of a lifetime by now attempting to restrict immigration to this country. I want to address myself for a few minutes to that feature of this proposition. I desire to assert that we are not only not reversing our policy in restricting immigrants by this bill but, upon the contrary, we are in thorough harmony and accord with it. From the very moment this Government began to pass laws upon the immigration question down to now it has consistently and in every instance, except one, passed laws restricting immigration. That one exception was when a law restricting immigration. That one exception was when a law was passed in the year 1864 encouraging contract labor. That was repealed in 1868.

A little history of what this Government has done in the past in regard to this question will make perfectly clear the assertion I have just made.

The immigration to the United States is naturally divided into two periods:

First. The immigrants arriving before the year 1880, known as the old immigration; and Second. Immigrants after that time, known as the new immigration.

From the first settlement of this country down to about 1835 immigrants came here as a matter of course. Practically up to that time the only legislation enacted, and practically all that was proposed, was the law of 1819 regulating steerage passengers at sea and making provision for recording statistics relative to immigration. None were kept before this.

From 1835 to 1860 the subject of immigration to this country was much discussed, and there sprang up what was known as the "native-American" and "know-nothing" movements, largely basing their opposition to immigrants to this country who embraced the Catholic faith. These movements soon assumed emoraced the Catholic latth. These movements soon assumed the form of a political organization known in history as the American Republican Party and later the "Know-Nothing Party." As a result of these organizations, in the main, affiliating with the new political movement, the United States Senate in 1836 passed a resolution directing the Secretary of State to collect information respecting the immigration of foreign paupers and criminals to the United States.

The House of Representatives in 1838 agreed to a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee of the House to consider the propriety of passing a law prohibiting the importation of vagabonds and paupers into this country as well as to consider the expediency of making our loose naturalization laws more stringent. This resolution was referred to a committee of seven Members, and their favorable report was the first congressional report ever made concerning any phase of the immigration question.

A bill was introduced in Congress upon the recommendation of the majority report of the committee, which bill provided that any master of a vessel who took on board an alien pas senger who was an idiot, lunatic, maniac, or one afflicted with an incurable disease, or one convicted of an infamous crime, with the intention of transporting such person to the United States, should, upon conviction, be fined $1,000 or be imprisoned from one to three years. This bill was not even considered by Congress, and for some 10 years following little attempt was made to secure immigration legislation; but the great increase in immigration to this country from Europe from 1848 to 1850 put new life and fears in the breasts of those fighting immigration; and it is recorded that in 1855 both the governors and Legislatures of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, California, and Kentucky were "Know-Nothings." The slogan of the "Know-Nothing Party" was that Americans must rule America, and their greatest strength was in the Thirty-third Congress, from 1854 to 1856, when they claimed 43 Representatives and 5 Senators. Ten years later, however, in the Thirty-eighth Congress, there was not a "Know-Nothing" Representative in the House, and the "Know-Nothing Party" disappeared without having accomplished anything against immigration. The truth is that in 1864 Congress passed a law to encourage immigration, especially the importation of contract labor. This law was repealed, however, in 1868, leaving on the statute books the act of 1819, amended slightly by the acts of 1847 and 1848, providing improved conditions in the steerage of immigration ships. The law of 1864 stands out as the only attempt on the part of the National Government to promote immigration. The States, however, have frequently made such attempts. New York, in 1824, passed a law requiring all masters of vessels arriving at the port of entry to make a written report, giving the name, age, and last residence of every person on board during the voyage, and whether any of the passengers had gone on board any other vessel with a view of proceeding to New York.

Another section of the law gave the mayor of New York City the power to require bond of every master of a vessel to indemnify the mayor and the overseer of the poor from any expense incurred for passengers brought in and not reported. This law was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 1829 the State of New York passed another law, which provided that the master of every vessel arriving from a foreign port should pay to the health commissioner $1.50 for every cabin passenger, $1 for every steerage passenger, mate, sailor, or marine, and 25 cents for every person on a coasting vessel.

In 1837 Massachusetts passed a law requiring the owner of a vessel to pay $2 for each alien passenger brought to her ports and to give bond that certain immigrants should not become a public charge. Both the New York and the Massachusetts statutes were later held in part to be unconstitutional. California and Louisiana passed statutes looking to the limitation of immigration, which were held to be unconstitutional. In Cali-fornia the question of Chinese immigration was so acute that recourse was had to the Federal Government, which resulted in the Burlingame treaty, which was proclaimed on July 28, 1868, and which was the first treaty to deal with Chinese immigration to the United States.

The attitude of the United States in this treaty toward Chinese immigration was not popular in the Pacific Coast States, and they continued their agitation for further restriction of Chinese immigrants, which resulted in the Congress of the United States passing the act of March 3, 1875, aimed at immigrants from China, Japan, and other oriental countries. This law prohibited the importation of convicts, women for immoral purposes, coolie labor, and Chinese and Japanese subjects without their free and voluntary consent, and fixed heavy penalties for a violation of the provisions of the statute. Later other treaties and Chinese and Japanese exclusion acts forbade the immigration of Chinese and Japanese to this country as well as Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled. And that is the way the matter stands to-day. So the bill now before the House is not intended to exclude Chinese, Japanese, or Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled, as that is already provided for.

And while the National Government was experimenting with immigration in this way the various States had from time to time, as I have said, tried their hands at it. New York, Massachusetts, California, Louisiana, and other States passed immigration statutes of one form and another, the constitutionality of a number of which in time reached the Supreme Court of the United States for final decision. It became apparent that the subject of immigration was too big for State control, and in a very unusual decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on March 20, 1876, that court decreed that-

We are of the opinion that this whole subject-

Of immigration-

has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our laws, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters applicable to all ports and to all vessels, a serious question which has long been a matter of contest and complaint may be effectively and satisfactorily settled.

This decision virtually put the subject of immigration under Federal control, and on July 6, 1876, following the decision of the Supreme Court in March of that year, Senator Conkling and Representative Cox, of New York, introduced bills in Congress fer the national regulation of immigration. No legislation, however, of this sort was put on the statute books until August 3, This law provided, among other things, that a head tax of 50 cents each be levied on all aliens entering the ports of the United States to defray expenses of regulating immigration and caring for needy immigrants after landing; that lunatics, idiots, convicts—except for political offenses—and persons likely to become public charges should not be permitted to land, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be charged with executing the provisions of the act, and that he be empowered to enter into contracts with such State offices as the governor of any State might designate to take charge of the local affairs of immigration within such State.

On February 26, 1885, the first act of Congress was approved forbidding the importation of contract labor to the United States. This law was defective in that no arrangement was made for its general execution, no inspection of the alien was provided for, nor deportation of the contract laborer, if found so to be. This act, however, was amended by an act of February 23, 1887, which gave the Secretary of the Treasury authority to deport within one year from landing any alien who had come to this country contrary to the provisions of the contract-labor act.

In 1889 a standing committee on immigration was established in the Senate of the United States, and a select committee on immigration and naturalization was established in the House.

In 1890 these committees were authorized to make a joint investigation of the immigration question, and especially to look into the various State laws on the subject. These committees, in making their report, suggested that while no very radical changes in the immigration laws were at that time advisable, still they found that throughout the country there existed a strong sentiment for a stricter enforcement of these laws.

The fact is that in the year 1890 one or more political parties in 23 different States demanded additional regulation of immigration. Responsive to this demand for stricter immigration laws and regulations, the Congress of the United States passed, and it was approved on March 3, 1891, an additional immigration act amendatory of previous acts. This act added to the list of aliens heretofore excluded those "suffering from a loath-some or contagious disease," "polygamists," and those "whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or who is assisted by others to come," except, however, that any person living in the United States could pay the way of a relative or friend, provided, of course, that the relative or friend did not belong to some of the excluded classes. This act strengthened further the existing contract-labor law by prohibiting the encouragement of immigration by promises of employment through advertisements published in any foreign country, and steamship companies were forbidden under penalty to solicit or encourage immigration.

The law of 1891 also created the office of Superintendent of Immigration, and instead of some State officer, by appointment of the governor, having charge of the execution of the immigration laws in that State, as provided for in the act of 1882, the whole question of immigration for the first time was completely under Federal control.

This act also provided that the commanding officer of every vessel carrying aliens to our shores should furnish to the proper immigration officials the name, nationality, last residence, and destination of all immigrants on board; that medical examination of immigrants at United States ports should be made by surgeons of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, and within one year after arrival any immigrant might be returned who had come to this country in violation of law, and that, too, at the expense of the transportation company that brought him. For the first time inspection of immigrants on the Mexican and Canadian borders was established. While this was the most stringent immigration act passed by Congress up to this time, still the subject of immigration continued to be much discussed, and a strong movement for further restriction developed, owing largely to the industrial depression from IS90 to IS96. Investigations more or less extensive were conducted by joint committees of Congress and also by the Industrial Commission.

In 1894 an act was passed raising the head tax from 50 cents to $1, but President Cleveland vetoed another bill passed by both branches of Congress providing for a literacy test.

Based upon the report of the Industrial Commission made to Congress February 20, 1902, a bill was introduced in the House providing for a complete codification and rearrangement of all immigration acts from March 3, 1875, to the act of 1894. An amendment was offered to this bill and passed by the House by a vote of 86 to 7 providing that all persons over 15 years of age who were unable to read the English language or some other language should be excluded, making an exception in favor of wives, parents, grandparents, and children mder 18 years of age. The bill so amended passed the House May 27, 1902. When it reached the Senate it eliminated the educational test, raised the head tax from $1 to $2, and made it unlawful for any person to assist in the entry or naturalization of alien anarchists. The House agreed to these amendments, and the bill was approved by the President March 3, 1003.

It was not until February 20, 1907, that any other immigration act of much import was passed by Congress, although by an act of February 14, 1903, the Department of Commerce and Labor was established and the Commissioner General of Immigration was placed under that department, his official position being that of a head of a bureau. On June 29, 1906, the Bureau of Immigration was changed to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, a uniform rule for the naturalization of allens was provided for, and the administration of the new naturalization law was charged to this bureau.

A little history of the immigration act of February 20, 1907, the latest now on the statute books, with a small amendment of March 26, 1910, and the one sought to be amended by the bill we are now considering, may not be amiss:

A bill introduced by Senator Dillingham, of Vermont, was favorably reported by the Senate committee on March 29, 1906. This bill sought to amend the immigration act of 1903 by increasing the head tax from $2 to $5, by adding imbeclies, feebleminded persons, children under 17 years of age unaccompanied, and persons "who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of such a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living," were added to the excluded classes. The section of existing law excluding prostitutes was amended by adding "women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose."

A division of information was created in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and steamship companies were for the first time required to furnish to the proper immigration officials lists of outgoing passengers. In the Senate the bill was amended by the insertion of literacy tests very similar to the one this House is now considering and which I will later quote, and the Senate bill as amended by the literacy test passed the Senate May 23, 1906.

When the bill reached the House it was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and they amended it by substituting one of their own, in many respects similar to it, including the literacy test. In the conference between the House and the Senate conferees the head tax was made $4, the literacy test eliminated, and a commission composed of nine members was authorized to make a complete investigation of the immigration question and report its findings to Congress. Composing this commission were to be three Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker, three Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and the other members of the commission to be appointed by the President of the United States. This commission, after an extensive investigation, both in this country and in Europe, costing $1,000,000 and covering a period of four years, made a voluminous report covering 42 volumes of printed matter, covering all phases of the immigration question. This commission, after a most thorough investigation of the immigration question, found certain facts to exist and made some specific recommendations to Congress.

In the first place, the commission found that there were too many immigrants coming to this country; that there is now an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries of the United States; that restrictive legislation ought to be passed by Congress; and that the literacy test was the best single method of accomplishing the desired end. Let me quote the exact words of the commission:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in industries of the country as a whole, a condition which demands legislation restricting the further admission of such unskilled labor. It is desirable in making the reduction that a sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present supply of unskilled labor.

And after enumerating more than a half dozen ways by which this reduction could be brought about, the commission

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

And this is not a partisan political report for political purposes. It is a report by men of both parties after a most careful and painstaking investigation. The fact is that the question of immigration is not a political one.

So from what I have said you will see that the policy of this Government from the time it took any notice of this immigration question at all has been one of restriction, and every bill, with the one exception, that has been passed by Congress from the earliest history of this Government down to now has been one restricting and not encouraging the flow of immigration to this country. In the face of this legislation, showing beyond any doubt that one class of undesirable immigrants after another has been excluded by Federal legislation, I do not understand how Members can assert that by and through the bill before us we are reversing our policy as a Nation toward immigrants coming to this country.

have briefly reviewed the legislation on this question, and before taking up and beginning to discuss the merits of the bill now pending before this House I want to adduce some proof to show that the question is nonpolitical and that restrictive legislation has been demanded in the national platforms of the two dominant political parties in this country. Away back in 1896, more than an eighth of a century ago, when the evils of immigration were not so great and not so well known as now, the Republican Party in its national platform of that year not only demanded a restriction of immigration but specifically indorsed the reading and writing test as a means to accomplish that end. The plank in the platform to which I refer is as follows:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly en-forced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

This is one of the planks in the platform upon which the beloved McKinley was elected, and in his inaugural address he specifically indorsed the immigration plank and recommended an intelligence test to alien immigrants, to the end that American citizenship be protected and American institutions preserved.

In the Republican national platform of 1900 we find this language:

In the further interests of American workmen we favor a more fective restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from foreign

In his first message to Congress in 1901 ex-President Roosevelt indorsed unequivocally the restriction of immigration and an educational test. He used this pointed language:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure a careful, and not merely perfunctory, educational test; some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

The Republican national platform this year (1912), the latest expression of the party on the subject, reads as follows:

We pledge the Republican Party to the enactment of appropriate laws to give relief from the constantly growing evil of induced or undesirable immigration, which is inimical to the progress and welfare of the people of the United States.

That the Republican Party stands for a restriction of immigration there is no room to doubt.

The Democratic Party, too, has put itself on record in regard to this great question. In its national platform of 1896 it used this language:

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

In its national platform of 1900 the Democratic Party, while containing no plank upon the general subject of immigration, indorsed the Chinese exclusion law and recommended its application to the same classes of all Asiatic races.

And the Democratic national platform of 1904 contained no plank upon the general subject of immigration, but did spe-cifically oppose the admission of Asiatic immigrants in this language:

We are opposed to the admission of Asiatic immigrants, who can not be amalgamated with our population.

The Democratic national platform of this year (1912) in-dorses more stringent immigration laws.

This is the latest expression of the Democratic Party on this important subject of immigration. Not only have the two dominant political parties in this country repeatedly expressed themselves in their national platforms in favor of restricting immigration, but the Republican platform of 1896 and the Republican President elected upon the Republican platform of 1900 have in express terms favored the literacy test-such a literacy test in substance that we are now considering. And what is that literacy test and what are the terms of the bill now before us?

I will insert at this point section 3 of the bill before us, which covers the classes of alien immigrants to be excluded:

substance that we are now considering. And what is that literacy test and what are the terms of the bill now before us?

I will insert at this point section 3 of the bill before us, which covers the classes of alien immigrants to be excluded:

Sec. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All kilots, inbedies, feesibe-minded within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vargrants; persons afflicted with disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon states of the control of the contr

if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case; but such determination shall not become final until a period of 30 days has elapsed. Within three days after such determination the Secretary of Labor shall cause to be published a brief statement reciting the substance of the application, the facts presented at the hearing and his determination thereon, in three daily newspapers of general circulation in three of the principal cities of the United States. At any time during said period of 30 days any person dissatisfied with the ruling may appeal to the district court of the United States of the district into which the labor is sought to be brought, which court or the judge thereof in vacation shall have jurisdiction to try de novo such question of necessity, and the decision in such court shall be final. Such appeal shall operate as a supersedeas: Provided jurther, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided jurther, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the profess that presses or previded furth

It will be observed that that provision of the bill relating to the literacy test excludes from entry into the United States-

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter.

This literacy test for the purpose of preventing objectionable foreigners from coming to this country is not a new proposition, as I have already observed. Not only have political parties in their national platforms specially declared for it, but Congress itself has unequivocally indorsed it.

The House, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed such a measure by the decisive vote of 195 to 20, while the Senate passed it by a vote of 52 to 10.

That literacy-test bill would have become a law but for the veto of President Cleveland.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress an immigration bill again passed the Senate, which carried a literacy-test provision, by a vote of 45 to 28.

In the Fifty-seventh Congress an illiteracy-test amendment to an immigration bill passed the House by the sweeping ma-

The fact is that at no time in the history of the country has a literacy-test provision in any immigration bill ever been defeated by either House of Congress.

Upon the contrary, such a provision has invariably been passed by decisive majorities when the question was submitted

And the various votes by both Houses of Congress on this subject is but a reflection of public opinion on the question.

Not all the newspapers, periodicals, and magazines of the country favor this legislation, but I think I am safe in saying that the bulk of the press do favor it.

Resolutions, petitions, memorials have poured in upon Congress, expressing the views and making known the wishes of large and representative bodies of our citizenship on this momentous and far-reaching question.

The Legislatures of the great States of Ohio, Tennessee, Vermont, and other States have memorialized Congress to pass more stringent immigration laws, and have specifically indorsed the literacy test.

The various farmers' organizations throughout the length and breadth of the land, the great labor organizations all over the country, the patriotic societies, powerful bodies representing charity, commerce, and the like, have upon divers occasions passed resolutions memorializing Congress to enact a law embodying an educational test and more stringent immigration laws generally.

There are a greater number of the people of the United States engaged in agriculture than in any other calling. The Farmers' National Congress, a body representing the highest ideals in agriculture in all the States of the Union and composed of representative farmers and students of agriculture from all the States, holds a national convention each year. Delegates are selected to attend these conventions by the governors of the various States as well as by the great agricultural organizations and bodies from the most skilled and scientific agriculturists in the whole country.

At these national gatherings they discuss the various problems affecting the welfare of the farmer, and often express their views in the form of resolutions.

At the last National Farmers' Congress they passed the following resolution:

Whereas the congressional Immigration Commission's report of 40 volumes has just been published and recommend the very measures which this organization has been advocating in its resolutions for years to judiciously restrict undesirable immigration:

Resolved, That we enthusiastically approve the commission's legislative recommendations that the head tax be increased, the illiteracy test be enacted, the foreign steamships be fined for bringing undesirables, and that other judicious measures be adopted, which are hereby urged upon the Congress of the United States.

'The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union has a membership of over 3,000,000.

This is possibly the most powerful in point of numbers and influence of any of the farmers' organizations in this country. This organization has been much interested in restrictive immigration laws and has frequently indorsed the literacy test.

At a recent meeting of this organization it expressed itself in this fashion:

this fashion:
Whereas the Immigration Commission, after a four years' investigation at home and abroad, involving an expenditure of a million dollars, reports that "many undeniably undesirable persons are admitted every year"; that "there is a growing criminal element in this country, due to foreign immigration"; and that "substantial restriction is demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations"; and Whereas that commission recommends increasing the head tax, excluding illiterate adults, requiring some visible means of support, fining the foreign steamships for bringing undesirables that could be rejected on the other side, and other measures, law in other new countries, and urged for years by this organization in its resolutions, before congressional committees, and otherwise; and
Whereas it is proposed to relieve the Northeast of its intolerable immigration evils and to continue the unloading of undesirables upon this country by diverting and distributing the incoming, ever-increasing influx from southern Europe, Asia, and northern Africa over the agricultural sections of the South and West.

Then it goes ahead to pass strong resolutions, and asks Con-

Then it goes ahead to pass strong resolutions, and asks Congress to put on the statute books the laws they desire on this

The American Federation of Labor, the largest labor organiza-tion in this country, has for years at its annual gatherings been passing resolutions and petitioning Congress to pass more strict immigration laws, and it has specifically indorsed the educational test-in substance the test we are now considering.

The Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Knights of Labor, and other organizations have repeatedly passed resolutions specifically indorsing the literacy test and memorialized Congress to make it a law.

And what are the reasons for this widespread interest in favor of stricter immigrations? Why has the American Congress from 1819 to 1907 been adding one restriction after another to the continued stream of immigrants flocking to our shores?

The law of 1819 was but a little makeshift, regulating steerage passengers at sea.

The law of February 20, 1907, the latest on the statute books and the one we now promise to amend by adding a literacy test, provides in section 2:

provides in section 2:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeclies, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assissination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons hereinafter called contract laborers who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within one year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as a having been induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; all children under 16 years of age unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe; Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this section relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: And provided further, That the States to foreign contiguous territory: And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denominations, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

This section debars many undesirables, but it needs further amendment.

Even under its provisions there reaches the shores of our country every year in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 alien immigrants, from 30 to 40 per cent of whom can neither read nor

The question is not the excluding of immigration entirely; the question is not as to the excluding of desirable immigrants but the question is, Shall this country be flooded each year with some 250,000 ignorant immigrants from the old country? The character of citizenship of any country in the world determines the character of its civilization, the character of its institutions, and the character of its government. Will the dumping of 250, 000 foreign immigrants into the United States yearly who can not even read and write add to the standard of American citizenship? If they will do it, then this bill and all that pertains to it is wrong in principle. If, upon the other hand, the bring-ing into this country and dumping upon our shores yearly 250,000 people who know nothing of American institutions and who are incapable of learning much about American institutions. tions and American life will injure the character of American labor and American ideals, then this bill ought to be supported by every man who wants to elevate the standard of American citizenship, because the purpose of it is to exclude this character of foreign immigration.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] in his remarks but a few moments ago said that this country owes much of its greatness to those who come to our shores from Europe and other countries. That is unquestionably true; but the gentleman ought to remember that away back yonder in 1869 there was less than 1 per cent of the character of immigrants which this bill proposes to exclude that came to this country. This bill in its operation will exclude the north Italians—those of them who can not read—and the south Italians, and the Poles. And in the year 1869 there was less than 1 per cent of this character of immigants coming to America, while 75 or 80 per cent of the desirable immigrants the English, the Scandinavians, and the others—at that time constituted the large part of the immigration coming into this country. But year by year the north Italians and the south Italians, and the Poles, and the Slavs increased in number, and from year to year the desirable immigrants decreased in number, until in 1911 about 80 per cent—I am not exactly sure as to the accuracy of the percentage—but, in the neighborhood of So per cent of the immigrants coming to this country were immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, composed of the north Italians, south Italians, Poles, and Slavs.

The argument has been made here that the Southern States-Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, and others-ought to be the last States in the world to protest against illiterate immigrants coming into this country, for the reason that a high degree of illiteracy exists in all those States, and that the negroes of these various States, and especially the people living in the mountain sections of them, are known to possess a good deal of illiteracy.

I desire to say that no section of this Union has brainier or better people than live and dwell in the mountains of old Kentucky. There is there this day the purest reservoir on the American Continent of pure old Anglo-Saxon blood. They may fall a little below the people of certain other sections of the Union on technical book information-they have not had the advantages of some other sections-but in education, in the true sense of the word, they are inferior to none.

They are educated in hand and educated in heart, educated in honesty and educated in industry. In homely virtues they have no peers. In strength of manhood and purity of womanhood they have no equals. I will enter no further defense of the people of the mountains of Kentucky. They need none. They are destined to control the affairs of the State politically and financially.

It comes with bad grace from these gentlemen to prate about the illiteracy of the colored people in Kentucky or elsewhere. Ground down with the chains of slavery for 250 years, deniedaye, forbidden-to read a printed page, no wonder there exists some illiteracy among them now.

But few races in the world have made more progress than the colored people since the master's lash was taken from their bare backs and they given an opportunity to make some strides along educational and other lines

But if it be true, as contended here by gentlemen opposing the literacy test for immigrants, that there is a high degree of illiteracy in the South, and that for that reason we ought not to insist on an educational test for immigrants, my answer is that that is all the more reason why we should insist upon it.

If there is much illiteracy in the South, why add more to it by admitting a horde of illiterate foreigners? Should it not be our duty rather to get rid of what we already have by educating our own people? If the education test had been applied to foreign immigrants years ago, no negro slaves would have been brought from Africa. There would have been no negroes in the We would not have had any Civil War, and there would not to-day be 30 or 40 per cent of uneducated negroes in the South, as stated upon this floor. But I am digressing. just laid the foundation for a discussion of this question of immigration, and before the Burnett bill finally passes this House I shall ask the indulgence of the House for a more extended discussion of this question.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill and intend to vote for it. It should be amended in two or three particulars by elimination and insertion. I very much regret that the committee did not see its way clear to include the exclusion of Asiatics and Hindus in the measure. I know that Mr. HAYES, Mr. RAKER, and Mr. CHURCH have introduced bills to exclude Asiatic and Hindu laborers, but I doubt very much that this House will be given an opportunity to vote on any of them at this session, and for that reason I hope this bill will be amended so as to include them in the excluded class.

The question is not so well understood in the East as it is in the West. The Pacific coast is the frontier between occidental and oriental civilization.

The activities of the people of our Western States have so far held in check that tide of immigration from India, China, and Japan that would flood our country if given the opportunity. And right here I wish to express my absolute conviction that Asiatic coolieism is a direct menace not simply to our economical and industrial prosperity and to the well-being and material advancement of our people, but it strikes at the very source of the strength and integrity of American civilization.

The constitution of California declares:

ART. XIX, SECTION 1. The presence of foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States is declared to be dangerous to the well-being of the State, and the legislature shall discourage their immigration by all means within its power. Aslatic coolieism is a form of human slavery, and is forever prohibited in this State, and all contracts for coolie labor shall be void. All companies or corporations, whether formed in this country or any foreign country, for the importation of such labor, shall be subject to such penalties as the legislature may prescribe.

This is part of the organic law of California. It was embodied in her constitution as the result of bitter experience. It was the conclusion, not of an academic discussion, but of the menacing problems of a reality. It was a protest against an insidious attack upon our ideals, of morals, and of living, and of health in the field, the farm, the shop, and the home.

The constitution of California provides further:

ART. XIX. SECTION 1. The legislature shall prescribe all necessary regulations for the protection of the State, and the counties, rand towns thereof, from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of allens who are or may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or individuals afflicted with contaglous or infectious diseases, and from aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well-being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions.

This section reflects the serious endeavor of our people to guard themselves against oriental aggression, however plausibly it may be attempted. This section was made part of the organic law of California that Californians might voice their inflexible insistence upon occidental and not oriental standards of right living and morality. What was true when this section of the constitution was adopted is true now. Our patriotism in this regard begins in defending the sacredness of our homes and ends in upholding the honor of the Nation of which we are a part.

I am emphatically in favor of the exclusion of Asiatics. American labor is dignified, intelligent, and progressive. the last analysis it is the great constructive energy of our Re-Its ideals of private conduct and of public life are those of healthy citizenship. It is an imperative duty of every patriotic American, therefore, to protect as far as he is able American labor from competition with inferior peoples. And it is infinitely more necessary for the Government to enact laws to protect American workingmen from the evil of a personal direct rivalry with the representatives of a civilization which, in everything of importance, is the very antithesis of our own. American prosperity is built upon the well-being of all the tre-mendous elements which contribute to rational progress, and an assault upon one should be the concern of all.

It is a traditional right of a nation to prohibit aliens from acquiring property within its boundaries. The common law has justified this right, and the reasons for its exercise are obvious. The lands of a nation belong to its own native-born citizens and to those to whom is granted the privilege of becoming citizens by naturalization. To all others a nation or a State owes it to itself to deny the rights of ownership. Particularly is this so in connection with an allen race with whom we resist either association or an impossible assimilation.

The Legislature of California at its last session passed a very mild alien land law. The provisions of that law are not nearly so stringent as are the Federal statute and the laws of a number of the States and of most foreign countries. For instance, aliens are not allowed to enter the schools of Japan; they can not own real estate in certain districts or engage in mining. An alien laborer must procure a license, and this is not granted if the job he seeks is wanted by any Japanese laborer. Besides, foreigners residing in Japan are assessed double what the natives are for personal property. If they attend a theater, they must pay double, and in other things it is the same.

Japan recently enacted a law that permits aliens to hold real estate who come from a country that permits Japanese to enjoy a like privilege. Whether or not that law has been promulgated

I do not know. I have been informed that it has not.

The California statute is short, and for the information of the House I will insert it here:

An act relating to the rights, powers, and disabilities of aliens and of certain companies, associations, and corporations with respect to property in this State, providing for escheats in certain cases, prescribing the procedure therein, and repealing all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict herewith.

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

acts inconsistent or in conflict herewith.

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

Section 1. All allens eligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States may acquire, possess, enjoy, transmit, and inherit real property, or any interest therein, in this State in the same manner and to the same extent as citizens of the United States, except as otherwise provided by the laws of this State.

Sec. 2. All allens other than those mentioned in section 1 of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy, and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this State in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this State for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

Sec. 3. Any company, association, or corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or nation, of which a majority of the members are aliens other than those specified in section 1 of this act, or in which a majority of the issued capital stock is owned by such aliens, may acquire, possess, enjoy, and convey real property, or any interest therein, in this State in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the Government of the United States and the nation or country of which such members or stockholders are citizens or subjects, and not otherwise, and may in addition thereto lease lands in this State for agricultural purposes for a term not exceeding three years.

Sec. 4. Whenever it appears to the court in any probate proceeding that by reason of the provisions of this act any heir or devisee can not take real property in this State which but for said provisions said heir or devisee would take as such, the court, instead of ordering a distribution of such real property to such heir or devisee, shall order a sale of said rea enforced in the manner provided by section 474 of the Political Code and title 8, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the entry of final judgment in such proceedings the title to such real property shall pass to the State of California. The provisions of this section and of sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to any real property hereafter acquired in the enforcement or in satisfaction of any lien now existing upon or interest in such property, so long as such real property so acquired shall remain the property, so long as such real property so acquired shall remain the property of the alien company, association, or corporation acquiring the same in such manner.

SEC. 6. Any leasehold or other interest in real property less than the fee hereafter acquired in violation of the provisions of this act by any alien mentioned in section 2 of this act, or by any company, association, or corporation mentioned in section 3 of this act, shall eschent to the State of California. The attorney general shall institute proceedings to have such escheat adjudged and enforced as provided in section 5 of this act. In such proceedings the court shall determine and adjudge the value of such leasehold, or other interest in such real property, and enter judgment for the State for the amount thereof together with costs. Thereupon the court shall order a sale of the real property covered by such leasehold or other interest in the manner provided by section 1271 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Out of the proceeds arising from such sale the amount of the judgment rendered for the State shall be paid into the State treasury and the balance shall be deposited with and distributed by the court in accordance with the interest of the parties therein.

Sec. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed as a limitation upon the power of the State to enact laws with respect to the acquisition, holding, or disposal by allens of real property in this State.

Sec. 8. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the prov

The white and yellow races are unassimilable. The idea of marriage between whites and Asiatics is revolting. It shatters the very keystone of occidental civilization. It is demoralizing in morality and menacing in problems of a mongrel racial degeneracy. It brings into being dangers of manifest evil to American homes and institutions. I conceive that we would be unworthy of our heritage if we gave countenance to the prostitution of what we honor as the most sacred contract under the law.

According to our standard, the Asiatics are not immoral; they are unmoral. The size of Japan is about half that of California and contains a population of about 75,000,000. Women are not highly regarded. Daughters are sold without shame for immoral purposes, and it is estimated that there are 2,000,000 prostitutes in that country. In men loose morals are universal and in women are uncondemned. Such a condition is usual and is regarded as natural and not wrong. And Japan is the most advanced of Asiatic nations. All Asiatics regard themselves as enjoying a civilization superior to ours. do not want to adopt our ethical and moral standards. What they do want is our trade and the opportunity to peacefully occupy our country by immigration. And, by the way, so far as trade is concerned, the United States is Japan's best cus-We buy from her about one-third of the total exports of the Empire, or about $75,000,000 worth a year, and export to her about $40,000,000 a year, thus leaving a balance of trade in her favor of about $35,000,000. Her national debt is about $1,500,000,000, and is an awful burden for her miserably poor and struggling people to bear.

We solved the Chinese question by the enactment of the Geary and subsequent acts. We have no Geary Act to keep out the Japanese and Hindus. On the Pacific we know the results of Asiatic competition. The Japanese are not an inventive people. They originate nothing, but they are great imitators of other people's inventions. The advantage they have over our people is their lower and cheaper standard of living and the fact that their men, women, and children work incessantly from early morning to late at night for small remuneration. They are driving our citizens out of every avenue of industry in which they succeed in securing a footbold.

Everyone will admit that there is not a lazy bone in the body of the average American farmer. The Japanese are driving the American farmer out of business in California.

About 70 per cent, or $7,000,000 worth, of the vegetables raised in the southern part of California are produced by Japanese truck gardeners.

In my own district they farm by ownership or lease of the land a large portion of the rich delta land of the Sacramento and the San Joaquin. About 4,000 acres of that land is owned by one Japanese, and he farms under lease other tracts. By production and manipulation he controls the potato market around San Francisco Bay.

The Japanese secured a foothold in the thriving farming community of Florin, in Sacramento County. They now own practically all the land in that vicinity and all but one business house in the city. The only store run by a white man in that town is owned by the postmaster, and as soon as his successor is appointed he will have to close up shop.

The Hindus, if permitted to continue to come to this country, will soon be a greater menace than even the Japanese. Stockton Record of December 6, 1913, published the following statement, which I will insert here and make a part of my remarks:

[From the Stockton Daily Evening Record, Dec. 6, 1913.] WHAT HINDUS SENT OUT OF STOCKTON.

WHAT HINDUS SENT OUT OF STOCKTON.

International (foreign) money orders to the amount of $26,282.82 were sold by the Stockton post office during the month of October. Of this amount $18,489.27 was sent to British Indian offices.

It was the Hindu.

Three-fourths of all the money sent from Stockton to foreign countries went to India.

Formerly it was thought that the Japanese, among all aliens, absorbed the most money, spent the least, and sent the most home. But during October the Japanese "sent home" only $3,909, or about one-sixth as much as the Hindus; and the Japanese in this part of the State outnumber the Hindus; and the Japanese in this part of the State outnumber the Hindus; and the Greeks forwarded through the office is likewise a surprise.

The October sales of international orders were not exceptionally large. The total is a low average. Twelve such monthly totals mean easily $315,000 and more. And 4f the Hindus do not fail of their prosperity during the closing two months of the year, they will probably have sent $213,000 to their native land. Most of this money will have been earned in the vicinity of Stockton. It is gone—gone far—lost to the community.

A study of the full report of international money-order sales for the month of October as compiled by Myra Elisworth, superintendent of the money-order division of the Stockton office, is worthy of attention. The report shows money-order sales as follows:

The Hindu is a problem, and no doubt about it.

It took our branch of the human race thousands of years to develop to the government-by-the-people stage of civilization. It was a long, hard climb from barbarism to American civilization. It would be but a short step backward from the highest civilization to semibarbarism. The Good Book tells us that "evil communications (or association) corrupt good manners (or morals)."

The individual liberties of the people and the stability of the institutions of a republic depend primarily on the mental, moral, and physical health of the people, and are best secured by its people being homogeneous, speaking the same language, and occupying contiguous territory. The miscegenation of the white with the yellow race always results in the production of a hybrid mongrel, mentally, morally, and physically inferior to both races, inheriting the mental and physical defects and vices of both parents. It does not elevate the yellow race and does deteriorate the white race.

It is the duty of our Government to protect itself and its citizens against foreign invasion and commercial and industrial exploitation, whether they come in the shape of bombarding men-of-war and devastating armies or in the shape of passenger and freight ships carrying cheap labor and cheap goods.

Japan is the only Asiatic nation that has evidenced any desire to adopt the civilization of the Occident, and she only wishes to borrow our science and mechanical inventions. Her leading statesmen do not hesitate to say that Japan has no use for our literature, our religion, our morals, and our ethics of life, on which our civilization is founded.

The Mongolian, Tartar, and Hindu—Asiatics—ought to be excluded from American soil. Even a small number of them sprinkled through our population has a tendency to reduce the American standard of wages and to lower the morals and degrade the habits of those brought in close social contact with them. It is essential that the blood of the American-Europeans of this country, who, together with their ancestors, developed civilization to its present state, should be kept pure and free from the taint of the decadent orientalism of China, Japan, and India. We have no quarrel with those people. We wish them well in their own countries, but we do not want them in ours,

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized.

[Mr. KENT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I expect to support this bill. I recognize very fully that the prosperity of the country and its rapid growth and development in times past have depended very largely upon the number and the character of the immigrants that have come to our shores. From the very beginning of our history to the present time foreign immigrants have been a very valuable element in our population. I believe that we still need the foreigners, and we probably need a good many of them; but we need the very best that we can get, and it is for that reason that I shall support this literacy test.

It is a little bit hard to realize what the figures mean when we are told that a million foreigners have come to our country in one year, or that twelve hundred thousand have come, or the even larger numbers reached in one or two years. It is hard to know what a million means or to translate it into the terms of human life and human experience. For that reason I have examined the conditions in the twenty-fourth district of have examined the conditions in the twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania. It is a smaller unit by a good deal than the whole country, and the figures are much more easily realized. That is the district that I have the honor to represent, and I can speak of it with some degree of familiarity. It is made up of three counties—Beaver, Lawrence, and Washington—and in the year 1910 it had a total population of 292,065 persons. Of these 93,468 were set down in the census as males of voting age. Of those men over 21 years old 54,956 were native whites, 35,998 were foreign-born whites, and 2,459 were negroes. Let me repeat, these figures are not for the total population. They cover only men who are more than 21 years old. In the twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania there are enough men of voting fourth district of Pennsylvania there are enough men of voting age to make 93 regiments of a thousand men each. Thirty-six of those regiments could be composed exclusively of foreign-born whites. Taking up the matter by counties the showing is inter-

In Lawrence County, in 1910, there were 22,636 men over 21. of whom 13,896 were native whites, 8,457 were foreign-born whites, and 248 were negroes. Of the native whites, 140, or 1 per cent, were unable to read and write; of the foreign whites there were 1,861, or 22 per cent; of the negroes there were 41, or 16.5 per cent. The percentage of illiteracy for the combined classes increased from 6.5 in 1900 to 9 in 1910.

In Beaver County, in 1910, there were 25,769 men over 21, of whom 16,760 were native whites, 8,594 were foreign-born whites, and 395 were negroes. The number who could not read and write were: Of the native whites, 197, or 1.2 per cent; of the foreign-born whites, 1,841, or 21 per cent; of the negroes, 44, or 11.1 per cent. The percentage of illiteracy for the combined classes increased from 5.2 per cent in 1900 to 8.1 per cent in 1910.

In Washington County, in 1910, there were 45,063 men of voting age. Of these, 24,298 were native whites, 18,921 foreignborn whites, and 1,816 negroes. The number who could not read and write were: Native whites, 543, or 2.2 per cent; foreign-born whites, 3,904, or 20 per cent; negroes, 263, or 14½ per cent. If, for convenience in counting these men, we should set them off in groups of 1,000 men each, we would have 45 such groups in the one county. If the various classes were equally distributed, there would be in each group of 1,000 539 native-born whites, 420 foreign-born whites, 40 negroes, and 1 Chinese or member of some other race. In the 539 native whites there would be 12 illiterates; in the 420 foreign-born whites there would be 84 illiterates; in the 40 negroes there would be 6 illiterates.

These are interesting figures. They show that we have work to do in the education not only of foreigners, but of our own native-born people as well.

Personally, if there were any way by which we could pick them out, I should be willing to admit every foreigner of good character who had deliberately chosen America from among the countries of the world to be the land of his allegiance—to be his home and the home of his children. Such aliens, especially those of them who could read and write, would in a reasonable time become familiar with our institutions and our reasonable time become familiar with our institutions and our laws and conform themselves to our ways if they should find our ways better than their own.

The problem of immigration is not so much a problem of numbers as of assimilation, and it is an enormous problem. A great literary genius of our day, himself a foreigner and a Hebrew, has called America a melting pot in which men of all nations are to be fused in order that a higher type may be produced. A partial list of the nationalities of foreigners resident in the twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania will indicate how complicated the blend must be if this country is to be such a melt-

Among the people that live in the twenty-fourth district are native Americans, Irish, English, Scotch, Welsh, Germans, Italians, French, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Russians, Hebrews, Greeks, Poles, Magyars, Czechs, Bulgarians, Servians, Montenegrins, Croatians, Slavonians, Dalmatians, Bosnians, Herzegovinians, Ruthenians, Slovaks, Lithuanians, Roumanians, and other nationalities. Like the list of those that heard the preaching of the apostles on the day of Pentecost, it seems to be made up of men from every nation under heaven.

Our problem is to assimilate these people. The public schools accomplish wonderful things for the coming generation, but our problem has to do with the present as well as the future.

I know very well that the ability to read and write is not a test of moral character or even of real mental capacity. I have known men who were not able to read and write who were men of keen perception, good judgment, and trustworthy character, and yet no one would deny that education-even a very little education-would make such men more efficient, more valuable members of society, more useful than they are without educa-

I am fortunate enough to number among my personal acquaintances and friends a good many men of foreign birth, including professional men, merchants, and men in other walks of life. I am convinced that it is for their interest, for the good of the whole country to select from the large number of immigrants who would come to our ports, those who can most easily adapt themselves to the conditions that prevail in this country.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut

[Mr. MAHAN].

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill, and Mr. MAHAN. shall vote against it because of the literacy provision in it.

Mr. Chairman, do you realize what that provision means to the business life of this country? Do you know that you can not get men of education to work as laborers with pick and If you want your railroads built; if you would till shovel? the soil, dig ditches for canals or irrigation; if you would dig the foundation for your public or private buildings, you must depend upon the foreigner to do the rough work.

What are the facts? From 1850 to 1890 came that great tide of immigration from England, Ireland, and Germany. These immigrants worked at all kinds of manual labor. How about immigrants worked at all kinds of manual labor. the children of these foreigners who were denied the privileges of education in their native country? They are found among the skilled workmen in your shops and factories. They are to be found in all the learned professions-doctors of law, medicine, and divinity, professors, and teachers in our schools and col-leges. I might give you a concrete example by calling your at-tention to the fact that 25 per cent of the present membership of this House are the sons of immigrants.

We are told that further immigration will tend to lower the standard of American wages. What are the facts? It is admitted that for several years 1,000,000 immigrants have come to this country every year—to be exact, during the fiscal year that closed June 30 last, 1,079,439 immigrants came to our shores and were admitted-yet, it is a fact that wages for all kinds of manual labor have advanced from 25 to 50 per cent during the last 10 years.

The United States is to-day a great exporting Nation, the balance of trade in our favor for the last fiscal year being $653, 000,000. If we would maintain our supremacy in competition with the countries of Europe, we must for the future, as in the past, have the benefit of the new and best blood from the countries of the Old World.

Mr. Chairman, the attempt to prevent the foreigner coming into our country is no new thing in legislation. From the very dawn of the Republic there has been hostility and opposition to the coming of immigrants to our shores. It has been said upon the floor of this House to-day that the illustrious Jefferson, Randolph of Virginia, and Henry Clay were opposed to the admission of immigrants into the country. It was the English, the German, and the Irish that they would have kept out. You who now favor the passage of this bill are good enough to admit that the prediction of ruin then made has not yet materialized. Jefferson, Randolph, and Clay were wrong then, and you are just as wrong now.

Speaking for my own district and State, I wish to deny that the foreigners coming to our shores are undesirable citizens. More than 27 per cent of the population of our State are for-eigners. We have the Jew, the Italian, the Norwegian, the Swede, the Frenchman, the Englishman, and the Irishman, and all of these are honest, God-fearing citizens, as good as you

Our State, although the third smallest in area, ranks, believe, eighth in the value of her manufactured products. We need the immigrants to cultivate our soil, to work in our shops, our mills, and our manufacturing establishments.

This is practically the same bill that has been vetoed by two Presidents-Cleveland and Taft-and should this bill pass may we not hope for another veto?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

IGOE].

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, almost from the foundation of the Government we have had among us those who were opposed to immigration. The same arguments that we hear to-day against admitting foreigners to our shores have been made repeatedly for a century. Time and again have the exclusionists and restrictionists pointed out the dangers to our institutions by reason of the great influx of aliens. If the advice of these extremists had prevailed, our country would be but scantily populated, our industries would be undeveloped, the Nation would not hold the place it does among the Nations of the world, and many great men and women who have rendered invaluable service to the people would never have graced the pages of our history. We are essentially a Nation of immigrants, and the adoption now of an unsound and unreasonable standard of admission is in total disregard of the traditions of the country and a violation of true democratic principles.

The literacy test proposed by the framers of this bill can not be sustained except as an arbitrary rule, which will exclude many who, under every rational, reasonable, or scientific test, would be admissible. It seems to me that inability to read a few words does not stamp an immigrant as undesirable. That one may not have an education does not mean that he is not honest, industrious, or capable of understanding our institutions. Gentlemen say our immigration to-day is so different from what it was in the good old days when it came from western and northern Europe. Yet if the standard now proposed had been applied in the days of the old immigration, it would have excluded millions who entered our country and have become some of our best citizens. These immigrants who were bitterly attacked and assailed by the restrictionists of their day are now held up as models by the present-day restrictionists.

During the course of the debate a statement was made show ing that in the State of Alabama, the home of the chairman of the committee, the percentage of illiteracy among the nativeborn whites of native parentage was exceedingly high; in fact, almost five times as high as the percentage of illiteracy among the children of foreign or mixed parentage in the same State. The chairman very eloquently pointed out that his people had suffered greatly by reason of the Civil War; that his people for years after those terrible days suffered every trial and We all realize the truth of what he has said, and privation. yet, while he pleads this as an excuse—and it is an excuse—for a certain amount of the illiteracy in his State, he is not willing to take into consideration even worse conditions that have prevailed and still prevail in the countries from which our immigrants come. He is not willing to hold out a helping hand to those unfortunates who come of a people oppressed and downtrodden for centuries. He will not distinguish between a man who has had every opportunity to acquire an education and an unfortunate alien reared in an environment and in a country which not only do not afford educational facilities, but where oftentimes education is discouraged.

The statistics and reports furnish us with convincing proof that our foreign-born inhabitants, given the opportunity to secure an education, not only take advantage of it themselves but almost invariably see that their children receive an education. The last census report shows that, notwithstanding the number of illiterates that are supposed to be coming into this country, there were in the United States in 1910 a total of 788,631 foreign-born illiterates over the age of 21 years. The statistics further show that in the population 10 years of age and over the percentage of illiteracy in the United States among native whites of native parentage was 3.7 per cent, while among whites of foreign or mixed parentage it was 1.1 per cent.

Instead of our aliens being unappreciative of our institutions and not in sympathy with them, these figures indicate an eager and patriotic desire to take advantage of every means afforded to better their own and their children's condition. It is a sufficient answer to those who say the alien is not in sympathy with our institutions.

Many statements have been made here that would indicate that our recent immigration was wholly undesirable for various We have heard much about the old immigration and reasons. We have heard much about the old immigration and the new immigration, but we have received no definite informa-tion as to just when the old immigration ceased and the new immigration began. Repeated statements have been made on the floor that in my judgment are not warranted by any facts or figures that have been produced. Even the majority report does an injustice to the recent immigrants, in my opinion, when a partial statement from the report of the Immigration Commission in regard to crime is set forth. From this statement it might be assumed that the commission found that the greater portion of our new immigrants, on landing in this country, immediately resorted to homicide, blackmail, and robbery. The quotation is given as one of the reasons for the literacy test, yet when we examine the report of the commission on the same page from which the majority report quotes, we find the following statement:

It is impossible from existing data to determine whether the immigrant population in this country is relatively more or less criminal than the native-born population. Statistics show that the proportion of convictions for crimes, according to the population, is greater among the foreign born than the native born. It must be remembered, however, that the proportion of persons of what may be termed the criminal age is greater among the foreign born than among the natives, and when due allowance is made for this fact it appears that criminality, judged by convictions, is about equally prevalent in each class.

It might not be out of place to examine other portions of that report. Under the heading "Immigration and pauperism," on page 35, the commission says:

page 35, the commission says:

At the present time, however, pauperism among newly admitted immigrants is relatively at a minimum, owing to the fact that the present immigration law provides for the admission only of the able-bodied or dependents whose support by relatives is assured. The number of those admitted who receive assistance from organized charity in cities is relatively small. In the commission's investigation, which covered the activities of the associated charities in 43 cities, including practically all the large immigrant centers except New York, it was found that a small percentage of the cases represented immigrants who had been in the United States 20 years or more. This investigation was conducted during the winter of 1908-9, before industrial activities had been fully resumed following the financial depression of 1907-8, and this inquiry showed that the recent immigrants, even in cities in times of relative industrial inactivity, did not seek charitable assistance in any considerable numbers. Undoubtedly conditions would have been otherwise had it not been for the large outward movement of recent immigrants following the depression; but however that may be, it is certain that those who remained were for the most part self-supporting.

Surely, if the new immigrants are so undesirable, it can not be because they lack industry, thrift, or ability to support and maintain themselves by their own efforts.

In the course of this debate attention has been called to the number of insane of foreign birth in the institutions of the State of New York. The majority report contains a statement made by one of the officials of that State as to the number of this class of insane. I agree, if insane are being admitted, some more certain system of medical examination must be resorted to, but I doubt very much if a literacy test would have excluded a single one of those who afterwards became insane. In these reports we have no statement as to the percentage of those admitted to asylums for the insane who belong to the new immigration. We do find, however, in the report of the Immigration Commission a remarkable statement of the result of investigation as to the health of the recent immigrants as contrasted with the old immigration. On page 35 of the report we find the following:

we find the following:

The commission included within the scope of the investigation the study of cases admitted to Bellevue and allied hospitals in New York City. These hospitals are public charitable institutions, and a sufficient number of persons are treated there to warrant some conclusions relative to the existence of disease among the poorer classes of the foreign born. While it appears that a considerable number of immigrants are treated at these hospitals for various causes within a comparatively short time after their admission to the United States, it does not appear that the number is sufficiently large or the diseases for which they are treated are sufficiently serious to warrant the conclusion that diseased persons are being admitted in any considerable numbers. A study of these cases, however, permits an interesting and significant comparison between immigrants of the old and the new class with regard to alcoholism. Among the foreign born this treatment was confined almost entirely to the races of the old immigration, such as Irish, Scotch, English, and Germans, while relatively very few southern and eastern Europeans were treated for that cause. A striking difference between the old and new immigration in this regard was also apparent to a greater or less degree in many industrial communities included in the commission's general investigation. Some complaint was made that drunkenness interfered with the industrial efficiency of some southern and eastern Europeans, but these cases were comparatively rare.

This statement is in marked contrast to the general assertion that the new immigrants are overflowing our eleemosynary institutions and becoming a great burden to the taxpayers of the various States

We all agree that if necessary more stringent regulations should be adopted which will insure the exclusion of immigrants who are physically, mentally, or morally unfit, those who have criminal records or criminal tendencies, as well as those who would become public charges. Any amendments to our laws tending to make more certain the exclusion of these undesirables should be welcomed, and it is to be regretted that an opportunity to vote for these amendments is not afforded those of us who oppose this bill because of the literacy test. I am opposed to the literacy test for the reasons previously given. There are many provisions in this bill I would like to vote for, but my opposition to the literacy test is so strong that I shall have to vote against the bill.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey

[Mr. HAMILL addressed the committee. See Appendix.] Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been amused at some of the arguments made by gentlemen who think that they are representing a large per cent of our people in opposing this bill. My friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] has shown us a literal fulfillment of the Scriptures, that "A little child shall lead them." He has told us of the children of his district waving the American flag and singing, "My country, I commend their example to the gentleman from New York, and I commend their song to him. [Applause.] I heard the gentleman for 35 minutes to-day speaking against the best interests of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, has worked faithfully and persistently for the passage of a measure that will protect the American people from the evils of indiscriminate immigration. [Applause.] He has prepared and had reported to this House by his committee a bill that will put a stop ported to this House by his committee a bill that will put a stop to the practice of allowing undesirable and unfit foreigners to come in droves into this country. [Applause.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that for his able and patriotic service in this regard he is entitled to the lasting gratitude of the American people. [Applause.] The people whose ancestors came here long ago and those who have come in recent years, who have at heart the best interest of our country, should rejoice that their chosen home has determined to safeguard its civilization and exercise some care and consideration in keeping out people who will not be helpful, but distinctly hurtful, to the highest and best interest of our country. [Applause.] If there are those already here who have no regard for the future well-being of America—who want to throw open our doors to the criminal hordes of other countries-the sooner we let them and the world know that they do not constitute the dominant force in America and do not speak for the great body of American citizens who would protect the life of this Nation from the dangers that threaten it, the better it will be for our country. [Applause.] In the name of all that is dear to the American people I protest against the foolhardy and suicidal course that some would have us pursue-that of throwing our doors open and permitting all classes and conditions to come into our country. The foreign citizen who has cast his lot in our midst for the purpose of bettering his condition and supporting our institutions and contributing to the strength and glory of this Government ought not to allow himself to be used by those who advocate unrestricted, free-for-all immigration, for in doing so he is striking at his own, his children's, and his country's best interest. [Applause.]

Let us say to the steamship companies and their hired agents, who trump up the scum of the earth to dump upon our shores in order to furnish traffic to the steamship companies, that their unholy and dangerous work shall stop; that they shall not destroy our civilization and ruin this Government. [Aplause.]

The Farmers' Union of the United States and the Farmers' National Congress and the Federation of Labor-in fact, every patriotic order in the country-have indorsed this bill.

Thousands of foreigners come here, not to pay allegiance to this country, but to accumulate money and return with it to their former home. They carry back about $150,000,000 a year. Thousands of them are here in competition with American laborers who have never been naturalized and who do not support our institutions. Last year, when their native lands were involved in war, thousands went home, carrying what money they could and fought in the wars of foreign countries.

Mr. Chairman, something must be done to restrict immigration. The fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, 1,400,000 had come to America. For the last four months 600,000 have come, and at that rate, unless something is done to prevent it, this year will find 1,800,000 foreigners landing upon our shores. The time has come to call a halt. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken, I have 12 minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The geutleman is correct.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN].

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill we should adhere to first principles. Since the year 1620 foreigners have come to our shores in greater or less numbers. We are all descendants of foreigners, but none the less true Americans. Men from different European countries not only blazed the way as pioneers and established themselves and reared and educated families, but they or their descendants were instrumental in the establishment of a different form of government. It was they who substituted a popular form of government for a proprietary form of government. It was they who furnished large numbers to go to the front in time of need, and thereby exemplified their patriotism and their love for their adopted country. An examination of statistics will show in what large numbers they entered the service in all American wars. They also displayed their patriotism in other effective ways.

We, as representatives of the people of this country, should take cognizance of what is incorporated in the Declaration of Independence, when it is stated among other things in enumerating the grievances against the King of Great Britain:

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners, refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

If the Democratic Party is built upon anything, my friends, it is built upon the Declaration of Independence. It is the corner stone upon which the party is founded. Our party has a great opportunity—an opportunity to defeat this pending legislation. However, partisanship ought not to enter into the bill under consideration, and our friends on the other side of the House should join in its defeat.

We find on investigation that there are 711,980,000 acres of undeveloped public land in the United States. We can accommodate a population of 500,000,000 people. Is it not necessary to have men come to our shores in order that this land may be developed and that they may contribute toward the material upbuilding of the country? Let us go back, if you please, to 1840, and consider what was done by the immigrants who came from 1840, say, to 1870 or 1880. Were not these men the ones who were employed in the construction of our railroads, telegraph lines, telephone lines, and other public utilities? Were they not the men who built and worked in our factories and settled upon the farms in the great West? May we not classify them as constructionists? We need such men; somebody must do the manual labor, which does not appear to be attractive to the American born. Unskilled labor is necessary to skilled Illiteracy is not necessarily a lack of education, in that all education is not derived from books. Are we not placing a penalty on those who had no opportunity for schooling, which was the case with hundreds of thousands who came to America and who contributed so materially to the welfare of the country? Why should we permit a man of criminal instincts who can read and write to enter this country, and place a barrier before the honest and healthy person who does not have those attainments? The economic value of a citizen should be taken into con-The foreigner is a producer and a consumer, and he is also thrifty. In the Nutmeg State, among those who attend the evening schools are to be found a very large percentage of foreign born, both men and women, and that is true of those against whom complaint seems to be especially directed in the discussions on this floor. They are ambitious in every way to better them-selves. They strive by every honorable means to give their children better advantages than those they enjoyed. Some of the foreign born are among our leading business men, and those of the second generation hold a prominent place in many walks of life.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly opposed to that provision of the pending immigration bill which would subject every alien seeking admission to this country to an educational test. An immigrant should not be denied admission to our shores if he is morally, physically, and mentally sound. The ability of a man to read is not a fair measure of his moral worth nor of his economic value nor of his mental capacity; in other words, it is not a fitting test of a man's honesty nor of his capacity to work with his hands nor of his ability to learn. Experience has proven that moral soundness-simple honestyis independent of intellectual culture; many men are morally sound notwithstanding their ignorance, and many others are morally unsound in spite of their education.

Ability to read is not a fair measure of a man's economic value, because experience proves that a man's capacity to earn living is not necessarily dependent on intellectual culture. Many immigrants coming to our shores come from countries where, owing to proscribed laws, the opportunity to acquire an education has been unjustly denied them. This is particularly true of Russia and Roumania. I believe it is more important that the applicant for admission to our shores should be made to show by the calloused palms of his hands that he is accustomed to work than to show by glibness of tongue in meeting a In the actual development of our country it literacy test. would have been impossible for us to have accomplished what we have in the construction of railroads, in the development of our farms, and in the establishment of our industries, had we not had the brawny, muscular, and healthy immigrants who have to come to us from different parts of the world. At the present time there is a scarcity of labor in this country to develop our natural resources, and the natives are unwilling to do the work which the alien comes over to do.

Our country is in great part a Nation of immigrants, sons and grandsons of immigrants. It must be borne in mind that our only true native American is the Indian. The illiteracy test, had such a law been in existence a generation ago, would have robbed this country of some of its strongest and greatest men. Some of our ablest lawyers and the best and most progressive men of to-day are the progeny of parents who when they came to this country could neither read nor write. Are those who have not had the advantage of an education in the countries from whence they came to be denied the opportunities held out in this country? Many immigrants are unfortunately illiterate, without any fault of their own, and without lacking intelligence and character which will make them useful and peaceable citizens of this Republic. Most of these who come here are industrious and thrifty and a large proportion are desirous of learning and of having their children educated.

When a man came to American shores in the steerage of a vessel 150 years ago he was "a settler" or "a colonist." but to-day he is called "an immigrant." No one ever proposed that "a settler" or "a colonist" wishing to land on American soil should be denied the right of admission to this country because he could not read or write.

The healthy and brawny immigrant is America's man of all work, and his destiny is working itself out with the destiny of the country. Eighty-five per cent of all labor in the slaughtering and packing industries is done by alien laborers. They mine seven-tenths of our bituminous coal. They do 78 per cent of the work in the woolen mills, nine-tenths of all the labor in the cotton mills, and make nineteen-twentieths of all the clothing. Immigrants manufacture more than half the shoes in the country, They turn out four-fifths of our furniture, half the tobacco and cigars, and nearly all our sugar. In the iron and steel industries immigrants share the greatest risks.

The proposition to exclude foreigners is not new. During the administration of John Adams, when this Republic of ours had but completed the first decade of its existence, the same senti-ments as I have heard uttered on this floor to-day were uttered against the foreign born. The period of naturalization was extended from 5 to 14 years in the year 1798 in order to discourage immigration, and during the same session of Congress the ob-noxious allen and sedition laws were passed, which cenferred upon the then President of the United States the power to exclude at his will any foreigner found upon American soil. It is to the honor of our institutions and to the glory of this Republic that the shame and infamy of that legislation was wiped out when the Democrats of this country elected Thomas Jefferson to the Presidency. In his proclamation concerning foreigners, relative to immigration Jefferson said:

It has been the wise policy of these States to extend the protection of their laws to all those who should settle among them, of whatsoever nation or religion they might be, and to admit them to participation of the benefits of civil and religious freedom; and the benevolence of this practice, as well as its salutary effects, renders it worthy of being continued in future times.

In the Declaration of Independence, as drawn by Jefferson, concerning immigration he said:

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States, for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners, refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

From time to time in every succeeding generation there have been those who were opposed to the admission of the foreign born to this country. The same arguments were used then as are used now. This continent is not crowded, and the admission of each healthy, able-bodied immigrant adds that much more enrichment to the country. We all agree that the criminal, the insane and mentally defective, the pauper, the morally unfit, and those who are incapable of earning a livelihood should be debarred; but homeseekers, otherwise admissible, should not be excluded, even though illiterate, for such are needed to develop the abandoned farms, to open our mines, and to build our roads, aqueducts, tunnels, and canals. A strong and rigid educational test, however, should be applied when application is made for citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman has used three minutes.

Mr. SABATH. That leaves me four minutes. Will the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from Pennsylvania use some time?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remain-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 19 minutes remaining. Mr. MOORE. I desire to be notified, Mr. Chairman, when I have used 15 minutes.

In an introductory way I want to compliment the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. BURNETT of Alabama] upon the parliamentary excellence of his management. I may not agree with him about the literacy test, which is the chief feature of this bill, but I do agree in this, that as a skillful manipulator in the committee and on the floor of this House he has no superior in the Halls of Congress. He gave two days in which to bring witnesses from all over the country to hearings in the committee, and on the second day he held us solidly and continuously until 2 o'clock in the morning. And now his influence in this House is so strong that he is able by a rule, which is a cloture measure, to put this bill through with only seven hours of general debate, notwithstanding it affects the misery and happiness, the hopes and the aspirations of at least a quarter of a million souls, and all who are interested in them. I do not blame him, because he believes in what he has undertaken to do. Strong pressure has been brought to bear upon him. I will not speak of lobbys, because I do not know. Men have the right to represent organizations and institutions and to speak to Members of Congress about legislation in which they are interested, but in my judgment the gentleman from Alabama has had such pressure upon him that he is induced to accelerate this measure, and, indeed, it may be found politically expedient to push it through.

FOR AND AGAINST THE BILL.

Two elements have sought the immediate passage of this bill: The representatives of certain patriotic orders and the representatives of certain labor organizations. Opposed to the bill were those who believed that "American institutions" included the right of a haven to those who sought to establish themselves in the "land of the free and the home of the brave."

They pointed to the early settlers generally, who had come to the new country and helped to make it what it is. The German-American National Alliance, the Jewish societies, representatives of the Italians, the Poles, and other nationalities identified with the upbuilding of America, also protested against the bill.

The main point about which all parties contended was the socalled literacy test-that provision of the bill which sets up the ability to read as a qualification for admission to the United States. This test, which is rather against the learning than the manhood or character of the immigrant, is conceded to be sufficient to keep out of the country at least 250,000 men and women every year. From the standpoint of those who are advocating the bill this is desirable; but those who oppose the bill believe such arbitrary and wholesale exclusion would be unjust, unnecessary, and inhumane. Personally I have no objection to the other main features of this bill because in all essentials it is merely a reenactment of existing law, but I do oppose the literacy test, a new provision which proposes that the men of labor and of brawn who seek a home in this country, like all of our forefathers sought a home here, shall be turned back to the conditions of misery and deplorable hopelessness from which they sought to raise themselves, simply because they have not acquired the art of reading. There is a wholesome belief that we need honest labor in this country; and that while we do not need immigration that is criminal, or vicious, or disturbing, there is a place for honest labor, even though it be uneducated. We raised no such club as an educational test over the heads of our Pilgrim forefathers, or the Cavaliers, or the German, or Irish, or Swedish settlers who aided in the upbuilding of our country, and now that they have come in, and we are in, it seems a travesty upon our boasted institutions of liberty that we should say to others, who, in good faith seek a haven here, "You can not come in."

EXCLUDING THE UNDESTRABLES.

Some of the gentlemen favoring this measure have declared that this is a white man's country and that only white men should be admitted. That statement so obviously presumes a prejudice against the Japanese, the Chinese, and the negro that it may not be seriously answered at this time. If such a prejudice prevails, it ought not to be used as a bar against the Italian, the Russian, or the Roumanian Jew, or any of the other southern Europeans who are believed to be marked for exclusion in this bill.

Other gentlemen contend for the preservation of the Anglo-Saxon race. They throw compliments at our German and Irish ancestors, but think the time has come to put up the bars against those whose present purpose in coming to the United States is to obtain homes and grow up with the country. The Anglo-Saxon argument is an exclusion argument pure and simple. It was answered by President Cleveland in his immigration veto message of 1897 and by President Taft in his veto message of 1913. It has also been answered by utterances favorable to honest immigration by the present President of the United States.

I can not cover the points raised in this debate in 15 minutes, but I wish to refer briefly to the urgency of this measure as represented by some of the patriotic orders. They want the bill passed to preserve American institutions, to uphold the public-school system, and to encourage a respect for the Stars and Stripes. They do not want the United States made a dumping ground for anarchists, or criminals, or other undesirables. In these things they are to be commended, but, except for the literacy test, which is leveled against labor rather than against crime, so far as it may be, Congress has provided for all these things by existing law.

The latest bulletin of the Bureau of Immigration shows that we do turn back the undesirables, and that for the year ending June 30, 1913, we turned back nearly 20,000 of them—to be exact, 19,938. They included idiots, epileptics, beggars, paupers, contract laborers, criminals, anarchists, prostitutes, and persons afflicted with tuberculosis, or loathsome or contagious diseases, and persons likely to become a public charge. Since the existing law covers these and other undesirables, it is a question if what the patriotic orders want (except the inclusion in this bill of the literacy test) is not efficiency in administration rather than additional legislation.

LABOR UNIONS IN OPPOSITION.

Now, another element which has to a certain extent stood behind the chairman of this committee and the proponents of this bill, is certain leaders of labor organizations, notably the American Federation of Labor. We had before the committee representatives of the railway orders. Mr. Wills, of the Locomotive Engineers, was one of the witnesses. He advocated the passage of this bill. He admitted that illiterates did not come into any very direct competition with the body that he represented, but he cited a controversy over the rate of wages on one of the western railroads where, in the event of a strike, the vast army of unemployed men, which he said existed, would be regarded as a menace. Mr. Clark, vice president of the Order of Railway Conductors, took substantially the same ground. He stated that immigrants did not take the place of conductors, but insisted that, in the event of strikes, their influence would be felt. He explained that it takes about three years for a man to pass through the grades to become a conductor, and that then he has to be a pugilist, a diplomat, and a Chesterfield combined. These surely are three qualities that are not generally possessed by the illiterate laborer, against whom the present bill is directed. I want to say in this connection that these gentlemen were asked whether the educated American youth was prepared to go into the mines, do the drudgery in the trenches, in the sewers, or upon the farms; and, except as to the farm, they had few, if any, cases in point. The American youth, as one of them said, was cut out for higher things, and the question as to who was to do the dirty work, who was to do the drudgery, dig the sewers and trenches, and go down in the mines, when we stop the crude foreign labor, was left an open one, except as it might be solved by increased wages and effective organization.

THE IMMIGRANT WHO GOES BACK.

The chief spokesman for labor before the committee-and I have every respect for him as a man and an advocate of organized labor-was the associate of Mr. Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, namely, its secretary, Mr. Frank Morrison. When discussing this question of illiterate labor, Mr. Morrison, in answer to my colleague, Mr. Manahan, summed up as

What I complain about, is that steady stream of people coming in—the unskilled foreigners who come here and work for a few years and go back, so that they can not be organized, and who have made no effort to secure better conditions. They do not assimilate with our people, they do not join with the union, and it is very difficult to retain the wage scale.

Mr. Morrison found fault with the uneducated immigrant because he did not readily yield to organization, but other witnesses at previous hearings had explained that this labor of which he complained, this drudge labor which the American youth considers beneath him, accommodated itself to the economic conditions in this country, came and went as it was wanted, working here at the American wage, and returning, to the relief of American labor, when there was no longer necessity for foreign labor. I intend to quote Mr. Morrison more fully if I have the time, but to clear up some misconceptions of fact about the immigration that is supposed to everrun this country I call attention briefly to the manner in which crude foreign labor does adjust itself to American economic conditions. In 1911, according to the latest report of the Bureau of Labor, it appears that the immigrants admitted were 1,030,300.

The number that left the country-and these are never taken into account by the opponents of immigration—was 518,215, or nearly half as many left the country as came into it. In the year 1912, 1,017,155 came in and 615,292 went out.

Now, in the course of the few minutes reserved to me I shall undertake to make it plain that a man who comes into the United States to do the work of the plodder, to till the soil and do the ugly work which the educated youth of America disdains to do, does not discredit American labor, nor displace it, if the work remains for him to do and he does it at an American wage. There is a vast difference between protecting ourselves against human life and blood of foreign birth that works at the American wage standard after it is admitted to this country, and protecting ourselves against the manufactures of foreigners working for a foreign wage. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I shall use the remaining four minutes now, and, because I may overlook it later, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN WAGES AND AMERICAN WAGES DIFFER.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in the course of his statement Mr. Morrison was asked in particular about the garment workers and the miners. I am going to put this in the Record, because it is the only way, under this rule, that we can get this evidence before the House and before the country. In regard to the garment workers he admitted that most of them were foreign. He stated that there were substantially 200,000 of them; that in this country they work for the American wage, and that when abroad they worked for a lower foreign wage, and that clothing was cheaper in this country by reason of their being here.

With regard to the miner he admitted substantially the same thing; that whereas a miner got one-half or one-third in Wales or Belgium or England what he got in the United States, yet when he came over here he went to work at the American wage, and that the minimum union wage of the miner in Pennsylvania, for instance, was $2.56 a day.

I can not go into that any further now, but I want to say that the foreigner who comes into this country is a consumer as well as a producer; that he makes a market for the farmer the moment he comes here, and he brings within his own skin a customer for about 93 per cent of products of the United We can not discredit the foreigner on the ground that he is neither a producer nor a consumer. He is both the moment he enters our ports.

I shall put a little more of this in the RECORD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining. Mr. MOORE. Then, Mr. Chairman, in those two minutes I shall take up another side of this question very briefly.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman consume all of his time?

A HUMAN SIDE AND A SAVINGS SIDE.

Mr. MOORE. I had two minutes left when the Chairman's gavel fell.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a human side to this question. I have here a letter signed by Mr. Herbert Parsons, a former Member of this House, appealing to this House in behalf of the downtrodden Jews in Russia and Roumania against whom this bill is leveled; and among the friends of these unfortu-nates, appealing to us for the freedom of the Jew in Russia, are some very distinguished gentlemen who favor American exclusion, including the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT]. who spoke a little while ago; and in this particular instance no less a humanitarian than Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is another important phase of the question. I have before me a report of the Philadelphia Savings Fund, one of the greatest savings banks in the United States. Its deposits, amounting to more than $120,000,000, are invested in the securities of railroads and industries throughout the whole country, aiding in the employment of labor everywhere. During the year 1912 they took on depositors to the number of 43,337, of whom one-half were foreigners; and those foreigners, along with the native Americans, laid by, in deposits, approximately $25,000,000, thus indicating that they were not carrying their money out of this country, but were investing it here to build up our railroads and our factories and our other great industries and to give us the benefit of that circulation which represents the result of their honest toil. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

THE PRESIDENT CLEVELAND VETO.

Mr. MOORE. Then, Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the privilege of extending my remarks, I shall refer to the influence the laborer who comes to the United States has upon the wage condition here. In a speech delivered to the House December 14, 1912, my Democratic colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], engaged in a controversy with some of his colleagues on this subject. I quote from the Record as follows:

Mr. Sabath. I have before me a copy of a message that was sent to the House of Representatives on March 2, 1897, by that great leader of Democracy, the first Democratic President since the war, Grover Cleveland, in vetoing a similar bill. Time does not permit me to read his message, but he, together with thousands upon thousands of Intelligent Americans, after a careful study of this momentous question, has gone on record against this unfair legislation.

Mr. Burnett. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. Sabath. Yes.

Mr. Burnett. Is it not true that at the time Mr. Cleveland vetoed that bill the entire immigration to this country was not as much as the Italian and Greek immigration is now?

Mr. Sabath. In proportion to the population of our country, the immigration to-day is not any greater than it was then.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sabath. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Was it not also a fact that at that time the price of labor in this country was so low that immigration did not come and there was not the demand for labor that there is now, and that was one of the reasons why they did not come?

Mr. Sabath. I think that is true; but right here I desire to say that from all the information I can secure and from all the statistics I have studied, I can not find wherein immigration has even reduced the price of labor, but, on the contrary, you may go over the immigration figures from year to year and you will find that whenever the immigration was large wages were higher.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. Sabath. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. Sabath. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Powers. Is not it true that the foreign wages of immigrants from foreign countries have mostly driven out the American wage earners in all of western Pennsylvania, and is it not a fact that three-fourths of the wage earners in the basic industries are foreigners? And is not it further true that they get 42 cents a day less than the American wage earners in the Middle States employed in the same occupations?

Mr. Sabath. I can not agree with the gentleman. I desire to say that they have supplanted them as common laborers, but they have provided for the American laboring men higher and better amployment, and the statistics again will show that, due to immigration, the American laboring man has been advanced to a higher position.

Mr. Moore. And is it not also true that the average American boy does not want to work as a common laborer?

Mr. SARATH. Of course, that is true, and they are acting as foremen, bookkeepers, timekeepers, superintendents, and so forth.

LABOR, ORGANIZED AND UNORGANIZED.

I now invite attention to an extract from the testimony of Mr. Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, who was before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at the famous midnight session of December 11-12. This statement, as will be seen, has to do largely with the wage question as it relates to native and foreign-born labor.

question as it relates to native and foreign-born labor.

Mr. Moore. As a prelude to the questions I wish to put to you, I want to make it understood that I favor the organization of labor, and that I also favor the maintenance of the American wage standard. As one who believes in protection, of course I could not take any other stand. I also agree with you in undertaking to take care of people here in this country. I will base my questions very largely upon that line of thought.

* * *

The members of the American Federation of Labor, under their constitution and by-laws, are law-abiding, and believe in the operation and maintenance of the laws of the land, and their amendment or correction by due and legal process. I think that is a fair statement, is it not? That is the attitude of the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. Morrison. That is their attitude.

Mr. Moore. And you believe in the rule of the majority?

Mr. Morrison. Yes, sir. We practice it. We not only believe in it, but we practice it.

Mr. Moore. Without intending to take any advantage of you at all, and believing in labor organizations fairly and justly and lawfully conducted, I want to ask how many wage carners there are in the United States, organized or unorganized, if you can tell me?

Mr. Morrison. There are supposed to be about 29,000,000 people in gainful occupations. That includes everybody that works for wages.

Mr. Morrison. Probably that would be all right.

Mr. Morrison. There are supposed to be about 29,000,000?

Mr. Morrison. The freeration has paid members, as I said, 2,071,000. There are about 300,000 people that are on the books that we do not get paid for; that is, there are strikes in the organizations and the internationals do not pay for the members on strike.

Mr. Morrison. The free are strikes in the organizations and the internationals do not pay for the members on strike.

Mr. Morrison. Yes. Then there are 400,000 or 500,000, perhaps, organized outside of the federation, in the brotherhoods and the bricklayers, making it

Mr. Morrison. Yes. Then there are 400,000 or 500,000, perhaps, organized outside of the federation, in the brotherhoods and the bricklayers, making it 2,800,000 at the present time.

Mr. Moorr. The Knights of Labor do not figure very much?

Mr. Morrison. No; there is nothing left except about one member,

Mr. Morrison. No; there is nothing left except about one member, I guess.
Mr. Moore. And a newspaper?
Mr. Moore. That is not regular. It comes out spasmodically.
Mr. Moore. Three million would be a fair statement of the membership, men and women, of the American Federation of Labor and of organized bodies to-day, would it not?
Mr. Morrison. I think so; yes, sir.
Mr. Moore. So that the majority of wage earners is against the organized body; that is to say, there are more unorganized than there are organized?
Mr. Morrison. More in gainful pursuits.
Mr. Moore. And the mission of the federation would be, and is, to organize that great mass of unorganized wage earners in the United States?

States?

Mr. Morrison. Yes, sir.
Mr. Morrison. Yes, sir.
Mr. Morrison. In your statement, if I did not misunderstand you, you said that amongst the members of the American Federation are 400,000 mine workers, most of whom are foreigners.
Mr. Morrison. That is, in the miners?
Mr. Morrison. I think so; the majority, at any rate.
Mr. Morrison. I think so; the majority, at any rate.
Mr. Morrison. It has wer to questions, you have since stated that miners in the Westmoreland district and at McKees Rocks—
Mr. Morrison. That is, the steel men, who make the steel cars.

AMERICAN WAGES OF FOREIGN MINERS.

AMERICAN WAGES OF FOREIGN MINERS.

Mr. Moore. I will leave them out. I want to confine it to miners solely. You have stated that the conditions were deplorable where they were not organized, and that in Westmoreland the unorganized mine workers work for as low as $1.85 a day?

Mr. Morrison. Yes; that was the statement that was read to me by the chairman, a statement made by Mr. Gompers, and my recollection is that that is as accurate as we could get.

Mr. Moore. That would be the minimum wage, of which you would complain as being unfair?

Mr. Moore. That would be the minimum wage usually. That is the minimum wage paid, but in unorganized mines they hire the people and pay them whatever they want to.

Mr. Moore. Let us take $1.85 as the unorganized wage, to which the federation takes exception, and then let me ask what is the wage of the miner who is organized in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Moore. Then, so far as $2.56 per day is concerned for the organized miner at eight hours a day, the federation has done its best in fixing the wage?

Mr. Morrison. Yes; to the United Mine Workers, through organization.

Mr. Moore. Through the affiliated organization?

Mr. Moore. Through the affiliated organization?
Mr. Morrison. And they are working, of course, against great odds to secure better conditions.
Mr. Moore. If that is the case, then $2.56 is the wage paid to the foreign immigrant worker in the mines in the United States who has joined the organization?
Mr. Morrison. Yes.

FOGEIGN WAGES OF FOREIGN MINERS.

FOGEIGN WAGES OF FOREIGN MINERS.

Mr. Moore. May I ask what wage that same foreign mine worker would have obtained in Belgium or in Wales?

Mr. Morrison. I have not those figures.

Mr. Moore. Would it have been one-half of $2.56 a day?

Mr. Morrison. I might be able to get that information and give it

Mr. Morrison. I might be able to get that information and give it to you later.

Mr. Moore. Would it have been one-third, do you think, in Belgium? Mr. Moore. That is a low-wage country.

Mr. Holder. The Welsh minimum is 30 shillings a week.

Mr. Moore. Without regard to hours?

Mr. Moore. Then it is a fact that the miner who works abroad does receive less than the miner who works in Pennsylvania, who receives $2.56 a day. Is that the fact?

Mr. Morrison. Yes. that is a self-evident thing.

Mr. Moore. Is it not a fact that the mine workers are organized in Wales and in Belgium?

Mr. Moore. Then, is it due to organization there that the wages are as low as they are, and is it due to organization here that the wages are as high as they are?

Mr. Moore. Then, is it due to organization in Wales that they are as high as they are?

Mr. Morrison. It is due to organization in Wales that they are as high as they are.

Mr. Key. May I ask a question there? I would like to ask Mr. Morrison right along that line of thought if he takes into consideration the purchasing power over there?

Mr. Moore. I am perfectly willing he should answer that, but I was going to ask that very question in a moment.

Mr. Key. Pardon the interruption, then. I think it is fair that that should be brought out.

Mr. Moore. I have no objection to your answering that question now, Mr. Morrison, if you wish. Mr. Key would like to know whether the living conditions there are different from what they are here.

Mr. Morrison, if you wish. Mr. Key would like to know whether the living conditions there are different from what they are here.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN LIVING CONDITIONS.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN LIVING CONDITIONS.

Mr. Morrison. We hold that the living conditions of our organized workers here in many industries are better than they are in Europe.

Mr. Moore. The living conditions?

Mr. Key. I had reference to purchasing power.

Mr. Morrison. What we are trying to do is to prevent people coming over here to destroy the conditions we have established.

Mr. Moore. I understand your position, but I am trying to get at the cause, and I do not think there is any very great difference between us as to the cause except that it be political. Mr. Gompers, in those celebrated letters of his after his tour of Europe, said in one of them that "in no city in Europe did I find rents any cheaper, wages considered, than they run in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Louisville, or in the New England towns."

Mr. Moore. Sut he spoke of wages as being vastly lower than they were in the United States.

Mr. Moore. Sut he spoke of wages being considered.

Mr. Moore. Yes; he said rental conditions were as high there as they are here.

Mr. Moore. Yes; he said rental conditions were as high there as they are here.

Mr. Moore. I grant that the labor union does add in reduction of Mr. Moraison. That would be in proportion, as I understand it, to the wages received.

Mr. Moore. I grant that the labor union does aid in reduction of hours of labor, does aid in improvement of labor conditions, does aid in Improvement of factory conditions, and all those local conditions where the State has jurisdiction over the factory or over the worker or over the mine; but I have not yet got it clear in my mind how you can claim for the labor union the increase in the daily wage of the miner when he is organized abroad as well as and perhaps better than he is here, and receives there one-half or one-third what he receives in the United States.

Mr. Morrison. Let me give you a little object lesson in organization. There was a strike in one of the steel mills at Cambridge, Ohio—

Mr. Moore. I wish you would confine it to miners for the present.

Mr. Moore. I am coming to steel in a moment, and I have not much time.

WAGES OF FOREIGN-BORN GARMENT WORKERS.

Mr. Morrison. I want to show the organization. The steel men were unorganized. They were getting $1.56 a day, 10 hours—or $1.60 a day, 16 cents an hour. The miners of the same nationality and same intelligence were organized. The miners were working 8 hours and getting $2.56 for 8 hours; one organized, the other unorganized. If they had not been organized, they would have been getting the same as the steel workers and working probably the same hours.

Mr. Moorr, Was there any difference in the hazard of the work which those two relative establishments performed?

Mr. Morrison. The way they ran the steel mills I think the hazard would be in favor of the mines, almost. It would be safer in the mines than in the steel mills.

Mr. Moorr. * * Let us pass from miners now and take up garment workers. You say there are 200,000 garment workers organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor?

Mr. Moorrison. Seventy-four thousand and one hundred and thirteen thousand.

Mr. Moorrison. One hundred and eighty-seven thousand, to be accurate, paying members, and there is no question but there are on the books nearly 250,000 members.

Mr. Moorrison. Ves.

Mr. Moorrison. Yes.

Mr. Moorrison. Yes.

Mr. Moorrison. Ves.

Mr. Moorrison. Ves.

Mr. Moorrison. Oh, yes.

Mr. Moorrison. Was better than it was 10 years ago?

Mr. Moorrison. Was better than it was 10 years ago?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the garment workers several years ago in the great strike in New York?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the garment workers several years ago in the great strike in New York?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the garment workers several years ago in the great strike in New York?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the garment workers several years ago in the great strike in New York?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the garment workers several years ago in the great strike in New York?

Mr. Moorrison. He lead the did not favor the passage of a bill containing the liliteracy test?

Mr. Moorrison. I did not know that.

Mr. Sabath. He appeared in opposition to the illit Sustain me.

Mr. Sabath. He appeared in opposition to the illiteracy test, and very strongly urged opposition on our part.

WAGES HIGHER AND CLOTHING CHEAPER.

Mr. Moore, And frankly he differed from Mr. Gompers and Mr. Morrison on that question,

I want this mentioned at this time to show there is a difference in labor circles on this proposition.

Mr. Morrison. He also has an efficiency system. He was working on that, was he not?

Mr. Moore. That is outside of the inquiry, however. He was the leader of the garment workers at New York, and he did appear before this committee and did take issue with Mr. Gompers and yourself on the question of the passage of this bill, and opposed it because of the illiteracy test.

May I ask, with regard to the garment workers, who are largely foreign, as you have indicated, whether clothing is not cheaper to-day, manufactured as it is, than it was in the days of your boyhood, when it was made very largely by hand or by custom tailor, or by dear old mother, who operated the spinning wheel?

Mr. Morrison. Yes; you can buy a suit cheaper now than you could years ago.

Mr. Morrison. Yes; you can buy a suit cheaper now than you could years ago.

Mr. Moore. You can buy clothing cheaper in the United States now than you could then?

Mr. Morrison. Yes, sir.

Mr. Moore. And there is more clothing than there was then?

Mr. Moore. The old spinning wheel has been dispensed with and the old custom shop has been dispensed with, whether for good or for ill?

Mr. Morrison. Yes.

Mr. Moore. It is also true, is it not, that while clothing has become cheaper the wages of the garment workers have steadily increased in the United States?

Mr. Morrison. They have increased since they stopped their yearly strike under the leadership of Mr. Barondess and formed a leadership under the Federation. They entered into a cooperative agreement or protocol, and they have stopped this striking, and they adjust their grievances, and they meet in conference and get better conditions, and they have improved and organized under these methods without striking, and they have these conditions solely as a result of their organization. If it were not for the organization and this greement, they would be just in the condition key were for years and years—strike every year, get their conditions, go back to the former conditions in a year, and then strike again. It is just the ordinary trade-union movement that has been able to get this agreement and to sustain it.

THE DIFFERENCE IN WORKING HERE.

Mr. Moore. Suppose we concede all you say on that subject without going into the political side of it at all, which I want to avoid. Let me ask what would have been the condition in the United States with regard to the cheaper clothing and the higher wages if these foreign garment workers had remained on the other side, making garments over there for the American trade? They would have been receiving the foreign wage, would they not?

Mr. Morrison. They would have been receiving the foreign wage; yes.

yes.

Mr. Moore. And we would have been purchasing their clothing as made in foreign countries, would we not?

Mr. Morrison. If we could not manufacture it here.

Mr. Moore. Do the Americans engage in the clothing trade to any extent—sewing women, cutters, etc.?

Mr. Morrison. They did years ago until the immigrant came in in this particular trade and took it up and gradually drove everybody else out this particular trade and took it up and gradually drove everybody else out.

Mr. Moore. If they drove anybody out—
Mr. Morrison. What I mean is that by coming in and doing the work the wages were low and the conditions poor, and the Americans looked out and endeavored to secure work in other lines.

Mr. Moore. We will accept that statement and then I will ask you this: Do you know of any educated young Americans to-day who will go into the steelworks, with the harrowing conditions which you have described there, or into the mines of Westmoreland, and take the places of these foreigners who are working there to-day at an American wage?

Mr. Morrison. Do you mean for 15 or 16 cents an hour?

Mr. Moore. No, sir: I mean for $2.56 a day in the mines.

Mr. Morrison. Oh, in the mines?

Mr. Moore. Yes; or for $25 or $30 a week, as some of the garment workers earn?

Mr. Morrison. I think there are lots of men who will go in if they workers earn?

Mr. Morrison. I think there are lots of men who will go in if they can get employment; yes.

Mr. Moore. Do you find in the American Federation of Labor that you have or can lay your hands on 200,000 men who would take the places of these foreign garment workers in New York and do that work?

Mr. Morrison. Do you mean now?
Mr. Moore. Yes.
Mr. Morrison. Two hundred thousand?
Mr. Moore. Yes.
Mr. Morrison. I would not like to feel there were 200,000 garment workers out of work. You would have to take them out of some other teductry.

THE AMBITION OF YOUNG AMERICA.

Mr. Moore. You spoke a little while ago in favor of brain, not as wholly against muscle, but for the recognition of the brain power as against mere brute force, and I am bringing that home to you now, merely to find out if you have in mind brainy men who have the education which they acquired in the American schools, who will go down into the mines and do the work these foreigners do to-day?

Mr. Morrison. If the young men felt there was a future—I think when a young fellow has his choice at all, he figures out what he would like to be. I think the youth that has not ripened and looked over the labor field and realizes that somebody ought to do the world's work, that he ought to do a share of it himself, wants to be a minister, or lawyer, or doctor, or enter into business.

Mr. Moore. You have sons, have you not?

Mr. Moore. You have sons, have you not?

Mr. Moore. You have sons, have you not?

Mr. Moore. Mr. Clark was good enough to mention his son a while ago and to say he was on the farm, and when asked if the boy would go into the ditch, he said no, he could do better. Is not that the real spirit of the average American citizen?

Mr. Morrison. I want to say this that I have worked hard and I hope I will live to see that my son shall go on the farm.

Mr. Moore. So do I as to mine. I agree with you thoroughly.

Mr. Morrison. I have a daughter, whom I was able to education, but she wanted to learn to be a nurse, and she is now at Orange, N. J., learning to be a nurse. I said to her she might go if she wanted to do so, but I did not want her to quit school. I feel, however, if she puts in three years learning to be a nurse, she will be worth something to society, and I will be proud of her.

Mr. Moore. That is very commendable, indeed. I will not press this any further with regard to the mine workers and garment workers, except to note the fact that you concede that these men and women, when organized in the United States, do work for an American wage, the best that can be obtained in this country.

Mr. Morrison. The best that can be obtained.

Mr. Moore And they do not work for the low foreign wage, such as is paid in Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, or Italy?

Mr. Morrison. There is no question about that. We not only concede that, but we admit it.

WAGES IN THE COTTON FIELDS.

WAGES IN THE COTTON FIELDS.

WAGES IN THE COTTON FIELDS.

Mr. Moore, A great deal has been made here of the question of the Steel Trust, and you have quoted from a report with regard to the works at Bethiehem. I am not going to champion that works or any other corporation that employs labor except to express the general hope that we may always have employers of labor, so that labor can have employment. In view of the fact that you referred to the conditions that prevail there without citing any particular wage conditions, as I recall it, and the chairman of the committee having also referred to Bethlehem and having particularly referred to conditions at Westmoreland, I want to ask if you are familiar with the wage conditions in the cotton fields.

Mr. Morrison. Only in a general way, and to know that the wages are low.

Bethlehem and having particularly referred to conditions at westinglend, I want to ask if you are familiar with the wage conditions in the cotton fields.

Mr. Morrison. Only in a general way, and to know that the wages are low.

Mr. Moore. It was testified not long ago before the Ways and Means Committee, by Mr. John Cawlfield, of Stockdale, Tex., that the laborers who actually produce the cotton do not receive on an average of more than 75 cents per day for men, and for women and children 37½ cents.

Mr. Morrison. That was in Texas?

Mr. Moore. That was reported as coming from Texas. That statement is found in the reports of the old Ways and Means Committee at page 4455. Do you know whether that is the wage that prevails in the cotton fields?

Mr. Morrison. I have not the facts only in a general way, except that wages are low everywhere they are unorganized.

Mr. Moore. This witness said that men receive on an average of not more than 75 cents per day, women and children 37½ cents per day, and he added that the children of these families of scholastic age do not attend school on an average of more than two months in the year, which the enrollment and daily attendance roll will show. Are you familiar with those conditions at all, or do you believe them to exist?

Mr. Morrison. Oh, yes.
Mr. Morrison. Oh, yes.
Mr. Morrison. Oh, yes. They do exist in the mills. Down in Texas we have an organizer in El Paso. There has been a great deal of trouble there on account of Mexicans coming over. The claim is they want them there to work for the railroads. The railroads want cheap men, and always did.

FOREIGN ILLITERATES AND NATIVE ILLITERATES.

FOREIGN ILLITERATES AND NATIVE ILLITERATES.

Mr. Moore. Gentlemen take very great pleasure in constantly referring to conditions in Pennsylvania, and they pick out the Bethlehem Steel Works, and Westmoreland in particular, because strike troubles have occurred there, and they ring changes on them, indicating that Pennsylvania is particularly lax in the industrial world, although it is the greatest industrial State of this Union and perhaps gives more employment to industrialists than any other State. Are you familiar with a book called "The Child that Toileth Not"?

Mr. Moore. By Thomas Robinson Dawley, jr., a book description of some conditions in the South?

Mr. Moore. Have you made a study of Southern States at all?

Mr. Moore. Souther the south of the conditions very poor in the textile mills.

Mr. Moore. Jud you find that the operatives in the textile mills were foreign or native born?

Mr. Moore. Souther they were people from the mountains. I do not know that there are very many foreigners who have been able to get down there.

Mr. Moore. Very early settlers, were they not?

Mr. Moore. Very early settlers, were they not?

Mr. Morrison. The people that moved in from the mountains are people who are accustomed to live on very little. They went in with their families and worked in the mills, which has not been a benefit NOT MUCH ORGANIZATION SOUTH.

Mr. Moore. How did you succeed in organizing the millworkers of the South?

Mr. Morrison. We have not been successful in organizing them.

Mr. Moore. Have you any branch organizations of any consequence in Texas?

Mr. Morrison. We have among the trades, but not of the textile workers.

Mr. Moore. What would you say your membership is in the State of Mr. Moore. What would you say your membership is in the State of Texas?

Mr. Morrison. I do not know. We have not figured it up by States, but they are located at Fort Worth. San Antonio, El Paso, and Waco. Mr. Moore. In the cities, mostly?

Mr. Moore. Not in the country at all?

Mr. Morrison. No.

Mr. Moore. Not amongst the farmers at all?

Mr. Morrison. The farmers are organized.

Mr. Moore. How is it in Georgia.

Mr. Moore. Do you have any strikes in the South?

Mr. Moore. Ob you have any strikes in the South?

Mr. Moore. A hoslery mill?

Mr. Morrison. No; it was a textile mill. There is a large textile industry in that part of the State, and they had a strike there.

Mr. Moore. Do you regard your organization work in the South as satisfactory?

Mr. Morrison. Oh, no.

Mr. Morrison. Oh, pes; we pay attention all over. There was a man who left headquarters the other day to go South. He will be in Atlanta, Ga., in about three weeks, and is going to this point, the name of which escapes my memory. It is quite a large place—

Mr. Moore. Augusta?

Mr. Moore. Do you remember the old slogan, "Eight hours for work; eight hours for sleep; eight hours for what you will"?

Mr. Morrison. Yes; I know all about eight hours.

Mr. Moore. You have made the eight-hour question a specialty for many years?

many years?
Mr. Morrison. Yes.
Mr. Moore. May I ask how the eight-hour question appeals to the farmer?

Mr. Morrison. Short hours never appeal very strongly to the average

FARMERS' WAGES AND THE EIGHT-HOUR QUESTION.

Mr. Moore. I am confining this to the farmer. I want to know whether the farmers' unions have specifically indorsed or approved the eight-hour proposition?

Mr. Morrison, I do not know.

Mr. Moerison, I do not know.

Mr. Moerison, The eight-hour day? I would not say that it is a fact that they do.

Mr. Moorison. In true that the eight-hour law is made to operate almost exclusively in the industries and is not effective as to the farmers?

Mr. Morrison, I will say this—that in my early youth a man almost exclusively in the industries and is not effective as to the farmers?

Mr. Morrison. I will say this—that in my early youth a man worked from daylight to dark; but the average farm hand now starts to work about 8 and quits about 6, and if they do not let him do that he goes off into town, where he can have shorter hours and where they are paying more. A man will go where he can get good conditions. There is another thing about the farm laborer that appeals to me: When a man hires a man, he just hires that man. The average man wants to get married and settle down and have a home; and there is very little chance for home life for a man working on a farm part of the time or all the time.

Mr. Moore. Do you know of any journeyman farmer anywhere who makes $2.56 a day, which is the wage paid to the union miner in Pennsylvania?

Mr. Morrison. I imagine there are lots of men working for farmers who, when you take into account their board and everything they get, would be receiving equal to that and more.

Mr. Moore. Would not that account very largely for the fact that the garment worker, the Jewish garment worker who is making $25 a week over on the East Side, would prefer to stay there rather than go out on the farm?

Mr. Morrison. Of course, that is work he has been accustomed to do. A man does not change rapidly from one employment to another.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, through Mr. Morrison we have the Thus, Mr. Chairman, through Mr. Morrison we have the Federation of Labor view of the immigration problem. stands for the right to unionize the laborers who are already in the United States and against the admission of others who may not assimilate with the unions. He admits the industry and thrift and wage-earning power of the newcomer, but thinks the bars should go up against him until those who are already here shall be thoroughly organized.

AN OPPOSITE LABOR VIEW.

On the other hand, associations like the German-American National Alliance, numbering 2,000,000 members, take a wholly different view. Here is an expression from the German-American State Alliances of Ohio and Kentucky. It shows that there is another side to the question.

is another side to the question.

The German-American State Alliance of Ohio and the German-American State Alliance of Kentucky, in joint session assembled, representing 60,000 American citizens, emphatically protest against the adoption of the Burnett immigration bill, now pending before the House of Representatives, as it is detrimental to the welfare of this country. The passage of this bill would exclude hundreds of thousands of workingmen, who are absolutely necessary for the development of this country in their capacity as workers in mines, on streets, railways, buildings, farms, etc. The immigrant is a blessing for this country and not a burden, but he carries the heaviest burden of common labor and represents a comparatively large portion of the Nation's wealth. The immigrant does 85 per cent of the work in all slaughter and packing houses; he brings forth seven-tenths of all coal mined in the United States; he manufactures four-fifths of all house furnishing goods; 78 per cent of all work in the wool factories is done by immigrants and nineteentwentieths of all garments and more than half of all shoes are made by them; the immigrant refines nineteen-twentieths of all sugar and manufactures more than half of all cigars and one-half of all gloves, shirts, and collars. He is a willing and always welcome worker on farms, which he can run successfully without any educational test. We are of the opinion that the men and women engaged in the labor of producing and upbuilding the wealth of our Nation do not require an educational test. What we need are physically well-built men and women—desirable immigrants, who, on account of their moral worth, would improve the citizenship of our country. These people ought to be welcomed in this land of liberty, instead of being excluded for not passing the test provided in the Burnett bill. We know that a class of very undesirable immigrants are easily able to pass the required examination set forth in this bill—every narchist or agitator of un-American doctrines contrary

THE BETURNING IMMIGRANT AS AN UPLIFTER.

That societies even older in patriotic and fraternal endeavor, may be considered in this discussion, I quote from the annual address (December, 1913) of the president of the New England Society of Pennsylvania, Mr. Alba B. Johnson, who is a large employer of labor as well as a student of economic problems.

Said Mr. Johnson:

Said Mr. Johnson:

The ideals of those who have sought our Atlantic and our Pacific shores have been far removed from those of the Pilgrim Fathers whose landing we celebrate to-night, and as our population has grown, the process of assimilation has grown. The desire to share our fertile acres, our opportunities for lucrative employment, and our better social conditions have attracted foreigners in great numbers. These came first from the more enlightened countries of northwestern Europe, whose civilization was akin to our own, but later from the less civilized and less developed countries of southern and southeastern Europe.

It is true also that of late, when conditions have not been favorable for profitable employment here, the tide of emigration has been reversed, and those who for a time have lived amongst us have returned to their native European villages, to carry back some portion of American standards of living and American ideals. Thus, nearly all the countries of central and northern Europe have many workmen who are more enlightened and more efficient by reason of having worked in America. They have carried with them higher standards of living, higher efficiency as workmen, and a demand for higher wages, all of which tend to bring the scale of living in those countries nearer to our own.

We need these people to hew our wood and draw our water. We need their aid in developing our resources and in operating our industries. Any legislation tending to exclude them for other reasons than physical or moral incapacity is therefore contrary to our interests, and the same liberal laws that have so long governed their admission should be continued.

FLENTY OF FARM LAND FOR TOLLERS.

PLENTY OF FARM LAND FOR TOILERS.

In this debate, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have argued that immigrants overrun the country and tend to degrade American labor. They go so far as to complain of their crowding the land, as if our resources were fully developed. It is something of a coincidence that during the last few days the Director of the Census should have given us his bulletin on agriculture in the United States for 1910. What does he say about farm lands in the United States? That we have over $78,000,000 acres, of which 478,000,000 only are improved. Think of it, those of you who fear the toiling immigrant will eat up our resources!

Over 400,000,000 acres of farm and wooded land remain unimproved in the United States. Nearly half of all our land is waiting for some one to till it. But this is not all. Let us consider the farm statistics for the area of the 13 original States. Notwithstanding the intensity of our population in this small area east of the Appalachian chain we still have 78,000,000 acres of unimproved land out of a total of 161,000,000. The Dismal Swamp is in that area. If cleared up and drained it would make a rich farming country. If such a project should ever be undertaken it would require labor. Would it be the labor that can read and write?

MONEY VALUE OF THE IMMIGRANT.

Another point which ought to have consideration before this bill is disposed of relates to the money value of the immigrant. The report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for 1913 shows that the immigrants who came to the United States during the year preceding brought with them $40,890,197 in cash. That was a tidy sum to enter into our circulation, and answers to a certain extent the oft-repeated assertion that the immigrant carries away our money and does not give us a fair equivalent. It is safe to say that those who brought so large a sum into our country were generally law-abiding and industrious men and women, and that their purpose in coming to the United States was praiseworthy. It is also fair to assume that whether some of them could read or write or not, they were fully as desirable as the educated and clever schemers who expected to live upon their wits in the United States and who would spurn to do the honest manual labor we need to have done here, the reading test to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE SPIRIT OF HUMANITY.

And, finally, Mr. Chairman, it is noteworthy that the Commissioner General of Immigration, who is hedged about by those who advocate restriction, withholds a positive indorsement of the educational test and suggests that the real test should be physical and moral; in fact, a manhood test, rather than one based upon educational qualifications. Inability to read is not a crime; it is a misfortune; but even so it does not prove that the heart and fiber of him who can not read are not as pure and true as those of the greatest scholar. With the educational test included this bill may satisfy the projudges that tional test included, this bill may satisfy the prejudices that have grown up with the immigration problem, but it is doubtful whether it will respond to the economic conditions which its proponents hope to bring about. It will exclude a certain class of human beings in favor of certain other classes, contrary to the spirit which heretofore has permeated American institutions. Of the total number of 1,197,892 reported admitted up to June 30 last, it would turn back 269,988 who were entered illiterate. This bill does not propose that the 1,197,892 immigrants who may knock for admission in 1914 shall be turned back, nor does it say that only a percentage of that number will be welcome during the year. It declares that 269,988 of that total shall be turned back. Why? Not because of any crime committed; not because they would not honestly labor here, but because they can not read. If we are to admit 927,904 who can read and who may aspire to active competition with the skilled or professional labor of the United States, it does not appear that either patriotism or labor in the United States will gain much by the transaction. On the other hand, the exclusion of the 269,988 who can not read reverses our national policy, and closes the door of hope and opportunity to the downtrodden and op-pressed, who may, after all, be the most deserving of our helping hand and the spirit of human kindness we have extended to others.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining. Mr. BURNETT. I yield, Mr. Chairman, seven minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I am more in favor of this bill restricting immigration than I have been of any bill that has been before this House since I have been a Member of Con-The only objection I have to it is that it is not broad enough to exclude Japanese, Hindus, and other Asiatic laborers. The people of the East do not yet realize the importance of this matter, because they have not come in contact to any extent with this strange people from across the water. California, being on the shores of the Pacific, seems to be a dumping ground for the undesirable from Asia, and I assure you the Hindu and the Japanese is a problem and the greatest plague we have in the West. Japanese are very spirited and proud fellows who consider nothing too good for them. They locate in the garden spots of the State, bringing their customs and manner of living, of course, with them. Consequently as they come in the refined American, with his ideals, goes out. It matters not whether it be city lots or country property, the land adjacent to Japanese habitations continually decreases in value from the standpoint of an American purchaser. These people know no standards of honor, and figure everything as to whether it will bring dollars and cents to them. They should be excluded at

You may be surprised when I say the influx of Hindus into the West threatens to be even a greater menace than the immigration of Japanese. Hindus are now going to the Pacific coast by the thousands. They are an odd, inferior people, bound down by strange traditions and religious fanaticisms. present the appearance of slothfulness, stupidity, and pity. They appear to be oblivious to the sensations of either pleasure or pain. The Hindu is as tough as whalebone, and instead of eating when hungry, simply takes up another notch in his belt. It is impossible for the American laborer to compete with the Hindu laborer. The Hindu will wear the clothes which the American discards, eat the food the Americans will not use, and can work 20 hours a day if necessary.

Some time ago I filed a bill asking for the exclusion of these strange specimens of humanity. When it comes before the House I am sure every man who understands the true condition will vote for it. They must be excluded sooner or later, and why not now? Every dollar the Hindu gets is sent to his native land, with which to pay the traveling expenses to this country of his cousin, and it is very discouraging when we take into consideration they all seem to be cousins, and millions of them anxious to come.

As I said before, I am in favor of this immigration bill. Each year from ten hundred thousand to eighteen hundred thousand foreigners come to our shore. Of this number it is estimated 250,000 can neither read nor write in their own lan-When we take into consideration this great influx of densely ignorant and undesirable people we are forced to the conclusion that greater restriction is necessary.

Many years ago we found it necessary to restrict immigration, so we excluded those whom we considered would be the least desirable to our country—idiots, imbeciles, insane, people afflicted with infectious diseases, and so forth—but we find to-day we are still getting more foreigners than we can assimilate, regardless of the exclusions we have already made. Thus we are driven to the necessity of excluding some other class, and the question is, "What class shall we exclude?" Really there are but two other classes to choose from, the literate and the illiterate, so being forced to make further restrictions we are forced to make a choice between these classes, and in making our choice we have but to decide as wise men which, as a class, would make the most desirable citizens. I submit anyone with as much sense as a vegetable oyster would decide in favor of | that we are an enlightened people, each of which is true. We the class who can read and write in their own language, for the reason such would be more apt to understand our form of government and aid us in our patriotic endeavors to make this country the light of the world.

Gentlemen tell us those who can not read their native language are unfortunate, poor, and needy. Such is doubtless the case with a great majority of foreigners who come to this country. Being unable to assist all of the unfortunate, poor, and needy, are we not given the privilege to decide who shall be the recipients of our bounty? Unfortunate, poor, and miserable people pass the door of each Member of this House daily. Do you take them in and warm, feed, and clothe them? No; you decide according to your best judgment, and aid the ones whom you consider are most apt to be worthy. As a class the foreigner who can not read in his own language is an idler, spendthrift, and has no capacity or desire to learn. There are thousands of exceptions, doubtless, to this rule, but what I have stated is the rule.

At least, you will admit the illiterate class has a greater percentage of people who would not make good citizens here than the class which is composed of people who have had energy, opportunity, and capacity to acquire a little intelligence at home. We would not, however, want it to be understood we favor excluding the ignorant people because our hearts do not beat in sympathy with them, but being obliged to exempt another class from the benefits of this country, we consider it wise and just to decide in favor of the intelligent class as being most desirable to us and, as a class, being the most deserving. By making this choice we decide in favor of intelligence and learning, and thus impress upon the people of the world the value of knowledge, and in this way we impress upon the ignorant people of all lands the fact that the human race is developing and that all must keep apace with the times.

The most important matter pertaining to immigration is to keep from our shores all who continue to lower our national standards. The hand that brings down the standards of a nation is an instrument of sure destruction. You might as well take the warmth from the sunbeams of heaven or innocence from the heart of a child as to take away the ideals of a people.

A tidal wave may sweep over a land, wash down its buildings, and change the face of the country, but by and by the sun and time will do its work, the land will become dry and be restored; earthquakes may shake down a city and leave yawning fissures everywhere, but after a while rehabilitation will do its work, and the effect of the earthquake will be no more; famine, gaunt and hungry, may hover for years above a fruitful land, but by and by years of plenty will come, and the nation will still live and prosper; but when the ideals and standards of the people are gone they are gone forever, and destiny has decreed that nation shall cease, and it matters not the size of her standing army or the number of her warships on the sea, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting" is written high upon the wall. Mr. Chairman, I object to promiscuous immigration, because it lowers our national standards.

First. It lowers our standards as to labor. When the American laborer, educated, cultured, and possessed of high ideals, is obliged to work by the side of a man, or a number of men, who can not read or write, and who do not know whether Napoleon Bonaparte was once the Emperor of France or the captain of a whaling vessel on the Northern Sea, it has its effect on labor, and causes a man of spirit to feel that he is too good a man to do no higher grade of work than such fellows are capable of doing. What would a young wife think of her husband if he persisted in working with such a band of human scarecrows? The presence of these ignorant workmen brings down the American standard of labor.

Second. They bring down the standard of wages as well as the standard of labor. If there are 25,000,000 people in this country who want a job and there are 25,000,000 jobs in this country, each can be accommodated, but send a million more men, making 26,000,000 who desire a job, and they will compete with each other, bringing down the standard of wages and after all a million of them will be obliged to remain idle. Thus will be lowered the standard of American wages.

Third. The standard of living and the standard of morality of our people are lowered by the arrival of this ignorant and immoral horde from across the sea. I tell you whatever lowers the moral standards of our people strikes at the very heart of this Republic.

Fourth. Intelligence is another one of our great standards. When the immigrant comes to this country, while yet far out at sea, he sees the great monument, the Statue of Liberty— Liberty enlightening the world. From this he gets the idea, first, that we are a liberty-loving, patriotic people; and, secondly, love to think we are the most enlightened Nation. We love to think the United States of America is the intellectual light of the world. Every person in this country who has a piece of property as large as an oyster shell is taxed to maintain our public-school system. We claim this system to be the best there is in the world. We have hundreds of millions of dollars invested in public schoolhouses, in colleges, and universities of learning. We have State laws compelling children to be sent to school.

In California, my State, every child under the age of 14 years must go to school. If the parents will not send him, the parents are arrested and punished. If the parents are not able to send their children to school, our local authorities will do so; and, as a result, in the great State of California there is not one native son or daughter who arrives at the age of 18 who has not a fair knowledge, at least, of the grammar course. I presume the same condition prevails in the other States of this Union. If they do not now, I am sure in the near future they will, because intelligence is one of our national standards. We do not thus compel a child to attend school simply for the benefit of the child, but we do it to keep up our standards.

I want to ask you gentlemen who are opposed to this bill if you think it would be right, in view of all this, to permit 2,000,000, 1,000,000, or a half a million of full grown men and women, intellectually as dark as night, incapable of reading a word in their native tongue, to come to this country, associate with our children and our people? Will you dare tell me such would not debase the intellectual standard of our people?

Fifth. Unrestricted immigration lowers the standard of patriotism in our country. In considering this phase of the subject let us forget for a moment all other effects which it produces, for they are as nothing compared to this. Labor may be considered a disgrace, wages reduced to a minimum, our schoolhouses and colleges may become inhabited by owls, yet nationally we may live as long as we respect our Constitution and enforce our laws and the fires of patriotism continue to burn. Every man who comes here who does not love this form of Government lowers the standard of patriotism. How can a person love this form of Government who knows nothing about It, and how can a man know anything about this form of Government who has not taken interest in his own to the extent that he can neither read nor write in his native language? After such a one comes to our shores and begins to learn and think, his early environments and naturally debased tendencies may drive him to anarchy and revolution. I like your tariff laws, your banking and currency act, your project to build a railroad into Alaska, all laws calculated for the financial betterment of this country and its people, but these are nothing compared to keeping up the standard of our citizenship. We may lose much of our wealth and yet be prosperous; lose standing among the nations of the earth and yet succeed; but when a large proportion of the people of this country are not in love with our Constitution and laws, we are marked as a lamb for the slaughter.

Gentlemen seem to figure that this Nation, because it is named the United States of America, will endure forever; an unwise conclusion, I assure you. Nations, like everything else, have their morning, their noon, and their night of life, and the only way we can stay the lengthening shadows of this Nation to-day is by keeping our people in harmony with its fundamental principles and desires. When this Nation shall go the way of the other nations of the earth it will not be because some bastile for has come across the waters and sunt our some hostile foe has come across the waters and sunk our ships. It will not be because our valiant Army has been defeated upon the shore, but it will come in the form of revolu-tion; come from within and not from without. When that When that sad day shall come to curse the earth, and this Republic of freedom and liberty shall go down to wreck and ruin, a mighty tower should be erected out on the great highways of the earth, and in that tower the bells should never cease to toll, and on it should be written in letters of black, as an emblem of sadness and warning:

The Government of the United States of America was lost by reason of the lack of patriotism of her people.

[Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL]

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the Members of the House and Senate of the United States can not, in justice to themselves, to the people they represent, or to the principles of democracy for which they stand, pass the Burnett immigration bill as it now stands.

There is much in this bill that is objectionable, but the chief bone of contention, as we all know, is the clause concerning the so-called illiteracy test.

Much has already been said on the subject, and I can but add my convictions in the matter.

The Burnett-Dillingham bill has for its object the restriction of immigration to our country, and with this object in view its authors have proposed a test of the literacy of those applying for admission to our shores. We all know that our Nation is a Nation of immigrants; immigrants were our first colonists; immigrants, those strong, sturdy people who fought for the freedom of our country and whose sons have kept that freedom intact ever since its gaining. Were these people literate or illiterate? No one stopped to ask that question. Immigrants to-day form the bankbone of our Nation, yet we talk of excluding these seekers of homes and new opportunities on the grounds that they are unable to read or write. Can this be a just test of any man's ability to become an honest, industrious, and lawabiding citizen?

The contention has been made that we compel our native-born children to attend the public schools before attaining citizen-ship, and we should require the foreigner to possess some substantial education before admitting him to enjoy a part of our country's benefits. It has been observed that many of the people who come to our shores are illiterate because opportunities have been denied them. They have no opportunities to learn to read or write, and in coming to our country they are really trying to free themselves from the conditions which have so restricted them. They are eager to learn and to give to their children that which has been denied them. Therefore I say, Mr. Chairman, our doors should be open to all those who are of good character, healthy and strong, and desirous of earning a good living, and if a literacy test must be made it should be applied at the time of naturalization, when sufficient time has elapsed to give the immigrant an opportunity to prove his purpose by taking advantage of the opportunities here offered him.

Again, the argument is advanced of overcrowded conditions in certain of our cities, caused by this influx of humanity from foreign shores. According to this bill, we are willing to spend, perhaps, more than a million of dollars in increasing the force of immigration officers so as to take care of the immigrants after the manner provided for in the bill. I say, why not use this money to establish a bureau which will have for its purpose the advising and directing of the immigrant, shielding him from impositions, and, instead of allowing all newcomers to settle in these few congested districts, aiding in distributing them in those parts of the country where we most need their

There can be no doubt that we have great need of such labor as these people who are coming to our land can and will do. Our native-born citizens are seemingly too far advanced to do the manual labor which our immigrants perform willingly and well, for the mere fact that a man is illiterate does not imply that he is unable to work efficiently and faithfully.

We are right in excluding the morally or physically unfit from our land, but until it can be said that all our territory is filled and that we have no more need of manual labor in the further development of the land, we will not only be doing an injustice to future immigrants, but to our own citizens as well, by refusing admission to voluntary immigrants who come here in the hope of realizing their ideals of freedom and who hope to find here the opportunities for advancement denied them in their mother countries. So much has been said on this subject that I conclude my brief remarks by referring to and indorsing the able argument of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Man-AHAN], appearing in the RECORD, page 2601.

Mr. SABATH. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr.

REILLY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, in view of the expressed sentiment in favor of restriction of immigration, I sincerely hope that sentiment is not based in any way on the fact that the present Connecticut delegation is made up of Ken-NEDY, DONOVAN, LONERGAN, MAHAN, and REILLY. [Laughter and applause.]

I am opposed to this bill principally because of the illiteracy test. In the name of 35,000 citizens of Italian birth or parentage; in the name of 10,000 people of Polish birth or parentage; in the name of 10,000 people of French-Canadian birth or parentage; in the name of 10,000 people of Jewish birth or parentage; in the name of 50,000 people of German birth or parentage; in the name of 70,000 people of Irish birth or parentage in the district I have the honor to represent, I protest against this bill. In the name of all people who still believe that this is the land of the free, I protest against this un-American measure. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I might have referred to these people as

Mr. Chairman, I might have referred to these people as Jewish-Americans, as Polish-Americans, as German-Americans, as French-Americans, as Irish-Americans, if I saw fit, but I do not believe in a hyphenated Americanism. [Applause.] We are all Americans as soon as we come here and assume the duties of citizenship.

The test of character, as has been well said, is not education. The fundamental principles of good citizenship are good character and good health. Yet this bill will keep out those of good character and good health, but will allow the mental crook, the educated rascal, to come in. [Applause.]

This is not a fair and honest bill. If it were, it would come out in the open and declare what it really means, namely, complete restriction of immigration. Why, then, put in a literacy test? Why not restrict without trying to dodge behind this mental examination, this literacy or educational knowledge?

There has been no general demand for this bill. Two Presidents have seen fit to veto a similar bill, and I sincerely hope that a third President will do likewise. I am not authorized to speak for him, and I do not believe the gentleman from Mississippi was yesterday authorized to speak for him when he said he would sign it. I simply hope that the President will veto this legislation that is so absolutely un-American in its illiteracy test. If the test of Americanism were to be direct descendency from Plymouth Rock, few would be found to meet it, and if the permanency of American institutions were to depend on that there would not be a rush to take out a longevity insurance on them. [Laughter.] If this test had prevailed 50 or 60 years ago, how many of us would be here to-day? I am sure I would not be, because my father, through no fault of his, but because of conditions he could not control in the land of his birth, was not able to read when he came here. But he learned soon after, and he saw to it, poor, hard-working man though he was, that his children also learned to read and write, and they received the benefit of a common-school education, the best his means afforded. If this bill had been a law half a century ago a great portion of the best citizenship of the United States would not be in evidence to-day.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hefun] says he is in favor of Americans "creating their own immigration." It is a good thing the perpetuity of the Republic does not depend solely upon American propagation—American in the sense the advocates of this bill talk. The genial gentleman from Alabama, who defends this bill with its literacy test, has one child; there are seven children in the Reilly family. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have made all kinds of pathetic appeals and have harked back to the days of Know-Nothingism and resorted to every possible harsh and prejudiced argument for the purpose of trying to defeat this bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle], with tears in his voice—and I noticed the tears were responded to by some gentlemen near him who thought as he did—pictured the awful conditions of some of the poor aliens if not permitted to come to this country. Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention and the attention of this House to a picture nearer home.

Mr. Morrison, secretary of the Federation of Labor, when he was before our committee the other day in support of this bill, referring to the native Americans and old immigrants that once worked in the mines and other industries of a district in Pennsylvania, gave us this picture:

sylvania, gave us this picture:

I was through that district a number of years ago, when the strike was on and the fight was made, and I saw conditions there that I wish the members of the committee could have seen. The strike was on for many months. The coal barons, men on horseback, to my way of viewing it, incited trouble by riding through the men who were marching, clubbing them, shooting in the air, and doing other things that would cause the strikers to either say or do something that would bring them within the pale of the law. I do not want to give you a gruesome picture, but I put in one of the saddest hours of my life when I went to the camp where those people had been on strike. It was after a rainstorm which had happened the night before. The water scaked through the tents into the beds and the floors where the tents were east were nothing but mud. I saw hundreds of women there in bare feet, without shoes. I saw little children cold and crying on their mothers' breasts. As I say, I am Scotch, and I have been taught, since I was big enough to stub my toe, that any man that shows any feeling or sheds a tear is unmanly; but I want to tell you that I choked when I saw those people suffering in that way and was informed that the coal barrons desired to drive them out of that district.

Mr. Chairman, by whom were they displaced? By the very

Mr. Chairman, by whom were they displaced? By the very element that this bill will keep out. Men of America, whether you be foreign born or not, these men were of your blood. They are of our people; they are of our blood; they are of the kind that the gentleman from Colorado spoke of the other day as the old immigrants driven out by recruits from southern Europe. They are the kind that are being driven out in Michigan by these imported grasshoppers who come and leave year by year. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], it seems to me, weakened his case when he referred to the hundreds of thousands that go out from here every year and return to their own countries. They are the kind we object to; they are birds of passage, that come here and beat down the wages and break down the standards of living of the American laborer, and then fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away, and steal everything else they can lay their hands on. [Laughter.] These are the men the bill seeks to provide against. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] says that the law that we have is all-sufficient, and he and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] recite its various provisions. Gentlemen, does the law keep them out when six hundred and twenty thousand came in during the last four months? When fourteen hundred thousand came in during the last 12 menths, does it keep them out? Does it work the purpose that this bill seeks to do-that is, keep out the men who break down the price of labor and contaminate the very fountains of our civilization and demoralize the moral conditions of our country?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield, because I have only a short time, and I must decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, this test is fair, and it is certain. The law excluding those liable to become a public charge, referred to by gentlemen on this floor, is of such a character that the immigrant does not know whether he will be declared a public charge until he gets here, but every man before he leaves the other side knows whether he can read his own language or dialect, and the steamship companies, who say that they do not know whether people are insane or diseased, can easily know whether these people can read their own language or dialect, and they will see to it that they are kept out if they can not read.

It has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] that this test would do nothing, as the steamships would simply substitute the literate alien for the illiterates. If the steamship companies do not think there are teeth in this bill, why is it that their agents with gum shoes are going through this Capitol and through the Office Building trying to thwart the passage of the bill?

Mr. Chairman, I have here, but I will not take time to read it, a letter from a representative of an Irish organization in Brooklyn, sent last year, directed to Mr. Sulzer, when he was here, stating that he, Mr. Sulzer, was misrepresenting the Irish people of that district when he contended that they were against this bill. I have a letter from Louis W. Dongres, an editor of Chicago, who states that, notwithstanding the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] to the contrary, the Bohemians of that city and of this country are in favor of this bill. I have here, Mr. Chairman, petitions from 14,000 people in New York City asking for the passage of this bill, and, as Mr. Morrison said when he was before our committee, many of them are aliens themselves, who believe that this thing has gone far enough and that there ought to be some check put to it. I have here petitions with several thousand names from the city of New Orleans, represented by able and distinguished gentlemen, appealing to them to protect the workingmen of that city against the crowd of immigrants that is coming into our country.

Gentlemen have sought by what seems to me harsh and unjust attacks upon me and my State to try to create a prejudice against this bill. Mr. Chairman, if I can secure for the people of my country in the South immunity from the conditions that pervade so many sections of the North, I am willing to be the goat at whom these gentlemen may level their little flings if they desire to do so. Gentlemen on this floor have tauntingly referred to illiteracy in Alabama, and especially in my district, but they were not fair enough to look up the literacy among the younger white people of my State and district between the ages of 10 and 20, but take the illiteracy of all my people generally. Perhaps they do not know, though some of us do who were children during that terrific fratricidal war which bedewed my country with the blood of brave men who wore the blue and of brave men who wore the gray—perhaps they do not know the conditions that prevailed then and for many years after that awful war. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], who, at my solicitation, sits at my right, to aid in securing the passage of this bill, with the fact that he had defended the South more than he—Mr. Murray—had heard any New England man do in regard to the Civil War.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] has often been South and has learned of the fearful conditions that once prevailed there. He has learned of the poverty and distress that once enshrouded my people of the South, and though he is of a party different from that which controls in the South, he is brave enough and fair enough to do us justice. Would that some Democrats could do the same.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield; I have not the time to spare. I do not want to be diverted from this proposition. Mr. Chairman, the old Confederate soldiers came home from that war to devastated and ruined fields. They came to find their property gone. They came to start anew to rise Phœnix-like from the ashes of their adversity. Those were men of courage, those were the days that tried men's souls. I was one of the boys then myself, and perhaps you were, Mr. Chairman-I do not know-but 60 milestones have just passed behind me, and I remember those dark days; I remember when my countrymen scarcely had bread upon which to live. Those were the days when the illiterates in my country came up, and it is unkind and unjust in gentlemen, for the purpose of trying to excite prejudice in the minds of men from the North, to make such unkind flings at a devastated country and at a ruined people, who were overthrown by superior numbers. [Applause.]

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. I have already stated that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have referred with great glee to the literacy of the children of the foreigners, but are not fair enough to tell you that in a large majority of cases that high percentage is by reason of the fact that those are the children of literate parents. The illiterates that this bill strikes down are people a majority of whom do not bring their wives to this country. Most of those at whom this bill strikes come from southern Italy and are men who leave their wives behind them and have no children here. Hence their argument falls, because the bill does not cut out many of those whose children show such educational strides in this country.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have referred to the fact for the purpose of trying to excite a prejudice, that great cardinals and great prelates have inveighed against this bill. that argument, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that a gentleman who appeared before our committee, P. J. McNamara, vice president of the Locomotive Firemen and Trainmen's Association, who himself is of the church to which these prelates and cardinals belong, said:

Representing labor, as I do, knowing and understanding what labor needs, I appeal to this committee as the representative of more than 100,000 firemen.

And he said that in that organization and the organization of the railway conductors and trainmen more than 100,000 of them belong to that same church.

I wish I had time to say a little about a Mr. Scharf, who has been going through the offices trying to play that same kind of politics and get up a religious scare. I will read just one extract from what that splendid Catholic gentleman and gallant Knight of Columbus, Representative Ben Johnson, of Kentucky, has said about Emil Scharf, Ph. D., and so forth, and so forth, who has been trying to frighten Members of Congress into voting against this bill. Scharf had been lobbying for a certain bill and trying similar methods to secure its passage to those he is now using to try to defeat this bill. Mr. JOHNSON said:

I wish to warn this House against a lobbylist, a man who is lobbyling for the passage of this bill that is now up, and who lobbles for various other bills that come along, and then in the meantime offers to deliver to any candidate who will pay him a monetary consideration the Catholic vote and the vote of the Order of the Knights of Columbus in the United States, which I know he can not do. In justice to the membership of this House I wish to make this statement.

But the day of such lobbyists as Scharf has passed, and his threats fall impotent at the feet of those against whom they are

Mr. Chairman, most of the taunts and flings that have been hurled at me I have borne in silence unless they were such that no self-respecting gentleman could fail to fling back. But when my people are ridiculed because of the illiteracy for which they are not responsible, I would be recreant to the trust that they have reposed in me did I not defend them. They want this legislation because they hope that the scum of southern Europe may be turned back before their sons and daughters see the red flag of anarchy erected in their midst. We are told that the illiteracy test will not keep out the Black Hand leaders. It will not; but there are other sections of the bill that will, and the illiteracy test will keep out thousands of those who are pliant tools in the hands of Black Hand leaders. It will keep out those who at Lawrence, Mass., a few months ago, followed the flags on which were emblazoned: "No God, no law, no master." A gentleman representing the Order of Railway Conductors recently told me that he and his sister 20 years ago worked in the textile mills at Lawrence, and that it was then perfectly proper for respectable girls to work there. But he said that since the low class of foreigners had driven the Americans and the old Europeans from these mills it had become the breeding ground for the white-slave trade and that few decent girls want to live within that contaminating atmosphere.

Gentlemen have said in this debate that Americans would no longer do the class of work that the immigrant from southern

Europe does

Mr. Chairman, this is not true. Go with me to the hills of north Alabama and I will show you thousands of white men, honest, brave, and true, working in the mines, on the railroads, at the furnaces, on the farms, and at all the honest avocations of

As I have had occasion to say before, if you will go with me to Alabama City and to Pell City, two beautiful little cotton-mill cities in my district, I will show you girls and women working in the mills whose characters are as pure as the driven snow. Only a few weeks ago I had the honor of speaking to an audience of four or five hundred men working at the car shops in my home town. They were my neighbors and my friends, and I was proud to call them such.

There was not a Greek or Italian face in the crowd, and Mr. Portner, the superintendent, a splendid Irish gentleman himself, told me with pride that he did not and would not employ a dago in all that plant. The great and splendid Farmers' Union United American Mechanics ask for it. I was made happy to-day by receiving the following telegram from a council in my home town:

GADSDEN, ALA., February 4, 1914.

N L. BURNETT, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Gadsden Council, No. 14, Junior Order United American Mechanics, indorses immigration bill and urge you to use utmost effort to retain literacy test.

JUNIOR ORDER No. 14.

The great labor organizations urge it. Thousands of farmers, mechanics, laborers, business and professional men have urged me to pass it. A few months ago a large meeting of farmers and business men in my home city unanimously adopted a resolution commending me for refusing to give up the chairmanship of the Committee on Immigration to take the chairmanship of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

In the famous Mulhall lobby investigation by Congress last summer it was testified that I was one of seven Members of Congress singled out by the lobbyists for defeat. I have no doubt but that the steamship companies were behind this conspiracy to bring about my destruction. I have felt the keen edge of their opposition at every step in the progress of this bill. Their emissaries are in the galleries to-day watching every move that we make. When we defeat them in this House they will concentrate their forces against the bill in the Senate. When the bill passes that body they will lay siege upon the White House. God grant that their wicked schemes may be thwarted and that the voice of the people may triumph.

Mr. Chairman, I had rather be known as the father of this bill than of the currency or the tariff bills, for I feel that the very foundations of our Republic are being endangered unless this legislation prevails.

Right must and will triumph, and if I can give to my children and children's children the heritage of the good name that this bill will entitle me to I can say, "Lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, since I have seen the salvation of the Lord."

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enocted, etc., That the word "allen" wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States. That the term "United States" as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States, and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term "seaman" as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place.

That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the semicolon after the word "States," on line 5, page 1, and insert a comma, and after the comma insert the words "or one who has not resided continuously in the United States for a period of at least five years."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted, and I hope it will be, it will eliminate the hardships which, if this bill passes in its present form, will be imposed upon thousands and thousands of our people who have resided in this country for many, many years. As I stated yesterday on the floor of this House, under the definition of the word "allen" appearing in this bill it would be absolutely impossible for people who are not native-born or naturalized citizens, though they may have resided here for many years, to enter our shores again after returning from what may have proven to be their last earthly visit to father, mother, brother, or sister, who reside abroad, without being subjected to all of the drastic provisions of this bill. I do not think it was intended that we should impose these hardships upon people who are part and parcel of us. We know the conditions here, and we also know that frequently they can not be changed. Many of these people have resided in our country, as I have said, for 10, 15, or 20 years, and due to the conditions existing in the sections of our country where they have resided it has been absolutely impossible for them to become naturalized.

It is for these deserving people that I am pleading, and I hope that the chairman of the committee, as well as the rest of you gentlemen, will vote in favor of this amendment. As you will observe. I provide that they must reside here at least five years before they shall have the same privileges as a naturalized citizen or one of native birth as far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I will.

Would that deny the right of voting under Mr. CAMPBELL.

a declaration of intention?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes. This will deny the right of anyone who is not a naturalized citizen to vote; but that question does not enter into this matter. What I am trying to bring out is that unless this amendment is adopted these people who have not become naturalized will be unjustly discriminated against when they seek to return to this country after a short visit to their native land, for they will be forced to comply with all of the drastic regulations of this bill, and I maintain that this is not fair and equitable.

I do not think it was the original intention of the committee to go as far as they did.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be a good plan, in addition to what my colleague has already stated in his amendment, to add:

Those who have resided in the United States for five years and have declared their intention to become citizens.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to accept that amendment. Mr. MADDEN. I think that is what ought to be in here. Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. SABATH. I am willing to accept the amendment.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the amendment to that extent. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MAD-

DEN1 offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report

Mr. GARDNER. I raise the point of order that the gentleman has not the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] yielded to his colleague [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. GARDNER. Not for the purpose of offering an amendment. I wish to be heard in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman yielded to his colleague for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Then he must yield the floor.
The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.
Mr. GARDNER. But I wish to be recognized under the Under the rules he must be recognized for five rules to reply. minutes, and then whoever first obtains the floor to reply is

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Am I recognized to offer my amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has gotten through.

Mr. GARDNER, Mr. Chairman, so far as the definition of the word "alien" is concerned, this bill does not change existing law except as to verbiage. For years the law has been interpreted to mean that any alien, no matter how long he may have lived in this country, if he sees fit to travel abroad, must on his return be subjected to just the same examination as any newly arrived alien. In other words, we do not propose, except in the case of our own citizens, to allow men to go abroad and then, on their return, escape the salutary safe-guards which we have thrown around the influx of aliens.

It is true that this question of the rights of resident aliens has been a matter of dispute. A number of times it has been brought before the court to decide whether or not a resident alien, on his return to this country, should be held to be subject to the rules which govern the admission of immigrant aliens. Many persons have claimed that an alien who has resided here 10 years has the right to journey abroad without being subject to any restrictions as to his readmission. other words, it has often been claimed that an alien of the kind described has, so far as admission to the United States is concerned, the same rights as an American citizen. However, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that resident aliens, if they desire to go abroad without having taken the previous precaution of becoming naturalized, must do so at their own risk.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to another result which would ensue from the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath]. If his amendment is adopted, we can not deport prostitutes or procurers after they have resided here for five years. As the law stands at present, procurers or prostitutes may be deported so long as they are aliens. If this amendment is adopted, it will be impossible to deport any alien when more than five years subsequent to his arrival have elapsed, because by the terms of this section he will have acquired the privileges of an American citizen, so far as the immigration law is concerned.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I yield. Mr. SABATH. The gentleman means the deportation of those prostitutes, and so on, in accordance with an act which we passed, which I, together with the gentleman from New York Mr. Bennett], succeeded in passing in the Sixty-first Congress. Is not that true, I will ask the gentleman? Mr. GARDNER. That is right.

Mr. SABATH. And the same proviso was drafted by me. Mr. GARDNER. It is in section 19 of this bill.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to have any amendment put through that will permit the permanent residence of prostitutes and procurers; but the gentleman knows that there is real hardship in admission to citizenship through the naturalization courts on the part of many aliens who sincerely desire to become citizens. Can not the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] meet the objection in regard to prostitutes and procurers that my colleague makes, and if it can not meet that objection, why can it not?

Mr. GARDNER. Of course, the gentleman's suggestion is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows that females can not apply for citizenship.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, yes, they can; and so can the procurers.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Then why not expressly say, "excepting the prostitutes and procurers"?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I think that would be dangerous.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. We will join with you in remedying that defect. Will you not join with us on the rest

Mr. GARDNER. No; of course I shall not. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which the Clerk has in his possession.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment the words, "and has declared his intention to become a citizen," so that the amendment to the amendment will read, "or one who has not resided continuously in the United States for a period of at least five years and has declared his intention to become a citizen."

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in respect to this amendment, as suggested to be amended, that if a person comes to this country and declares his intention to become a citizen and is for any reason called out of the country within the five-year period there ought not to be anything in the law which would prohibit him from reentering the country unless there was something in his life which justified his exclusion. It would be unfair to say that a man who has declared his intention to become an American citizen and has lived here during the period of five years and was unable to complete his citizenship during that period and happened to be called out of the country before he had been able to complete his citizenship ought not to be permitted to enter this country. It would be a great hardship, a great injustice, and there is no reason, if we want to be fair in the enactment of the law that we now have under consideration, we should make the fullest possible provision to protect men who do want to become citizens of the United States and have declared their intention to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. MADDEN].

The question-was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. not know that the gentleman was through. I wanted to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be heard on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the right to be heard. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the a

I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, at the end of the amendment, the words "and has declared his intention to become a citizen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] is recognized.

Mr. BURNETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to that, because it seems to me it makes it ridiculous.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The House has voted, or, rather, the committee has voted, and a division was demanded. I make the point of order that the only thing before the House is the division on the vote, on the declaration of the Chairman, on the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. GARDNER. The negative had not been put.
Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; it had.
Mr. GARDNER. I leave that question to the Chair.
Mr. MADDEN. The Chair declared the amendment carried. Mr. MANN. Where a division is asked after a viva voce vote and debate has not been closed, debate is in order until the negative is put on the division. If the gentleman from Kentucky will think for a moment, he will remember that to be the fact.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no memory of anything of the kind. When a vote is had, in the absence of a division the Chair states the result of the viva voce vote, and that determines the result. Now, to say that a division can be demanded and thereby open up the debate is a proposition I never heard of before.

Mr. MANN. That is the parliamentary rule which the gentleman will find in Jefferson's Manual, because when a division is demanded there is no final vote until the negative is taken on that division. Of course if debate had been closed, that would be another proposition, but debate had not been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between the words "United States"-

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman can offer

Mr. BURNETT. A division had been ordered. Mr. SHERLEY. Now the gentleman is taking the other side of his own point of order. The gentleman wanted to open the matter up in order to debate it and I wanted to close it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask for the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARDNER. Is this a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois on my right [Mr. Sabath] or a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois on my left [Mr. MADDEN 1?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. This is a substitute for the matter before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this is offered as a substitute for the two pending amendments.

Mr. GARDNER. Has the Chair considered the parliamentary effect of that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to offer a sub-

Mr. GARDNER. He has a right to offer a substitute for either one of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has a right to offer a substitute for the two amendments.

Mr. GARDNER. I think not.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks otherwise. the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] can be perfected first before the substitute is put, but that does not prevent the gentleman from New York from offering a substitute for the whole matter. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between the words "United States" and the word "That," on line 7, page 1, the following: "Nor shall it include anyone who has continuously resided in the United States for a period of five years and who has, under the naturalization laws, declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, and who is not subject to deportation or exclusion for any immoral or criminal act, as in this act provided.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I have heard some criticism from the gentleman from Alabama upon the amendments that have been offered. To meet such criticism, I have offered The effect of the substitute will be that if one this substitute. who declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States and who resided continuously in the United States for a period of five years, and who has not committed, either on the other side or this side of the water, any immoral or criminal act for which he could have been either excluded or deported under the law, then the term "alien" as used in this bill shall not apply.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I want to ask the gentleman if he uses the word "continuously" or "continually" in his amendment?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. "Continuously." Those who were admitted into this country, took up their habitation here, remained in the United States for five years, committed no act on the other side which would have subjected them to exclusion, or immoral or criminal conduct, and who did not commit any crime or immoral act for which they could be deported, ought not be subjected to the hardships that frequently come to aliens who have not gone through such five years' actual residence in this country and are free from all immoral or criminal taint.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman from Missouri rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard in opposition to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a misconception as to what the amendment will do to existing law. What the gentleman proposes to do is to amend the law as we have had it for many years. As the law stands to-day if a man comes here and lives with us for 10 years and then goes back to Italy, before we readmit him to the United States we have the right to ask him, "Are you a contract laborer? Are you diseased? Are you a pauper?"

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?
The Supreme Court has simply said that that is the law and not that it ought to be the law; and we are simply trying to write a milder law than the present law.

Mr. GARDNER. I have not said anything to the contrary.
Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is referring to this as the existing law and bringing in a Supreme Court declaration, saying that it ought to be the law.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not think the gentleman has listened to what I said.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. That is one thing that I

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed. I was trying to explain to the House that under existing law, if an alien goes abroad to-day, he goes at his own risk. When he comes back we say. "Are you diseased, are you a contract laborer, are you a pauper?" Now comes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle], who proposes that we shall no longer be permitted to question the returning alien. He insists that we must give an alien who has for a few years resided here the same privileges as we accord to a citizen of the United States returning homeward. If the alien is diseased, if he has tuberculosis, if he is a contract laborer, we must nevertheless admit him to our shores.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARDNER. That is the whole effect of your amendment. You remove resident aliens who may travel abroad from the operation of this law. Obviously you remove them from the operation of section 3, which seeks to exclude diseased aliens and contract laborers. American citizens have the right to enter this country whether they are diseased or not and whether they are contract laborers or not. You seek to give resident aliens the same privilege as American citizens.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that even the advocates of this bill will vote for the proposed amendment if they could all understand what it really contemplates. Let us take a An immigrant who has taken every legal step concrete case. to become a citizen of this country by having filed his appli-cation in the proper court is called abroad for some reason before he can complete the process of becoming a citizen, and while abroad contracts innocently some sort of a disease. He may be run over by a railroad train while traveling abroad, when he gets back to our country, unless this amendment is adopted, he would be excluded because physically defective, although he may have established a business in this country, and although his application for citizenship is pending in the courts. Therefore, unless this amendment be adopted, it would be a great hardship for many who really need our protection. I hope sincerely that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the discussion of this proposed amendment does not reach the real question involved. For instance, this is a definition of the word "alien":

That the word "alien" whenever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States.

Then the substitute proposes to take out of the definition of an alien a person who has lived here "continuously" for five years and who has made an application for citizenship. Certainly such definition of an "alien" should include any individual who is not a citizen. All persons who are not citizens should be regarded as "aliens," and therefore, as it reaches the question of definition. Let matching the rest think the the question of definition, I do not think the amendment should be adopted, because when a man becomes a citizen under the Supreme Court decisions you can not limit that citizenship unless it is upon some act performed by the person. So that citizenship is in the nature of a vested right, and yet you give such vested right to a man who is not a citizen, either naturalized or natural, but you give him that vested right because he has resided here for five years.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Oh, no-and who has declared his intention to become a citizen.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Wait until I get through-and who has declared his intention to become a citizen. Certainly you ought not to take out of the definition of what an "alien is a man who does not meet all of the obligations of citizenship. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In some States of the Union men who have declared their intention to become citizens are permitted to vote. Is not that true?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is true in some States

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. In a moment. The question of State law relating to the matter of suffrage, where one is presumed to come from some other State, and who does come within the immigration law, is an entirely different question. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that an immigrant can file his declaration to become a citizen the day

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I rather believe he can. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. If he does file it the day he lands, is he not likely to become a pretty good citizen?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That does not necessarily follow

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. If he is keen enough to become a citizen the first day he lands, and makes application on that day, is he not made of the right kind of stuff to make a good citizen?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But he should not be included within the class of citizens referred to in the definition of an alien. This section relates only to the definition.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Surely. Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It does not relate to the question of exclusion, but to the question of definition, and you ought not to upset all of the decisions of the courts for years in order to affect the question of exclusion. If you are in favor of any exclusion at all, if you are in favor of any legislation that will distinguish between a foreigner or an alien and a citizen, you certainly ought not to have the substitute offered here anyway.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman will recollect that this definition applies only to this act.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It is a definition of an alien and a citizen.

Mr. SABATH. It is for the purpose of this act alone, and for no other purpose at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make a statement. few moments ago the Chair made a ruling on a point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley]. The parliamentary situation was this: The Chair had put the affirmative side of a question, and also the negative side, and the Chair had announced the vote, the Chair stating that he thought after having done that it would be proper to recognize gentle-men to further debate the question which had been put. The Chair upon examination finds this authority, and this is the only authority he does find. In Jefferson's Manual, section 39, it is said:

After the Speaker has put the affirmative part of the question, any Member who has not spoken before to the question may rise and speak before the negative be put, because it is no full question until the negative part be put.

The Chair thinks, under that authority, the Chair was in error in overruling the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky

Mr. MANN. Before the Chair makes the ruling to that effect. permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when a division is demanded and a viva voce vote is taken and vacated and the question has to be resubmitted, the rule has been-and it has been annunciated more than once from that chair-the viva voce vote having been vacated, debate is in order then until the negative is put.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois furnish the Chair the authority for that?

Mr. MANN. I am not sufficiently interested to take the time to look it up, I will say to the Chair.

Mr. BURNETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. What is the parliamentary status of the question? I asked for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] offered an amendment, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered an amendment, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] offered a substitute. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were-ayes 55, noes 68.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman who proposed this amendment as to what it will do if adopted, and I am very sure the gentleman would not wish this adopted if he fully understood what it will accom-Turning to page 8, the literacy section, if this amendment is adopted it will prevent any alien under the present definition, a man who has lived here five years, and declared his intention to become a citizen—will prevent him from send-ing abroad for any member of his family if such member of his family can not comply with the literacy test. That section

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish.

And then a proviso is made in favor of any alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, permitting him to send for his family, but where would it leave this man that you are now trying to protect? He would be neither an alien nor a citizen, and the proviso would not apply to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

I will.

Why can not we attend to that when we Mr. SHERLEY.

mr. SHERLEY. But we will reach that.
Mr. LENROOT. I am speaking of the definition.
Mr. SHERLEY. But we will reach that.
Mr. LENROOT. This is only one of the results that would happen from the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The bill has not been passed. We can not reach them all at one time.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, I will say to the gentleman, but I do not believe these gentlemen would care to press the amendment and take the chance on doing grievous injury to hundreds of thousands of aliens under the present definition of the law. do not think they would take the chance that that would be remedied later on, because if it was not remedied it would cut them out from the protection given by this bill itself as it now

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman in reference to just what this means concerning the Philippine Islands? What will be the effect? The bill states this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the general government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said government. I as-

Mr. BURNETT. That is existing law.

Mr. MANN. I assume that means the Philippine Legislature, not the United States Government.

Mr. BURNETT. That is my understanding, and that is the way it has been construed, as I understand, by the department.

Mr. GARDNER. That is the act of February 6, 1905. Mr. MANN. What will be the effect, then, if the Legislature of the Philippine Islands does not provide appropriate legisla-tion? I take it this in effect is intended to leave to that legislature the determination whether this bill, if enacted, shall be enforced.

Mr. BURNETT. My understanding is we have provided for it, and that it is in effect now in the present law; and I should think it would continue in effect, just as it is now, in this law.

That may be. I asked for information. Mr. BURNETT. That is my opinion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURNETT. That is my opinion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every allen, including allen seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle or carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who have in accordance with law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States or on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entrance in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States on other manner fo

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, strike out the words "including alien seamen."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very unfair to charge a poor sailor, who enters a port and stays there for a week, $5. When he comes into the port of New York or any other port of the country he spends his money. we prevent him from doing so by imposing a tax of $5 on him? That is a plain question. I think that such a provision is unfair to those who go out to sea, and upon whom we all depend so much. When he comes into port we should let him spend his $5 instead of taxing him that amount.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman entirely misinterprets the proposition. It is not intended to tax seamen who merely come off of a vessel temporarily with the expectation of returning to the vessel. It does not do that.

Mr. LEVY. This says so.

Mr. BURNETT. No. We have a provision further on in the bill for that. It has been found that ships have been actually engaged in bringing aliens over as sailors. And it has been held by our courts that an alien seaman would escape the examination and escape the head tax and escape all the restric-tions the law threw around other aliens. Now, this is for the purpose of remedying that. We have several sections toward the end of the bill requiring either ship lists or manifests of all the crew, those given the protection required from the steamships against this kind of desertion. Now, they may be admitted, however, just like any other alien who appears regularly, and this is for the purpose of guarding against the desertion from ships, and levying and collecting a tax of $5 for every alien, including every alien seaman regularly admitted, as provided in this act. That is all. This requires that a man who gets in and gets in to stay will be required to pay just like anybody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 3 to 6, inclusive, strike out the proviso.

Mr. MOORE. This is offered for the purpose of perfecting the bill. I did not notice it before. There seems to be no necessity for that proviso, because it applies to aliens who are not admitted, and of course no head tax would be levied upon an alien who is not admitted. All that is provided for in the ear-lier part of section 2, lines 14, 15, and 16. The proviso in this instance seems to be without meaning.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not catch the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MOORE. The point is, there is no meaning to that proviso, since no head tax would be charged against an alien who is not admitted, that being provided for in the early part of the section.

Mr. GARDNER. Aliens are admitted into Guam and Hawaii. Mr. MOORE. The proviso that is to be stricken out, as mentioned in the amendment-and I am offering it more for the purpose of perfecting the bill than otherwise-is:

Provided further, That in the cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall, upon application, be refunded to the alien.

There will be no head tax imposed upon such an alien.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is mistaken. The head tax is a lien on the vessel or other transportation company which brings that alien. In the case of railroads on this continent the tax is paid by the alien to the transportation company as part of his fare. The amount received by the railroad company is paid to the United States, whether the alien is admitted or rejected. On the recommendation of the Bureau of Immigration we have provided that when an alien comes here by land he shall get his $5 back again provided he is rejected.

Mr. MOORE. To whom would the alien who is rejected pay

Mr. GARDNER. He would have already paid it to the transportation company which sold him his ticket.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think it ought to be made necessary for the alien to ask for that money? I notice you have the words "upon application." Should not that money be paid back to him as a matter of fact, so that he would not have to depend upon his knowledge or lack of knowledge of the law?

The alien who knows he can get it on application may get the $5, but the alien who does not know-and most of them are not likely to know about it—will never get it back; and surely, it seems to me, those words, "upon application," should be stricken out even if the section should not go out.

Mr. BURNETT. That is for the convenience of the Gov-Otherwise the Government would not ernment employees. know where he is.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Give it to him when you are deporting him, when you are ordering him back.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose that money were paid into the Treasury and the man has gone.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The Government knows where he is when it is deporting him. It is not fair to take his money away and not let him in.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language of section 2, page 2, lines 14, 15, 16, and 17. Beginning with line 17, it says:

The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle.

Now, the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray] seems to be very pertinent, because if the tax goes into the Treasury I contend it will not be refunded at all if the man is required to hunt up the collector, or if there should be no collector to hunt up the master, the agent, the owner, or the consignee of the vessel or conveyance. He would have great difficulty in getting it.

Mr. GARDNER. The law does not say that the tax shall be collected from every alien, but that it shall be collected for every alien, and that it "shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come." The amount is a lien against the transportation line.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Does it not make it any easier to pay it back to him without his application?

Mr. GARDNER. The two gentlemen are talking about two different things. In a minute I shall take up the question as to the necessity of requiring that the rejected immigrant must make an application as a prerequisite to the return of his head-

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman explain how it would operate in the case of an alien who comes from contiguous territory and is required to pay the head tax? In the event of the money being paid into the customhouse, how will it be refunded

Mr. GARDNER. It will be refunded to him by the Government. Please listen while I read the recommendation of the Department of Commerce and Labor on this subject. The department submitted a draft for a new immigration law two The explanation accompanying the draft contained years ago. these words:

A provision is inserted also for the refund of head tax exacted on account of aliens applying at the land boundaries; this to avoid complaints which arose under the act of 1903 from the collection of head tax on aliens who were rejected at the land boundaries, etc.

We have adopted the exact words recommended by the department, unless I am mistaken, in its draft of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts move to strike out the last two words?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

GARDNER] is recognized in his own right.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. The money having been collected by the steamship company or the railroad company, and having been paid into the Treasury of the United States, would the applicant for that $5 to be refunded apply to the Treasury or to the Department of Labor? Because if he has to apply to the Treasury he will have a difficult process to go through. If he has to apply to the Department of Labor the thing might be simplified. The question I put to the gentleman is this: If this money goes into the Treasury, this $5—a small amount paid by an alien residing at a distance—will he not have little chance to get it back without an act of Congress?

Mr. GARDNER. The head tax is paid to the collector of customs at the port or customs district to which the alien shall come, and the law provides that "if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto."

Mr. MOORE. Will the Treasury agent pay that money back without some authority?

Mr. GARDNER. We assumed that the law officers of the department drew the proper language for accomplishing their purpose, and we adopted their exact language.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARDNER. I want to answer my other colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray] first. He has waited patiently, and he has brought forward the question as to why the alien should be required to make application to have his money re-I am a little puzzled how to reply. Frankly, I say to the gentleman that it is impossible for anyone to keep in mind the reason for the insertion of each clause in this bill.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. As an original matter Mr. GARDNER. One moment. In conference last year, when this change was suggested, we took the matter up with Mr. Parker, law officer of the Immigration Bureau. Inasmuch as Mr. Parker originally drafted this provision, we questioned him about it.

im about it. I have totally forgotten his answer. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Then let us treat it independently as a matter of right and wrong.

Mr. GARDNER. As a matter of right and wrong I should prefer to trust to the decision of the conference committee and Mr. Parker, after they had given the matter thought, rather than trust to the insufficient consideration of Members of Congress who never heard of this particular provision until this

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes; but it is our business to write this law. It is not our business to follow blindly the Solicitor of the Department of Labor. Mr. GARDNER. That is very true.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Let us try it out independently as a matter of right and wrong. Is it right to give back the head tax to an immigrant who happens to know he can get it back upon application, and to withhold it from an immigrant who does not know he can get it back upon application?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not tell the gentleman whether he is correct or not. I am willing to admit that I find some difficulty in answering questions as to the reason for every word in a bill of 57 pages. I remember distinctly that this question was raised a year ago in the conference between the Senate and House on the immigration bill which President Taft later on vetoed. We had plenty of time to examine the matter. consulted with the department, and some reason was given us for inserting those words. I confess I can not remember what that reason was, but I shall not vote to strike out those words solely because on their face they seem to be superfluous,

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Massachusetts who has just taken his seat a question for my information. Apparently the paragraph now under discussion treats an alien from foreign contiguous territory differently from an alien coming from territory not contiguous. I should like to ask the gentleman why the distinction is made with regard to the refund of the tax?

Mr. GARDNER. The reason is this: Aliens coming by rail pay their head tax in addition to their fare. Aliens coming from Europe pay their head tax as part of their fare. Under the present law the tax is refunded, as I understand it, to steamship companies, who claim a refund in the case of rejected allens for whom they have paid the head tax. When a steamer arrives in New York it has on board a great many aliens as well as a great number of citizens of the United States. The steamship companies average the passage price, and aliens and citizens pay the same amount. You or I coming into the United States by sea would pay the same passage money as an allen would pay. For each alien the steamship company would pay a head tax into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Four dollars.

Mr. CARDNED Town 1.1.

Mr. GARDNER. Four dollars.

Mr. SABATH. And under this new law it will be $5.

Mr. GARDNER. Four dollars, and under the new law it will be $5. Now, the committee believed that the European immigrant is not specifically charged with this head tax, and, more-over, it is impossible to ascertain how much in reality the European immigrant pays for head tax, inasmuch as he pays no greater steamship fare than the returning citizen of the United States.

We felt that the immigrant coming by sea direct from Europe stands upon a different footing from the immigrant coming by rail. We therefore accepted the suggestion of the department and confined this new provision for repayment to those who had specifically paid their $4 extra in addition to their railroad

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a further question solely for informa-tion. If a railroad train is crossing the boundary, either on the north or south, it probably has on board passengers who are citizens of the United States and passengers who are aliens. Is there any difference in the fare those passengers pay on the railroad trains for the same accommodation?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; unless the alien has been domiciled one year in Canada or Mexico, in which case he is exempt.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Why should he be exempt for that reason?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. How is that fact ascertained? For instance, I myself have been across the Canadian line, and when I came back no questions were asked me.

Mr. GARDNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I was not aware that I paid any more or less railroad fare than any other passenger.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is mistaken. There a printed lists of questions. I myself came across the Canadian line very recently. There are printed blanks that have to be filled out.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts who has the floor, I want to say that I have crossed the border from Mexico a hundred times or more, and I have never failed to respond to a printed list of interrogatories as to my nativity, citizenship, and so forth.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I will state that the last time I came from Canada to this country no such questions were presented to me or to any of the others in the party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "upon application," in line 5, page 4. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, in line 5, by striking out the words "upon applica-

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make it so that the head tax will be refunded to all aliens who may be deported. The bill, as reported by the Committee on Immigration, provides that in cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected the head tax collected shall, upon application, be refunded to the alien.

Some aliens may know about this provision of the law and be wise enough to apply for the $5 head tax to be refunded, but a good many aliens will not know about the provision. They will not know anything except that they are being examined for admission and rejected. I have asked my colleague why it is that a discrimination of that sort is allowed to continue in this law. The only thing I can find out as a reason is that the solicitor of the Department of Labor, who apparently drafted this bill, says that it ought to be in there. As one of the Representatives in this Chamber, I am not willing to abdicate my legislative function and allow the solicitor or anybody else to exercise that function. If there is some good reason that can be advanced why this provision should be made, I may be willing to withhold my amendment to strike it out. I say to you that the only argument I have heard is that the solicitor of the Department of Labor says that the words ought to be in, and that last year the conferees would not agree to strike out these words.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. OLDFIELD.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Does not the gentleman think the words might be left in in order to make up a good record?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. What does the gentleman

Mr. OLDFIELD. When a man is refunded his money if he asks for it, there will be an application for its return—

Mr. MURRAY of Massachuetts. Then let him sign a receipt.

Mr. OLDFIELD (continuing). So that the officer may know that he is entitled to a return of the money.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is confusing a receipt with the application for a refund. The gentleman knows the difference, does he not?

Mr. OLDFIELD. It seems to me that they might as well apply for a return of it as not to apply; and why should they

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Let us suppose a case. The gentleman and I are immigrants and we are both rejected. Let us suppose he knows about this law and I do not, because he knows so many things that I do not.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. He will admit that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Of course he will admit it. [Laughter.] The gentleman knows the law and so will get back his $5. I do not know the law and I go off without mine. Does the gentleman think that is fair?
Mr. OLDFIELD. No; it is not fair.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. That is what happens under the law as it is now.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Does not the gentleman think that the money would be refunded unless an application is made?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Oh, the gentleman gets a lot of money paid him that he does not apply for. A man that owes him money sends him a check.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They do not send me a check; they usually send me a bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. And especially, as the gentleman near me suggests, they do not send it to him if he does not know that they owe it to him.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. May I suggest an amendment which I think would cover the objection urged by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I would be willing to agree to an amendment.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. To provide for an application which must be furnished to him, and then there will be a record, and at the same time the immigrant will not be buncoed by this generous Government of ours?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I do not care how it is done. I would rather have it done by the committee than to do it myself, for then I would know that it would be done. But now all they say is that the Solicitor of the Department of Labor says that these words ought to remain in. The conferees said that they ought not to be stricken out, and my colleague says that he does not know anything more about it than that. That is not a fair statement of the case. The gentleman and I as fellow Representatives have our share of the responsibility of drafting this legislation and putting it through in a proper way. We can not go back to our districts and say that that might be an injustice, but the Solicitor of Labor wanted it that way and we had to leave it so. Our people will not accept that excuse. This is a provision in the law to pay one man because he knows that it is the law and to withhold the payment from the other man because he does not know it is the law

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. These words were put in the bill for a purpose. That purpose is to relieve the Government from the unnecessary burden and expense of running after aliens who have been rejected and sent back to a foreign country.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BROCKSON. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Do they have to run after them at the time they are deporting them? They are in custody, are they not?

Mr. BROCKSON. The money might not be where he could get it at that time.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Let them give it to him at the time he is in custody.

Mr. BROCKSON. Will the gentleman ask a question, if that is what he desires to do?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. My question is, Do they have to run after the immigrant while he is in custody to be deported?

Mr. BROCKSON. The man that has him in custody does not have the money in his possession.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. He could have it in his possession, could he not?

Mr. BROCKSON. No; the deputy marshal is not a cashier.
Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The deputy marshal does not deport him; it is the immigrant official that deports him.

Mr. BROCKSON. The deputy marshal?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachuetts. Do not the immigration authorities deport them?

Mr. BROCKSON. They do. Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. And could not the Immigration Department pay the extra $5 at the time of deporta-

Mr. BROCKSON. It could do a great many things. Has the gentleman another question?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Yes; I have that question still unanswered.

Mr. BROCKSON. What is that? Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Whether or not the Immigration Department could not pay back this money at the same time it was deporting the aliens?

Mr. BROCKSON. It might, if it collected the money and kept it in hand at the same place for that purpose.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. BROCKSON. I am not willing to assume that this Government is going into the business of robbing unfortunate aliens of $5 who come into this country.

Mr. GORDON. That is what they are trying to do now, is it

Mr. BROCKSON. No; they are not. Undoubtedly, if a man is deported the Government will pay back the $5 to every man deported if he can be found at the time. The Government will give him an opportunity to request the payment. It will not try to shirk that duty; but, on the other hand, the Government officials will undertake to seek the man to pay him. Take the case of some fellow who rushes off and goes back to the other country and this $5 is left in the hands of an officer, then you would impose upon the Government the duty of keeping the $5 and seeking him out at the expense, perhaps, of many more dollars

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROCKSON. Yes. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Could not the Government devise a blank upon which the immigrant could place his name and his place of residence, where the money could be sent in case of refund?

Mr. BROCKSON. It could, undoubtedly, and he would get his $5. There would be no difficulty about that.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The department has no authority to pay back, save on application. That is in existing law. in the proposed bill. Why not make it plain, so that the Secre tary of the Department of Labor may provide a blank such was suggested, and which the gentleman says would be all right, and then the Government, in the event of refund, could send the money to the alien at the address specified in the

Mr. BROCKSON. When he had done that he would have complied with all the requirements. This bill does not require him to make a written application, but any application in person or through a friend would be sufficient.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But why put the burden upon the alien to get back his money through a formal application, when he may not know that he is entitled to get it back?

Mr. BROCKSON. Why put the burden on the Government to search after the alien?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It might all be regulated by a printed

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BROCKSON. Yes.
Mr. GARDNER. Suppose, on page 4, after line 5, after the word "application," these words were inserted "upon a blank which shall be furnished him," so that it would read:

The head tax collected shall, upon application upon a blank which shall be furnished him, be refunded to the alien.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] has just been to the telephone to ascertain the views of Mr. Parker, the solicitor of the department, upon this question, and he has just returned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware

[Mr. Brockson] has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if I may have five minutes, I think I can explain what the Immigration Department de-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that he be permitted to proceed for

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Alabama begins, the intention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is no doubt very good, but the difficulty is that the language which the gentleman seeks to employ will not reach the trouble that I think we all must concede

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why not?
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Not the form which is now suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The intention of the gentleman is to correct the evil.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is that there shall be provided and handed to the rejected alien at the time he is rejected-

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, that is all right.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A blank form on which to prepare his application, which is notice to him that his money will be refunded.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If you put it that way, I am content. Mr. SLAYDEN. That is precisely what the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts means.

Mr. BROCKSON. But the alien may be rejected because he can neither read nor write, and that would be imposing upon him an additional burden, which would be unnecessary

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have just called up the attorney for the Immigration Bureau, and he says, as the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] was saying as I went out, substantially, that the reason for that was a matter of bookkeeping as much as anything else.

Along the borders of the other side we have ports of entry where these people come in. We have an arrangement with the railroad companies to collect this head tax and then the alien The railroad companies sometimes do not settle up for some time, make returns, and make their statement. Now, for the purpose of getting at the alien, thinking that they might lose him in the shuffle, they require him to make application, and I inquired further whether there was any objection to requiring that this blank be furnished the alien, and he said none whatever, so that the suggestion of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], if it is satisfactory all around, can be agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen are under the impression that the aliens themselves pay this tax to the different authorities. This is not so. This tax is really paid by the immigrant to the steamship company, and the steamship company then settles with the Government. This section of the bill provides, too, that the tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come. Now, that money is to be paid to the collector of the port. These allens, as a rule, are within the port, but they are denied admission to our country; therefore this provision for a head tax applies to all aliens who are rejected as well as those who are admitted. Last year there were nearly 20,000 rejected, and I venture to say that the steamship companies have had returned to them by the Government every dollar that they paid in as a head tax on these aliens; but how are we to know how many or how few of these rejected immigrants really had refunded to them by the steamship companies the amount of this head tax? Now, what we are interested in is that the money shall not be kept by the steamship companies, but that it shall be returned to the unfortunate immigrants who are denied admission. Frequently they have expended practically their entire savings to purchase a ticket to this country, and then, after undergoing many hardships, they reach the end of their journey only to be turned back, often without cause or justification.

They should at least have returned to them this head tax which they have been obliged to pay, and which to them means a great deal. I do not believe we should legislate in favor of leaving it to the steamship companies. Surely, in justice to these aliens they should not be deprived of the amount they have been forced to pay as a head tax, when in fact they have been denied admission, It is for the reasons that I have stated above that I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as well as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island, should be adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SABATH. I will.
Mr. GORMAN. If it is a fact that this money is paid by the alien to the transportation company, why should we legislate on that matter at all? Is it not a matter of contract between the alien and the steamship company, and is it not up to him to see that he gets his money back from the steamship company, and is it not a matter with which this Congress should not have anything at all to do?

Mr. SABATH. As a rule the alien is informed that the $4 head tax goes to the Government. In a great many instances, however, he is not so informed and he does not know enough to make application for this refund. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that it is our duty to protect these people and make it as easy as possible for them to receive that which is theirs, that which they are entitled to, and which often means much to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois shows that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts ought not to be adopted. From the very statement it shows that the alien paid to the steamship company as part of his passage the extra $5. Now, there is no record of that except he has paid out his money to enter the United States. Where is there any record that he is going to get his money back; and, as stated by the gentlemen, why should we legislate and put in a special provision? We say the steamship company requires an extra $5 from the alien when he imports him and that we want to legislate to have him get that $5 back.

And is it not for the sole protection of the alien that this amendment is engrafted upon this bill, that when he makes his application on the ground that he has been rejected, there is the rejection, his application for admission, and here is his application for the return of the $5, and he will get his money without any question is the control of the $5. without any question if this law is adopted as it is, rather than to turn it over to the steamship company to handle? And this applies particularly to those who come here, as provided in the bill, from contiguous territory. Contiguous territory of the United States only applies to Canada and Mexico, so far as the bill is concerned, and when coming from Canada ought they not to be able to make their written application for the money when undoubtedly they live over there, and so can receive their $5? It is paid at one place and the record is made of it, and when it is returned it comes from another source. There must be some bookkeeping in regard to this matter, and it ought to be done. It is a clean and clear protection of the alien, assuring him that he may get his money back, and certainly that is no hardship. Certainly the man coming from Canada will know that he is entitled to have his $5 when he is rejected, and the same is true with the man from Mexico. It seems to be a sympathetic argument that is being made here that because we require the $5 fee for the purpose of keeping up the system the alien ought not to be provided for and the Government ought to send out agents to hunt him up to give him his $5 back

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 5, after the word "application," insert the words "upon a blank which shall be furnished and explained to him."

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I may say that substitute is entirely satisfactory to me, because it does the very thing that I want to have done.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. It is satisfactory to us.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray] withdrawing his amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY!

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contaglous disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assault-

During the reading of the above the following occurred:

During the reading of the above the following occurred:

Mr. TOWNER. Could we by unanimous consent agree that we might take up separately these provisions? This is a very long section and refers to very many different matters. I am quite sure it would suit the convenience of many of the Members if by unanimous consent these clauses could be taken up instead of waiting until the whole section is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] asks unanimous consent to read the section by paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. I prefer that the entire section be read first, The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT | objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYES, Mr. GREGG, Mr. SABATH, Mr. BURNETT, and Mr. WALLIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, amend by inserting after the word "officials," in line 8, the following:
"Or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, was the gentleman from Alabama going to make any request or suggestion about the debate on this section?

Mr. BURNETT. I thought we would adopt the committee amendment before we did so.

Mr. MANN. If it can be done at all, it can be done now as well as at any other time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that no amendment is pending except the committee

Mr. MANN. But the committee amendment is debatable, and I have the floor, I will say to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. I just made the inquiry. I thought there might be some arrangement.

Mr. BURNETT. In regard to the literacy test, I should like very much to reach an agreement with the gentleman if I could. Of course it is regarded by gentlemen on both sides as the most important matter in the bill. For that reason I should not think it would be fair or just for me to attempt to take any advantage to cut off reasonable debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that after the amendment is offered the gentleman can arrange about the time.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how many amendments may be offered to this section, but I wondered whether it would be practicable to agree upon a time for debate on the section.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I would have to object to that,

Mr. BURNETT. I would agree to that. Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman mean to agree upon the total time to be expended on that section?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then if that is done, would not the time spent upon these amendments be in the nature of a new general

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. I make the point of order that the discussion is not germane to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. This discussion relates to "unlawful destruction of property," and that is what the amendment is about-unlawful destruction of talk. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the discussion

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the gentleman objects, I shall not

Mr. BURNETT. Has there been objection made by the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] makes a point of order, and the Chair will have to sustain it. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, insert in line 16, after the word "character," the follow-g: "or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, in line 4, insert after the word "chemists" and before the word "engineer" the word "civil."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Staf-

FORD | is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, or anybody connected with the committee, why he singles out civil engineers, and not electrical or mining or other engineers? As reported, it says "civil engineers." Why make the exception as to civil engineers when mining and electrical engineers are of the same grade and efficiency and are as much needed in this country as civil engineers?

Mr. BURNETT. The application was general before as to all engineers, and by that general application it would have admitted locomotive engineers and engineers of that class, and, as they were laboring people, we thought that would permit those to come into competition with the men who were earning their living in that line of business, and we thought it ought not to be general for that reason. Mr. STAFFORD. But, as I understand the gentleman, he has not answered my question at all. In fact, he has empha-sized the need of having the language of this amendment extended. There is no reason whatsoever why you should single out civil engineers and not extend it to technical and mining engineers, and electrical engineers, and mechanical engi-

Mr. BURNETT. Does not the gentleman think they would be embraced under the general terms "civil engineers

Mr. STAFFORD. No. No one would construe the words "civil engineers" as covering electrical or mining or mechanical engineers.

Mr. BURNETT. I see no objection to an amendment of that kind. It was proposed with a view to protecting the locomotive That is the reason we put that limitation in. engineers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "civil." My purpose is to eliminate that, because I do not see any need of singling out any one class of engineers.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to that, because that would let in locomotive engineers.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. I was going to make the suggestion that it would accomplish that purpose by saying "engineers other than locomotive engineers."

Mr. BUTLER. That might include stationary engineers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee or the members of the committee whether the words "technical engineers" would still keep out the class that the chairman of the committee objects to?

Mr. BURNETT. I think it would; although perhaps it might let them in. If you say "technical engineers," I am afraid of that term. I am afraid it might include a locomotive engineer I am afraid of or a stationary engineer, who might be regarded as a technical engineer. I do not know how that word would be construed.

Mr. TOWNER. Might the object the gentleman suggests be reached by using the word "graduate" instead of "civil" engineers? That would obviate all the difficulties and allow that class to come in.

Mr. STAFFORD. The suggestion is made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] to use the descriptive word "graduate" engineers.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is seeking to amend the provision which is said to be designed to exclude Asiatics other than Chinese.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not so advised.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will cast his eye upon line 22 he will find the words-

Persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization.

No one except a black man or a white man can be naturalized. This proposed amendment would enlarge the scope of the clause excepting certain classes of men of other colors. These exceptions correspond substantially with the exceptions included in the Chinese exclusion act. The word "graduate" engineer would not describe the status of a man educated as an engineer in India. Perhaps it would be appropriate to amend by the in-sertion of the word "professional" before the word "engineer." I do not know whether it would or would not be appropriate. I suggest this amendment because I find that the Bureau of Immigration, which prepared the list of professional occupations to be excepted from exclusion, suggested the inclusion of "engineers," with the following explanation:

The term "engineer" is here used, of course, in a professional sense. The committee felt that there was a doubt whether the word "engineer" would be interpreted as being used in the professional sense. So we inserted the word "civil." Would it not be possible to specify the kind of engineers whom we might admit as exceptions to the clause excluding all persons who can never become naturalized Americans?

Mr. STAFFORD. I should think the word "professional" would still include locomotive engineers.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. GARDNER. Why not have it "electrical, mechanical, mining, or civil?"

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer an amendment to insert after the word "civil" the words "electrical, mechanical, and mining."

Mr. BURNETT. I do not like the word "mining."
Mr. PETERSON. Do you not want to strike out the word "civil"

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "civil," the words "mechanical, electrical, and mining."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the adoption of this amendment, any more than I am in favor of the tion of this amendment, any more than I am in layor of the exemption of a number of those who are especially relieved from the operation of this law by this paragraph. What do we propose to do, now, if we pass this amendment? We propose to enlarge the scope of the professional men who may be admitted to this country as against common laborers. We admitted to this country as against common laborers. We propose to cater, now, to the tutored man, the instructed man, the college man, who can pass any kind of a literary test that this Government assumes to set up. What need have we in this country for any more civil engineers or mechanical engineers or electrical engineers than we have to-day? What need have we in this country to-day for any of them?

If you are going to par common and trenches, what need have we for any more ministers, religious trenches, what need have we for any more ministers, religious trenches, what need have we for any more ministers, religious If you are going to bar common labor that goes into the enough lawyers in this country now to do all the law business for the next 400 years. We have enough lawyers in this House to keep this country in turmoil to the end of time, if Congress continues in session. [Laughter.] Why do we want any more teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, or bankers? The Lord knows we have a surfeit of them now. If you bar the doors to those who would come here to do the drudgery, why open the doors to men from the colleges-educated men, professional men-and ask them to come and take a front seat and tell us how to run our Government and conduct our business and all our affairs? I do not think we want to widen the field to the professional men. I think we have done enough of that in this paragraph already. If the committee will pardon me for a breach of committee confidence, I myself am responsible for having stricken out the word "journalist." I am a newspaper man, or used to be and practiced nalist." I am a newspaper man, or used to be, and practiced the newspaper business. In those days a "journalist" was a man who lived up to the reputation of a newspaper man, but he did not work at it. He was a man who fattened upon the work of the active newspaper man. We do not need any more professionals in the United States. We have plenty of them now.

Mr. BROCKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. BROCKSON. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania favor admitting into this country all Chinese and Japanese laborers?

Mr. MOORE. I hope the gentleman will not press that question just now, because the gentleman from California has distinctly said that he does not want that issue brought into this discussion, and I will not add to his confusion by accommodating the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. BROCKSON. Then the gentleman refuses to answer my question?

Mr. MOORE. I refuse to add to the confusion of the gentleman from California and embarrass the Democratic administration that has enough trouble on its hands now besides this particular question.

Mr. BROCKSON. I am not asking about the Democratic administration. I am asking the gentleman for his views.

Mr. MOORE. The President and the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor have all they want to do now to settle that question.

Mr. BROCKSON. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania has more than he wants to do to answer the question.

I do not want to embarrass the administration. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on the amendment to the

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was lost.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the language on lines 15 and 16, page 4, of the bill. It is enumerating the excludable classes. It says, "persons who have been insane within five years previous," and then it says, "persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously." What is the use of the five-years' limitation if persons are excluded who have been insane at any time previously?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the difference is this: Insane persons are those who are insane when That is the class that is intended to be kept they come here. out there. The other is to reach those who have had spells of insanity at different times.

Mr. COOPER. But the word "previously" is used in both classes, and applies to the time before they arrive here. Five years is the first time, and then it says "at any time previously."

Mr. HAYES. I think that is in the present law.

Mr. GARDNER, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a misprint. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is correct. The existing law says " persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity recently," which would explain the discrepancy. I think it is a misprint, but I will look up the last year's bill to make

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 5, strike out the words "editors, journalists, bankers." The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was considered and agreed to. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all words that appear on page 7 from line 15 to 25, inclusive, and all that appear on page 8 from line 1 to 23, inclusive, and also the word "Territory," in line 24, the same composing the so-called literacy or educational test.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to discuss the amendment-

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from New York yield in order to see if an understanding can be had as to time allowed for debate on this amendment?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. My object in addressing the Chair was to ascertain what time we would take for the discussion of the amendment, which really appears to be the crucial question.

Mr. MOORE. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It was stated by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the gentleman from Alabama, that, after all, the literacy test is the principal feature of the bill on which discussion ought to be had and a liberal time allotted. That I understand to be the attitude of the gentleman from

Mr. BURNETT. I think we have had a pretty liberal discussion-seven hours. I said that I would not undertake to avail myself of the privilege to move the previous question until after we had had more than the usual time. agree to one hour.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not think that that is quite enough,

Mr. MOORE. I think we ought to have half an hour on this There have been a number of requests on this side for time

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There have been a number of requests on this side, too.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask whether the arrangement for time will deal only with the literacy test or the whole section?
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The amendment to the literacy test?

Mr. BURNETT. No; to the whole section. Mr. STAFFORD. I want to say to the gentleman that there are other provisions in this section to which we wish to offer

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this motion is intended to strike out certain language. Under the parliamentary rules we have a right to perfect the provision before the language is stricken out. I therefore offer an amendment to perfect the text.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman offers an amendment, would it not be well to have an understanding as to the time that will be occupied upon the literacytest provision

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But this does not refer to that at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge gentlemen until they can agree on an amount of time, and then he will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be now reported for the benefit of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, line 16, after the words "to wit" strike out all words down to and including "persecution," in line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt act or by discriminatory or oppressive laws or regulations."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I assume that that is not offered as an amendment to the amendment that I offered.

understand that to be the pending amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We have to perfect the text of provision before an amendment to strike it out is in order. The gentleman moves to strike it out, and the portion stricken out includes all that language down to line 23, and I offer this in order to perfect the text.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, not having been able to follow the reading very closely, I will ask the gentleman whether his amendment covers my amendment to strike out?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It is an amendment within the language to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma proposes an amendment to perfect the text of the bill and the gentleman from New York moves to strike out. It would be in order to perfect the text, the Chair thinks, before the motion to strike out is in order.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which, I believe, is substantially that offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I would like to have the amendment again re-

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

That is exactly my amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I thought that we yielded in order that the gentleman might have an amendment pending, until we could reach an agreement as to time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama and other gentlemen to the rule which provides that there shall be seven hours of general debate, and that afterwards the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Alabama on the question of whether or not he thinks the committee has a right to change a rule made by the House. Chair does not think so.

Mr. BURNETT. The rule provides that the bill shall be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Let the gentlemen agree on time, and not take it out of the five minutes that I am to have on my amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Would that mean that follow the rule as to the five-minute debate?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so. Would that mean that we would have to Mr. BURNETT. Whatever agreement we may make as to time would not conflict with that, that each speech should be limited to five minutes.

Then the gentleman would better ask The CHAIRMAN. unanimous consent that debate on this particular amendment offered by the gentleman from New York be confined to such time as may be agreeable.

Mr. BURNETT. That was the purpose that I was trying to get at.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the rule does not change the general rules of the House at all so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned, but we are to follow the same practice that is usually followed in the consideration of bills under the five-minute rule, and that is the practice followed in the consideration of any bill in the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will submit his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, we are trying to agree upon a time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma may be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I hope my time is not going on. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The discussion under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Murray], of course, will not come out of any time that will be agreed upon, I hope, between the gentleman from Alabama and this side. The CHAIRMAN. There has been no agreement yet made, and therefore it is impossible to take any time out.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If there are, Mr. Chairman, two principles above others in the theory and principle of our Government, it is that it is an asylum to protect every creed and faith, and along with that is the doctrine that every creed and every religious faith shall keep its hands out of the Treasury and no church or creed shall be favored by governmental administration. This provision of my amendment is merely to change the verbiage of the bill submitted by the committee in this, that the committee's provision would leave much in the discretion of the immigration officer. Certainly in matters of religion as little discretion as possible should be permitted in an officer who may himself have religious prejudices. This provision, if construed in the light of the committee's intention, would admit to this country the Jews, the Mennonites, and the Armenians. I for one do not want any immigration officer to possess a discretion whether those people shall be admitted.

I regret that in the discussion of this bill much religious feeling has been attempted to be used both for and against it. All that we as legislators should have to do with religion or that we should consider is its effect upon civilization, and under that we might include as wholesome to civilization every Christian creed or sect or church, and we must also include Judaism and the doctrines of Zoroaster, Buddha, We would not include Brahmanism or Moand Confucius. hammedanism. But, Mr. Chairman, when we consider from this standpoint these sects that would possibly be admitted by reason of persecution in Europe, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Jewish religion may not suit the most of us, but it is certainly a religion that looks toward a betterment of man-When Spain, in 1492, drove out of her country upward of 300,000 Jews, it then being the greatest country in Europe, it resulted in the deterioration of that country ever since. Whenever you find many Jews in a town you will find a live town. When they leave a town its prosperity, its thrift, its business energy and push is over. We have among the Jews less number in the poorhouse, the almshouse-less paupers; less number in the penal institutions and less anarchists, a more self-sustaining, self-governing citizenship than any other sect, creed, nationality, or race. Therefore I am for the Jew [applause] as an immigrant to this country. The Mennonites live unto themselves. They never disturb the country; they never encumber the courts. They add greatly to the sum of production, are self-sustaining, and make good citizens. The same may be said of the Armenian, and I want to make the language of this bill so clear that their admission will be beyond a question of a doubt. I do not want, as I said before, any discretion lodged in the mind of the immigration officer. I want this country to be truly an asylum for every religion that is wholesome to our civilization. I want it to be truly one established to protect and defend the liberty or the religion of I want it at the same time to see that no man's every man. religion gets its hand into the Public Treasury or receives favoritism at the hands of public officers or receives governmental favoritism.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment puts a great deal more

Mr. GREGG. Who did the Chair recognize?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas, but the gentleman from Massachusetts is a member of the committee and has begun-

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak in opposi-tion to the amendment. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma puts a great deal more discretion in the power of the immigration inspector than the clause which he seeks to supersede. The amendment which he offers is substantially that which was presented to the committee by Mr. Marshall, president of the American Jewish Society, except in one respect. The amendment of Mr. Murray of Oklahoma makes no provision for political refugees, whereas the amendment offered by Mr. Marshall, president of the American Jewish Society, included them. What does the gentleman from Oklahoma propose? He proposes that if an immigrant can prove to the Secretary of Labor or to the proper immigration officer— look at the discretion there—that he is coming here to avoid religious persecution of any kind, then he shall be admitted. Furthermore, the immigrant inspector is bound to regard alleged overt acts as well as alleged discriminatory or alleged oppressive laws or regulations as religious persecution.

Now, who is to determine whether the immigrant who is seek.

ing to come in here had an overt act of persecution committed against him or not? Obviously the immigrant inspector, to whom the alien tells his story of that overt act. Why it seems to me that, instead of lessening his discretionary powers, you are putting unlimited discretion into the hands of the immigrant inspector. Under the proposed amendment he must determine not only whether laws are, in fact, discriminatory or whether, in fact, oppressive, but also whether the acts complained of by the alien seeking admission into this country were, indeed, overt acts of oppression for religious reasons.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the real difference between the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma and the committee provision consists of just one word. The committee requires that the men who wish to plead that they are fleeing from religious persecution must prove to the proper authorities that that is their sole motive for coming to the United States. Now, that is the only practical difference between the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] and the bill as it We require that the would-be immigrant must show that he is solely fleeing from persecution. When this exception in behalf of those fleeing from religious persecution was first suggested eight years ago next June, at the time of the atrocious persecutions in Russia, it was proposed on the floor of this House by Mr. Littauer, of New York, speaking for the Jewish people. He proposed to apply the English statute and to except those fleeing from religious persecution.

If I recollect rightly, I called the attention of the House to the fact that the English law which was spoken of contained the word "solely." I regret to say that the Jews regard that word as destructive to the whole purpose of the exemption. To my mind it is a necessary safeguard. Any immigrant can come here and say to the inspection officer, "I fled from religious persecution." According to some people there is religious persecution going on in Bulgaria and elsewhere to-day. So long as religious persecution can be alleged to exist in his neighborhood, it is the easiest thing in the world for an immi-grant to say that it was persecution which drove him over here. stiff immigration laws are just as much in the interest of Jewish Americans as of anyone else. This whole discussion is proceeding on the supposition that Jews are asking special exemptions. I do not believe that they want any different treatment from what everyone else gets.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Gregg] is recognized.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have prepared an amendment substantially the same as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Mura-RAY], and I now desire to make a few remarks in support of the The law as it now reads is:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the literacy test, to wit, all persons who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping religious persecution.

Now, this amendment changes that, and the first important part of the change is to leave out the word "solely." The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] says that when a man comes from a country where it was claimed there was religious persecution it would be a very easy matter for him to say that he came because of that religious persecution. Why would it not be just as easy for him to say that he came solely because of that persecution, if he is going to perjure himself?

Why say, "solely for the purpose of avoiding religious persecution"? If he comes partly for that purpose and partly for the purpose of benefiting himself, and becoming a good citizen of this country, and partly to enjoy the freedom, both religious and political, thrown around the citizens of this country, why should he not be permitted to come? If he has in his mind any other purpose, if he comes partly because he loves this country, partly because he wants to breathe the free air of America, it would not be solely to avoid religious persecution, and he would have to be turned back, as the bill is now.

Then the next change is this

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield just for a

Mr. GREGG. Yes, sir. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is it not farcical to say that a man comes solely on account of religious persecution? Does it not follow that he comes to live here?

Mr. GREGG. It sounds ridiculous to say that he should be excluded because he comes partly for other purposes. That is what occurs to me.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I agree with you.

Mr. GREGG. Now, then, what do you mean by religious persecution? They persecute in different ways in different countries, some in one way and some in another, and this amendment simply enlarges the provision and the scope of the law so as to include every device and every means by which religious persecution is practiced.

In some countries or sections religious persecution is evidenced by overt acts, and if they want to flee from that they should be admitted here.

In other countries or sections they persecute by discriminatory and oppressive laws and regulations. If they come from a section where that method of persecution is resorted to, then our doors should be open to them. America has always been the asylum for the oppressed of earth. I have no patience with political intolerance. All good citizens abhor political persecutions. Let us say to the people of the world: "If you are religiously persecuted, by whatever means, we open our arms to you and offer to you an asylum of protection." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr.-Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Murray] would be a most dangerous one. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] said it would let in Assyrians, and that I am sure would be one of the worst lots that could be admitted. The gentleman's amendment simply allows an exemption from the illiteracy test. suppose the gentleman had reference to those whom we call I suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the gentleman had reference to those with the suppose the supp country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we were to strike out that word "solely" from the pending bill, that would open it up so that every mean peon in Mexico could escape the illiteracy test in coming here, because he would say there is a regulation in some little State-the language of the amendment is "discriminatory laws or regulations"—he can say there is some little neighbor-hood or some little State in Mexico in which is a regulation which says that no Protestant or that no Catholic shall be allowed to do such and such things. You can see how easy it will be to pick almost any kind of a pretext, the smallest kind, will be to pick almost any kind of a pretext, the smallest kind, for the purpose of emasculating the very provision that we want to pass in order to keep out that Mexican and Syrian crowd and all that class of people. The bill as it is framed amply protects those fleeing from religious persecution without the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But I am for your bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I know it; and I am glad that the gentleman is for it, because the gentleman is nearly always right. But he is dead wrong when he attempts to extend the provision in regard to religious persecution that we already have in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma will not help the Jewish people, and they are the ones, I reiterate again, that I especially desire to hold out open gates for more than any other people who are oppressed for religion's sake. Almost every single Jew over 16 years of age coming to this country can read the Yiddish Bible, and we put that provision in this bill and specified "Yiddish or Hebrew" in order to aid him to come in.

I believe it would be most hurtful and most dangerous to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, because it would let in a class of people along the American border in Mexico of whom 90 per cent are illiterates and who would be kept out by this bill. They are the very class of people that the railroads in the Southwest are bringing in by trainload lots to beat down the price of wages all over the country. That situation recently became so acute in Kansas that some of the labor people wrote me from Topeka and called my attention to the fact that one railroad company within the last few months had brought in several trainloads of Mexicans to work on some new road that they were building.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. I regret that I have not the time.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I want to correct the gentleman about Mexico. There is nothing in that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, yes; there is something in it. labor people said the railroads were bringing them over in trainload lots, and that in violation of the contract-labor law.

I complained to Secretary Nagel about it, and he said our inspectors there could not detect the violations of the contractlabor law. I went over and talked with the Commissioner General of Immigration, and he sent an inspector who is a gentleman in whom I have the utmost confidence, both as to his ability and his integrity. This inspector assured me that there was some kind of a collusion between those people, but it was hard to detect it. He stayed there for several months and studied the situation, and said he believed that they were coming in in violation of the contract-labor law, but the inspectors were not able to get proof sufficient to exclude them.

Now, if we make this provision, as to fleeing from religious persecution, more liberal than it is, we shall find those people from that border swarming in here and we will be unable to keep them out. We will find hundreds of Syrians coming in, claiming that there is some kind of religious persecution in their country, and that that is a part of the reason why they come. Although the main reason for their coming is to get better wages and take some other man's job away from him, yet if a part of the reason is because there is a little local persecution, or because there are some rules or regulations or laws that they do not like, they will say it is on account of their religion and come in, if the amendment prevails. It is a dangerous amendment, Mr. Chairman, and I hope it will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, there were-ayes 65, noes 77.

Mr. SABATH. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Mur-RAY of Oklahoma and Mr. BURNETT.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 73, noes 89.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I make the point of order that there is an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania before he can pass on the point of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I did not understand that the amendment was offered to the amendment offered by me, and unless

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell what the amendment is until he hears it read. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the period in line 3, page 8, section 3, the following:

"Provided further, That any man 35 years of age or more, accompanied by his wife and one or more sons or daughters under the age of 16 years, presenting evidence that he seeks to enter the United States with the intent to become a citizen of the United States and establish here a permanent home, shall, if otherwise admissible, be permitted to enter, whether able to read or not."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I make the point of order against the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Pennsylvania is endeavoring to perfect the section of the bill, and that he has the right to do that before the amendment to strike out is voted on.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, in this bill there are 27 reasons assigned for which any person seeking to enter our ports may be excluded. There is no doubt at all that as to the persons—the insane, the pauper, the criminal, and all the others—who are excluded by operation of those 27 reasons pretty much everybody will agree. But in order to still further restrict immigration another cause is assigned, and that is the restrict ininigration another cause is assigned, and that is the "literacy test"; and I suspect that is the crux of this whole situation. I suspect that public policy is not the end in view, but rather to restrict; and I regard the "literacy" test as a poor test of character and the qualities desirable in persons seeking citizenship.

Everybody knows that there are thousands of people who come into this country every year without the intention of becoming citizens. They can not be shut out for any of the 27 reasons, and the fact that they can read adds nothing to their qualifications. They are, as has been suggested, "birds of These men enter into competition with American passage." labor. They herd in camps, in tenements, handled in droves in a system of peonage, living as American labor can not live, and American labor is injured by that competition, and it is most natural that American labor should come to an American Congress in order to get relief from conditions that should not These swarms of undesirable people who are coming over to this country, who can not be excluded under the 27 reasons, you seek to exclude under the twenty-eighth reason, because they can not read. But the rule goes too far. It does not exclude an undesirable who may be able to read and it does exclude honest, desirable persons who can not read. I do not believe it is in the heart of the American workingman to exclude any other honest-hearted man who comes of an assimilable race, and who, pulling up his stakes in the old country with the intent to cast his lot here and become an American citizen, brings his family with him-I say I do not think it is in the heart of the American workingman to exclude an honesthearted, stalwart, and industrious man of that sort simply because he can not read.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HULINGS. Certainly.
Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman examined, at the foot of page 7, the exceptions which permit an alien to bring his father or grandfather, his wife, mother, grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes; the alien can do so if he himself can read and if he is otherwise admissible.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but if the daughter can read she can bring in her father if he is over 55 years old.

Mr. HULINGS. The gentleman does not seem to quite catch the idea that I intend in presenting the amendment. thousands of men who ought to be excluded because they are not valuable additions to our citizenship, but they are not paupers or criminals and so you can not exclude them, and you seek to exclude them because they can not read. Literacy is no test of Scholarship does not even imply honesty or sobriety. character. Your bill lets in the smart rogue and shuts out many an honest For among those who can not read there are many who would make valuable additions to our citizenship. My amendment proposes to allow an honest man, who may be 35 years old, accompanied by wife and children, coming here with the intent to become citizens, to come in and build his home here under the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, I do not object to reasonable restrictions upon the numbers of immigrants. They should not be allowed to the numbers of immigrants. come in faster than they can be assimilated, and the fact that in all our great cities they are segregated in Italian quarters and Jewish quarters and Slav and Hungarian quarters, maintaining the same habits and modes of living that they brought with them, shows they have been coming too fast. The facts show, too, that our laws have been too lax, admitting people of bad character.

But while I believe that as a matter of prudence we should restrict the number, I believe also that we should scrutinize more carefully the character of those admitted, and I do not believe that a mere "literacy test" will properly restrict the number nor furnish any sufficient guaranty of the character of those admitted.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted any more than I do the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, Judge Sabath. I move that all debate on this amendment now close.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it has been brought to my attention that this language might be misinterpreted by the administrative officers, in that they might hand the immigrant slips printed in a series of languages, to the confusion of the immigrant, and he might get the slip containing the language which he was unable to speak.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will

mr. BURNETT. I think that amendment is all right.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 12, strike out the second "the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "a" and transpose the other words so that the line will read: "the words printed in such language or dialect on the slip."

Mr. MOORE. I submit to the gentleman that this perfects the paragraph in view of the amendment already adopted. The slip to be handed to the immigrant is intended to be a slip in the language designated by him and not such a slip as would contain a variety of languages.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I think this time the gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken. I think it becomes clear now what is meant. The bill as we have it now provides that the 40 words must be printed in plain, readable type in some one of the various languages, and so forth. And then it goes on to say that the alien shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language—that is, one of the languages he might select.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct, and I will not press the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, in lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "are seeking admission to the United States" and insert "emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment relates to those aliens who shall be exempted from the literacy test. As the bill now reads exemption is made of aliens who prove that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution. Strictly speaking, and I do not know but broadly speaking, it would be impossible for any alien to make such a showing, namely, that he was seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution, because the whole world might be open to him except the country from which he emigrated, and therefore if that were so it would be impossible for him to prove that he was seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution. He might go to England or South America if he chose, The amendment I propose would strike out the words "seeking admission to the United States" and in lieu thereof insert "emigrated from the country of which he was last a permanent

Mr. GARDNER. I suggest to the gentleman that he should strike out the word "are."

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is in the amendment. Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman did not so state it just now.

Mr. LENROOT. So if he is emigrating from the country of which he was last a resident on account of religious persecution the literacy test shall not apply. It seems clear that that was the intention of the committee, and I sincerely hope the committee will accept the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. BURNETT. Did the gentleman use in his amendment the word "immigrate" or "emigrate"?

Mr. LENROOT. "Emigrate." Mr. GARDNER. Suppose the immigrant did not say he emigrated from any country, but was simply a refugee for temporary purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. This only exempts him from the literacy test; all other provisions of the bill would apply. That is all this does in any event.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague how a man at the port of New York could prove any more satisfactorily that he emigrated from any country because of religious persecution solely than he could prove that he came to this country solely for that purpose?

Mr. LENROOT. Because the one thing he would have to prove in case my amendment be adopted is that he emigrated from that country for that sole purpose. As the language now stands in the bill it is necessary for him not only to prove that, but that he seeks admission to this country for that sole pur-

Mr. COOPER. In either case the motive of the man is something exclusively within his own consciousness, and the ability to prove it or not to prove it is just as difficult in one case as it is in the other. It is a hidden secret motive, known only to himself.

Mr. LENROOT. But that argument goes not to the amendment, but to the subject itself, and my amendment certainly removes one element of proof that is now necessary for him to make under the paragraph as it stands.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman who offered the amendment whether that would not still leave the word "solely" in the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, it would; but it would limit it to proof that he emigrated from a country solely for that purpose, and it would not compel him to prove that that was his sole purpose in seeking admission to the United States. In other words, it is largely in favor of the immigrant.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the desire of the committee, of course, was to allow those admission who were fleeing from their country on account of religious persecution. My judgment is that the expression used by the committee would be so construed; but in order to have no doubt about it, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 17, after the word "stowaway," insert the words "if otherwise admissible."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the reason for this amendment is that if the bill passes as it is written it will give to the Secretary of Labor an extraordinary discretion in the matter of stowaways. His sympathies might be worked upon in certain cases where the stowaway is "not otherwise admissible." A stowaway, of course, ought not to be admitted to the country without scrutiny. A stowaway comes clandestinely, and he should not be permitted to enter without undergoing the same examination that other immigrants have to undergo. It might be possible that one not otherwise admissible having gotten in on a ship contrary to the regulations, could work on the sympathies of the Secretary of Labor and be admitted. It seems to me the Secretary ought not to have this discretion, and that the same lawful conditions that hold with regard to other immigrants should be applied to the stowaway.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman suggests that language after the second word "stowaway"?

Mr. MOORE. That is correct; after the second word "stowaway." The language I suggest is "if otherwise admissible." That would remove some of the discretion that perhaps the Secretary himself would not enjoy.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, having occupied the floor during general debate on this bill and discussed at some length the objectionable literacy-test clause, I will not now detain you with extended remarks on the amendment I have proposed, It brings us squarely to the real issue involved and it presents the crucial question in this immigration measure

That the literacy test has been placed in the bill as a means for restriction is a fact now conceded. That it is not a test of character has been to an extent also admitted. Its enactment would controvert our country's boast that this is the land of opportunity. It would give bold contradiction to the profession America has made that this land affords a refuge to the downtrodden and oppressed who, worthy of our considerate sympathy, knocks at our gates for entrance. It would penalize men and women who were denied educational advantages because of inequalities existing among the people of their native land, or because of oppressive and proscriptive laws in the countries from whence they come.

You would by this educational test exclude the physically, mentally, morally sound immigrant merely because he could not read, while at the same time the clever schemer, the cunning rascal, or the viciously inclined might be able to gain admit-tance because he could read and write. In short, the test of reading determines nothing to establish worth or character.

I undertook this morning under general debate to show you briefly what immigration has done for this country for its upbuilding and the promotion of its welfare. Experience has demonstrated the fact that an illiteracy test will tend to keep out many who are well deserving and who make decent, well-behaved, and industrious dwellers in the different communities in which they happen to settle or to dwell.

The denunciation leveled by so many of the advocates of the bill against immigration was, as you were told, directed in years gone by against the immigration which now very rightly and justly receive praise as a good, peaceful, industrious people, whose citizenship is most worthily born by them and whose civic and patriotic duties they have with fidelity discharged. Now, however, your attacks are directed mainly against the Italians and against the Russian and Romanian, Hungarian and Galician Jews, against Poles and Slavonians, and some Germans, too, who, if they happen unable to pass the reading test you would bar from entrance to our shores

Against such narrowness of vision-against what I must after yesterday's and to-day's debate conclude is an ill-conceived prejudice and antagonism against a class of people whose character, whose worth and industrious qualities many of the supporters of the bill do not and can not understand. I must enter my serious and emphatic protest. We still need those who will do the hard, sometimes rough manual labor that no longer the man who can read and write seems willing to do. We still require the hands who are willing to work the farms and till the soil the American boy rapidly abandons for the alluring life of town and city. We still want to further develop the resources of our country. We must preserve inviolate American ideals and live up to the principles of justice, humanity and fair play upon which after all this Government was foundedprinciples which this very test would violate. I trust, Chairman, that my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

[Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Chairman, I would not take up the time now to address this House upon the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfoele], to strike the literacy test from this bill, were it not for some remarks made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], which I quote from the RECORD as follows:

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill strikes at those who come here for the purpose of beating down the price of labor, who come here for the purpose of establishing low standards of morals and living, and to drive out those who desire to make an honest living and maintain their families in decency and self-respect.

I deny that that statement is accurate or true. I know that the great immigration that has come to this country did not come for this purpose at all. The immigrants come for reasons that have already been expressed on this floor during the seven hours of debate; they come here because they are driven from their homes for religious and political reasons; they come here for the purpose of bettering their condition. They do not come here for the purpose of lowering the standard of living or for the purpose of reducing the wages of the American workingmen.

Mr. Chairman, I represent in part the greatest immigration city in the civilized world. There are more immigrants in New York City and in New York State to-day-and I think I am correct in the statement—than there are in the whole of the United States outside. The standard of civilization in New York is as high as the standard of civilization in any city in this country. And the people who come from abroad and are employed in the workshops and the mercantile establishments of my city are as happy and as prosperous a people as you can find anywhere within the borderlands of this country. There is not this great idleness that has been referred to on this floor. There has been no great demand for this bill from New York. Almost a solid delegation upon this floor from that State is opposed to this bill. Every newspaper in New York State of any influence or power, without regard to party politics, is opposed to it. If the standard of civilization had been lowered in New York. if this large immigration had the effect of reducing the wages of American workmen in New York State and New York City, do you not suppose that protests would go up from the laboring organizations there, or from the newspapers, or from some of our civic societies? I have not received a single petition from New York City except one, and that was from the Junior Order of American Mechanics, in favor of this bill.

Every request that has been made and every petition that has reached me has been opposed to this measure, and for two reasons: First, because they do not believe the literacy test should be the qualification for admission to America; and, secondly, because this word "solely," contained in the measure, puts an arbitrary power in the commissioner of immigration, and can be used to nullify the bill, and could serve the purpose of keeping illiterates out who come here because of religious persecution in their native land. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we have in New York City this large immigration; we have not the percentage of illiteracy that they have in other parts of the country.

I realize that the South passed through a devastating period, and I realize also that it will be some time before it can recover from the effects of the Civil War, but while the South is recovering from those effects it might engage for a time, at least, in educating its illiterates. There is one county in Kentucky that is devoting itself to that proposition. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cantob] has expired.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if these gentlemen have finished with their questions I will undertake to make the few remarks that I have expected to address to the House on this question of the restriction of immigration. When the bill was before us a year ago and on other occasions prior to that I addressed the House rather fully, and it is not necessary now that I should make an elaborate speech to explain why I am in favor of a restriction of immigration.

In the course of this debate much has been said about the necessity of a homogeneous people if we are to continue a free, representative, republican government in the United States. Diversity of races, training, and opinions, when that diversity of opinion is deep-seated and the result of training under other political conditions, make an unfavorable environment for the maintenance of the sort of government we received from our fathers, and which some of us hope to hand unimpaired to the next generation.

When one takes a general survey of the governments of the world, he discovers that not a very great many people have manifested peculiar fitness for self-government. In a few countries like England, France, Switzerland, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, and Germany that fitness for self-government has manifested itself in some form. But outside of these there is little to indicate that in the last hundred years the people have developed encouragingly in a political way. In Russia, a very large and important part of the world, we still find an autocracy. A few years ago the people were granted a constistitution and a parliament, but the stormy and unimportant career of the Russian Parliament seems to suggest that it was prematurely given to the people of that country. At least, the legislature of that Empire has not made itself felt in an important way in the affairs of government. China has converted itself into a government which has been officially called a republic, but which is really ruled by a dictator, who is nominally a president, and who as soon as he had a difference with the Parliament of that country ordered it to disperse, and it promptly effaced itself. The Turkish effort for free government is not promising. Even in Germany, where the people are unquestionably fit for almost any form of government they may undertake, a military autocracy is still largely in control, and recently in a conflict between the civil and military authorities the power of government in favor of the latter was invoked in a harsh and effective way.

It is reasonable to assume that people who have not adopted our system of Government, or one which approximates it, either lack sympathy with it or a sufficient acquaintance with our methods to adopt them. If they lack sympathy certainly they can add no strength to this Republic when they become American citizens. If they lack knowledge of how to adjust themselves to it they can certainly add no political strength to our Government. Looking behind the handicap of an oversupply of pauper labor from Europe to the political effect of unlimited and unregulated immigration it takes no prophet to see a great danger to American institutions. I will not deny, few men would be rash enough to deny, that in time, that after the birth of another generation, these people may be able to adjust themselves to American institutions, but certainly until that adjustment shall have been made there is danger in the situation and it is one of such importance that prudent men would like to Wage earners in this country are seriously alarmed at the prospect of an increasing number of competing laborers from Europe. They have appealed to Congress to relieve them from this great and real danger.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CANTOR] has complained at the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration [Mr. Burnert] that the effect of this unrestricted immigration will be to beat down the social, moral, and wage standard in the United States. He seems particularly to object to that part of the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama that the moral standard will be lowered by excessive immigration. In that connection I may be permitted to say, I hope, that the criminal records of the northeastern States, where the bulk of this immigration has settled, thoroughly sustains the position taken by the gentleman from Alabama, although I think that in discussing the question the chairman of the committee particularly had in mind the wage scale.

More than one Representative from the State of New York has said in the course of this debate that that great State has invested the tremendous sum of $36,000,000 in the care and support of alien insane. It could hardly be denied that a large part of this insanity embraces the class we commonly refer to as the criminal insane. In the heat of debate exactness of speech is not always found, and, while the idea of the gentleman from Alabama is, in my judgment, perfectly sound in every respect, I think in the speech complained of he was referring more to the scale of wages than to anything else, because in support of his idea he referred to the attitude of the associations of organized labor, the Grange, farmers' unions, and other associations of wage earners on this question of restriction, and their argument has been specially addressed to the economic features

Mr. CANTOR. I quoted the gentleman's exact language.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Possibly; yet no one will deny, I fancy, that competition does have the effect of beating down prices. And if real competition always has that effect-and it certainly has-when an unlimited number of immigrants come into the country seeking employment they necessarily compete with those who were here before them, and it must have an effect upon the wages paid for labor. Of course in a country with resources like ours, with a great and expanding commerce and a steadily expanding agriculture, it does not have the same effect it would have in a country that is at a standstill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have only a little time, and I prefer not to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly?

Mr. SLAYDEN.

Very well, go on. Does the gentleman not think the same ef-Mr. CRAMTON. fect as to our standard of living here may be secured by bring-ing from abroad without restrictions the products of cheap labor in those countries?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I am not here now for the purpose of discussing the tariff, but the bill we have be-

I believe absolutely in the declaration of Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the Federation of Labor-that in the considerasecretary of the rederation of labor—that in the Considera-tion of this bill our prime duty is to the Americans; the Amer-icans who are, not the Americans who may be, and the pur-pose that I have in view in taking my position on this question is to benefit them. With me it is not a measure of hostility to people who reside in other countries. It is no lack of interest in their welfare at all, but, if you please, a selfish interest in Americans who are here. It is discriminating legislation, but it discriminates in behalf of our own people, and if that be selfishness, then I submit, sir, it is enlightened selfishness.

My friend from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], whom I esteem highly but do not always agree with, made the statement this morning that if all the people in the United States were moved into the State of Texas they would not crowd that State more than is now the situation in the Kingdom of Belgium. Heaven forbid that they should all be moved into the State of Texas, and heaven forbid that we should ever have conditions in Texas such as he and I have seen in the Kingdom of Belgium. I have been all over that little country, as he has, from one side to the other—north, south, east, and west—and I have never been in a city of Belgium where I have not seen teams engaged in transportation, teams engaged in making a living for families that were composed of women and dogs hitched side by side. That has never happened and I hope never can happen in the State that I have the honor in part to represent in this House. I am pleased to say that in Texas we confine such service to the ordinary beasts of burden.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will be brief, I will yield. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Have you in Texas an immigration bureau supported by the State?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; we have not. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I wish to inform the gentleman that the State of Minnesota spends thousands of dollars a year trying to get Democrats to take up our lands.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell us how it was that the city of Galveston, in Texas, donated to the Government of the United States the land upon which was erected an immigration station, which they very much wanted in the State of Texas?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois knows as well as I do that any community in the country seems to be glad to have a Federal appropriation for the construction of a public building in that community; but the city of Galveston does not represent public sentiment in the State of Texas on this question of immigration.

The city of Galveston is made up of pushing, energetic citizens who do all they can to develop the commerce and importance of that city, and who in the face of adversity, almost without par-allel, have made it the second port of the United States in the value of its exports and a commercial center of which every citizen of my State feels proud. But the problems which confront the city of Galveston are not the problems which concern the people of the interior, and they do things differently.

Getting back to my argument, Mr. Chairman, I will say that, in my judgment, this bill is in the interest of every resident American, no matter what country he came from, whether of European, Asiatic, or African origin. It is for resident Americans at this time that I speak. I admit no call to legislate for the people of any other country, not even those who expect to come to the United States at some future time. I want to avoid the crowded conditions that obtain in many sections of Europe, because wherever you find people densely packed together you find difficult problems arising out of that density which we have not yet been compelled to try to solve here in the United States, Belgium, for example, has intense economic conditions, low wages, general unrest, strikes, and riots. Men have multiplied more rapidly in Belgium and in other centers in Europe than the opportunities for remunerative employment. Gentlemen who discuss these questions have sometimes permitted their minds to become confused, because they fix their attention on aggregate values and commerce rather than on details. A country may have a great balance sheet in international trade. It may export huge quantities of manufactured produce, and yet individual prosperity may not be high. It is the individual for whom I plead, the human unit in which I feel an interest, Low wages and dense population invariably go together. In China and Japan, where density of population is greatest, we find the result of such crowding. The people there can hardly be said to live; they merely exist. And Japan has made great sacrifices of men and money to find a home for her surplus population, because she can not take care of them at home, and for that reason she has extended her control to Formosa and Korea and has set the eye of covetousness on Manchuria.

Gentlemen say that it is a far cry from present conditions in the United States to such as exist in Japan, or even in the over-crowded countries of Europe. That is true; but I want the possibility of it put still further away. I want to make it forever impossible in America. We are charged with selfishness in taking this position, but I much prefer to have that charge hurled at me rather than to do anything which in 2, 5, or even 10 generations will bring to this country the conditions which we all know to exist in the older parts of the world. I want to keep the lands of Texas, the lands of the whole United States, in fact, for Americans and for their descendants, and I am confident that there will be plenty of them to need it all.

Statistics show an alarming increase in the number of tenant farmers in the United States. I regard that as a very great misfortune, and if we can only legislate so as to reduce the number of tenant farmers in our country to the vanishing point we will have done something for which future historians will praise us as wise statesmen. Nothing will do more to promote the stability of government and the continuance of our political institutions as set up by the fathers of the Republic than the universal ownership of land.

One of the Representatives from New York, Mr. Goldfogle, said in the course of this debate that we must have these imported laborers to reduce the cost of living; that without them we can not produce greater crops and thus lower the value of farm produce, for which he and other Representatives of the great cities are so persistently clamoring.

Mr. Chairman, I am not trying to find a method of reducing the prices farmers get for their crops. I want to see the prices of farm products kept at a remunerative basis. My commission of farm products kept at a remunerative basis. My commission as the representative of a district composed of producers, of farmers, was not given me with the idea that I would legislate against their interests, as the gentleman from New York virtually says I would be doing if I opposed this bill. I would much prefer to legislate in such a way that it would increase the prosperity of the farmers, give them more comforts and gradually bring to the wives and daughters of the men who produce those things we eat and wear a degree of luxury. They are equally entitled to the refinements of life and they have just as much right to share the luxuries as the people who live in the great cities. in the great cities.

The argument for the immediate development of the whole country makes no special appeal to me. If we make haste slowly there will be fewer blunders, fewer errors to correct. The country is now developing more rapidly than any other ever did in the history of the world and, unfortunately, along some lines that do not commend themselves always to men of prudence. We ought to be willing to leave something for future generations to do. We ought to make provision for the future in such a way that succeeding generations will have an opportunity to own part of the soil of the country to which they will owe allegiance. The opponents of this bill say that we should not limit immigration; that we should throw our gates wide open and admit freely all the millions who are "fleeing the poverty and scorn" of the Old World. They want us to continue a policy which will finally crowd our own country to suffocation and in some future time will compel Americans to seek other parts of the world to escape conditions that now admittedly exist in Europe and Asia. But where will they go?

The unoccupied parts of the world are being rapidly taken up. Is it not immeasurably better to protect these future generations against such conditions by saving for them the conditions which now exist rather than undertake to compel them to meet problems which will be harder to solve hereafter?

I will now quote from a circular letter which came to me in December, and which was probably sent to other Members of the House:

Our country needs the labor of the toiler who is willing to work our mines, highways, and railroads. The farmers, cattle and fruit ranchers of South and West are hungering for labor to do the work which our native born and the older immigrants refuse to engage in. Properly directed by an efficient bureau of distribution this immigration, even though illiterate, will be bound to add to the country's wealth and well-being, to the end that the present high prices of farm and mine products may be materially decreased. Our prosperity, which should not only secure higher wages but also maintain the buying power, depends largely upon the continuance of the stream of immigration to which we owe our past growth. owe our past growth.

I specially invite attention to that part of this quotation in which these words are found:

To the end that the present high prices of farm and mine products may be materially decreased.

I do not know how miners may relish the idea of having the value of their products reduced, but an argument of that sort can not be expected to have much weight with the representatave of a farming constituency.

From another part of the same letter I quote these words:

You are therefore most earnestly requested to aid in its defeat, to vote and to work against it, and to help along the cause of reduction of the prices of our life's necessaries, not by restricting but by encouraging production where it is most needed.

Apparently the writers of the letter did not want us to forget the fact that the competition from Europe would reduce the value of farm products, for it is repeated in a very emphatic way.

If I did not know that my position on this bill reflected the views of an overwhelming majority of my constituency I would still be willing to appeal the matter to them on these two statements found in this one letter, in which the defeat of the bill is recommended.

Mr. Chairman, this question has been debated for so long that every possible point of view has been presented, and it is not necessary or useful to prolong the discussion, and I shall close my remarks by quoting an editorial that recently appeared in the San Antonio Express, one of the great dailies of the State of Texas:

the San Antonio Express, one of the great dailies of the State of Texas:

THE LITERACY TEST.

No question before Congress is going to arouse more or keener interest during the weeks that may hiervene before President Wilson acts upon the expected legislation than that affecting the immigration of foreigners into the United States. Within a day or two, at the most, the Burnett bill, prescribing and enforcing a literacy test for all allens who wish to become residents of this country, will probably have passed the House of Representatives. In all its essential features this measure nearly became a law a year ago. It passed both the Senate and the House of the Staty-second Congress by overwhelming vote, and, when yetoed by President Taft, was sent through the Senate by a constitutional majority of two-thirds. In the House the presidential veto was such as the senate of the Staty second Congress by overwhelming vote, and, when the other than the movement for a Federal statute that will have the effect of greatly retarding immigration, even of cutting its numbers, at least, in haif, has not been allowed to lag. The American Federation of Labor has again gone on record as demanding the enactment of the Burnett bill into law. The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, said to represent 3,000,000 tillers of the soil, has passed a resolution favoring the passage of the bill and even threatening those who cypose it with a hostility that will not end until Members of Congress who work against it are driven from public life. Mr. BROWN of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BROWN] is recognized.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would not oppose the adoption of the literacy test if I were not prepared to offer substitutes which I believe to be both just and adequate.

In the permission given me yesterday to extend my remarks in the RECORD I endeavored to show that an enormous proportion of crime, pauperism, and degeneracy in men, with its invariable equivalent of harlotry in women, is the direct result of inherited mental defect.

Mr. Chairman, I went further in my argument yesterday. endeavored to show that since the year 1910, when the Immigration Commission reported to Congress, on whose recommendations this illiteracy clause is based, it has been proven beyond the question of a doubt that these inherited mental defects follow the known law of biology, the Mendelian law, and it is now possible to predict with reasonable accuracy the kinds of children you would get from any known union where one or both of the contracting parties were afflicted in any way with a mental defect.

Mr. Chairman, I scarcely expect the members of this committee to follow me in this argument unless they shall be familiar with the operation of the Mendelian law as applied formerly to plants and animals and lately to the color of the hair, albinism, brachydactylism, and other phases of human development; but I trust that the committee will realize that we are to-day in a sense acting as the cradle of the Nation, endeavoring to see to it that future generations shall be born sane, industrious, virile, and desirable, according to the provisions which we in-corporate in the bill. Children arrive in this country by but two routes, and the steamship route is one of them. Over the other route Congress has but very little control. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Has it any?

Mr. BROWN of New York. Over the steamship route it has exact and absolute control. Therefore I urge upon members of the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they put into the committee to remember that everything they are the committee to remember that everything they are the committee to remember that everything they are the committee. bill will react for good or for bad, for generation after genera-tion, until the end of time. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] was on the floor the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] wanted to know why, if the State of Texas was opposed to immigration, Galveston had sought to have established at its port an immigration station. I venture to predict that if the people of Texas offer inducements to immigrants, they will have the experience of South Carolina.

In 1904 there were but 5,500 foreign-born persons in the State of South Carolina. Some gentleman, prompted, doubtless, by the best of motives, conceived the idea of establishing an immigration bureau. Thirty thousand dollars was spent in an effort to induce settlers from abroad to come to South Carolina to secure employment in the cotton mills and on the farms of that State, and in 1906 the Wittekind sailed into Charleston Harbor with about 450 steerage passengers. They were a carefully selected class of immigrants. I do not believe that to-day one of those 450 is in the State of South Carolina, and certainly I know that the immigration bureau is not there. It would be difficult to find the man who first suggested its organization. Our experience with that carefully selected cargo resulted in the legislature at its next session abolishing the immigration bureau and going even to the other extreme and prohibiting any State official attempting, directly or indirectly, to induce immigrants to come into the State of South Carolina.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Is it not a fact that in your mills in South Carolina, where you employ native-born citizens, the wages are lower than they are in the mills of Massachusetts, where these same foreigners or their cousins are employed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I do not think so; at least not for the same class of work.

Mr. KEATING. I thought it was so. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Gentlemen who come from the State of New York seem unable to make an argument on this question without referring to the percentage of illiteracy in the South.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the percentage of the foreignborn population in South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Now?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Very small. I do not know There were about 5,500 in 1906. the exact figures.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It does not reach 1 per cent?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is the percentage of illiteracy in South Carolina among the whites?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The percentage of illiteracy among the whites that my friend loves to refer to is due to the unfortunate conditions existing just after the close of the war, and criticism comes with ill grace from you, because it is due to the fact that the people of your section saw fit to so devastate our country in the days of reconstruction that it was not until the last few years that we have been able to recover. I am glad to say that with improved financial conditions our educational system has developed, and now practically every white child in the State of South Carolina of school age is in the schools of the State. And not only the white children, but we are sending to school in South Carolina to-day more negroes than white children. Ten years from now you will not ask the percentage of illiteracy, because the effect of what the people from your section of the country did to us during reconstruction will have disappeared.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman answer one more question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Do you think that the illiterate whites in your State are a detriment to your community?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The illiterate native-born South Carolinian can not be compared with your illiterate immigrant, because the native of South Carolina, even though he be illiterate, has inherited a love for American institutions.

Even though poverty has denied him the blessings of an education, it has not taken from him his love of the country for which his ancestors in many cases gave up their lives. He is of the soil and will remain to assist in the development of the country. But this is not true of the immigrant who will be excluded by the terms of this bill. Your immigrant does not come to stay. He knows nothing of our institutions and cares less. His sole desire is to stay long enough to save some money, when he will return to his native land to spend it among his own people. By reason of his habits he can underlive the American, and therefore works for less, beating down the price of labor. We had an experience years ago with the importation of laborers. order to develop the cotton-growing industry negroes were imported into our State. The industry developed, but the trouble that that imported slave labor has given us has made it the dearest labor any country ever secured. Now, in our own way our people are doing their best to solve this vexed question, but we would have little hope of solving it if there were dumped upon us a class of immigrants such as are now coming to our shores from southern Italy, Greece, and Turkey. They have no capacity for assimilation with our white people. They must have some society, and we fear they would turn to the negro race, mingle with them, and so aggravate our race problem as to make it hopeless.

In favoring the restriction of immigration I am not unconscious of the fact that it was through immigration that our own country was developed years ago, but when gentlemen refer to that fact they fail to refer to the difference in the class of immigrants then and now. In the early part of the last century South Carolina offered inducements to settlers and home seekers from abroad, and as a result the English, German, Irish, and Scotch-Irish came to our State, but to-day we receive little or no immigration from these countries. Southern Italy is furnishing the largest percentage, and now the Asiatics are threatening to come to drive American workingmen out of employment. J. Ingram Bryan, a professor in the Imperial College of Japan, in an article appearing in Munsey's Magazine of August, 1913, says, among other things:

The man of the East has proved his capacity to adapt himself to all circumstances and therefore his fitness to live. He can underlive, and therefore can outlive, any occidental.

Again, he says:

The occidental-

Which covers the Caucasian race-can not live save at a cost sufficient for the maintenance of 20 oriental lives.

There is an oversupply of unskilled labor in the country today, and consequently the workingman is in favor of restricting in some way the tide of immigration. Last year there were admitted 1,427,227 immigrants, and the figures indicate an inadmitted 1,421,221 immigrants, and the lightes indicate an increased number this year. Where years ago the employees of the Steel Trust were English-speaking people, it is claimed that to-day 90 per cent are foreigners. In some manufacturing plants few native-born persons are employed, and it seems that they have concluded that they can better control the uneducated foreigner and that he can be driven to work longer hours for

The annual report of the Commissioner of Immigration for the port of New York for the year 1911 contains the following:

the port of New York for the year 1911 contains the following:

The new immigration, unlike that of the earlier years, proceeds in part from the poorer elements of the countries of southern and eastern Europe and from backward races with customs and institutions widely different from ours and without the capacity of assimilating with our people as did the early immigrants. Many of those coming from these sources have very low standards of living, possess filthy habits, and are of an ignorance which passes belief. Types of the classes referred to representing various alien races and nationalities may be observed in some of the tenement districts of Elizabeth, Orchard, Rivington, and East Houston Streets, New York City. Such immigrants differ also widely from the earlier ones in respect of their occupations and the localities to which they go. Contrary to what was formerly the case

n large proportion are unskilled laborers who go to the manufacturing and mining centers where the Immigration Commission recently found that there existed an oversupply of unskilled foreign labor. Over three-fifths remain in five Eastern States, while an undue proportion are pouring into the congested areas of our large cities, where they begin their American life amongst unfavorable surroundings, and exposed to many evil influences. They often herd together, forming in effect foreign coionies in which the English language is almost unknown. Miserable economic and sanitary conditions exist in many of these colonies; witness, for instance, in New York City the frequency with which the State factory inspectors are compelled to attach the red "unclean" tag to articles made in shops and factories where aliens and employed, the threatened use of this tag constituting often the best means at their disposal of compelling the maintenance of even a semblance of cleanliness in such places.

Repeatedly the new immigrant obtains his job at the expense of an older employee, who loses his. Certain employers seek new immigrant labor in preference to other and more efficient labor, of which there may be an abundance, because of the willingness of the new immigrants (or "greenies," as they are termed) to work at the outset unduly long hours or at unduly long wages, or both, and perhaps also to pay the foreman or padrone a bonus. Later, as they become more proficient and demand higher wages, they are discharged and their places filled with immigrants who have arrived more recently.

Restrictive legislation is demanded by the people. American Federation of Labor and the labor organizations of various States have urged that the literacy test be prescribed. It is favored not only by them and by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, but by the National Farmers' Union, the Grange, and other agricultural organizations. Several States have memorialized Congress to prescribe this test, and it was recommended by the Immigration Commission after an investigation of four years, costing nearly a million dollars. It has heretofore been approved of by both the House and Senate and would to-day be the law had it not been vetoed by President Taft. Whom would it keep out? The distinguished chairman of this committee, who has carefully studied the statistics, says:

It would not keep out the splendid German people that come to this country, the magnificent Scandinavians, who have built up the great Northwest. Not one in a thousand of these would fall under the ban of the reading test. It would not keep out the English or the Irish, the Welsh or the Scotch. The record shows that less than 1 per cent of those great nationalities would fall under the rule and be excluded. It would not keep out 2 per cent of the Germans or the Hollander, it would not keep out 1 per cent of the Bohemians, it would not keep out the Frenchman or the Switzer; but, Mr. Chairman, it would strike down fifty-odd per cent of those from southern Italy, from along the borders of the Mediterranean Sea, from Sicily, and the Islands of the Mediterranean.

* * It would keep out those who, at Lawrence, Mass., during the strike last year, were following the flag of Black Hand leaders, the followers themselves unable to read their own language—those who had inscribed upon the banners by the leaders they blindly followed 'No law, no God, no master.' That is the class at which this bill is leveled. It would keep out about 30 per cent of the Poles, about 40 per cent of the Greeks, some 60 or 70 per cent of the Turks, and the other day I received a letter from Dr. Wightman, of Providence, R. I., who, I believe, is at the head of the State medical officials there, and an alienist, which letter I shall put in the Recomp, in which he says that recently hundreds of Turks and Kurds—and in reply to an inquiry of mine as to what the Kurds were, he said they were the people from Kurdistan, and similar to Turks—were coming there while hundreds of good men were out of employment, taking the jobs of men who wanted to toil, but who were not willing to labor at the standard of wages paid to those people, and he says the literacy test would not only keep them out now, but it would do so for the next thousand years. thousand years.

There seems to have been a consistent effort to organize the Jews in opposition to this measure, but this bill is not aimed against them. The Jew who can read either in Hebrew or Yiddish will be admitted, and there is hardly an adult Jew who can not read his Bible. Furthermore, the man who can prove that he is fleeing from religious persecution is admitted, and the provisions as to the admission of relatives are liberal.

I am satisfied that the gentlemen who oppose the bill in the House are prompted by the sincerest of motives, but I fear that some of the protests we are receiving in the mail are inspired by those who have selfish interests at stake. spired by those who have sensu interests at same. I can well believe that it will be a severe blow to the great steamship companies, considerably reducing the profits they receive from their passenger traffic, but it is time to enact this legislation. The people demand it, and I am confident that if this bill passes the House and Senate at the hands of President Wilson it will not meet the untimely fate that befell it during the Taft administration.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] who has just taken his seat. I am a resident of Fall River, Mass., the largest cotton manufacturing city in the United States. I resided there first in 1844, when nearly all the operatives in the mills were Americans, and to-day the operatives are nearly all foreigners or descendants of foreigners. I am willing to compare figures with the gentleman from South Carolina as to the rate of wages paid in both places, and I would remind him that women and minors under Massachusetts laws can not work more than 54 hours per week nor after 6 o'clock at night, and I would also inform him that the wages in the city of Fall River are from 20 to 30 per cent higher than they are in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BRYNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I decline to yield; I have only five minutes. I wish to further state that I have lived among the foreign born all my life practically, for I went to Fall River when I was but 3 years of age. I will read to you what the United States Census figures of 1910 show in the official statistics relative to the population of the city where I reside. The statement follows:

There was a French population of 32,236; English (England, There was a French population of 32,236; English (England, Canada, Scotland, Wales, and Newfoundland), 26,498; American, 16,296; Irish, 15,104; Portuguese, 13,334; Austrian, 3,953; Russian, 3,467; Italian, 1,624; Atlantic Islanders, 1,304; Turks, 540; Germans, 533; Swedes, 171; Greeks, 138; Danes, 83; Finns, 60; Norwegians, 52; Roumanians, 52; Dutch, 6; Hungarians, 6; and all others 3,668, making a total of 119,225. That comprises more than one-half of the population of the district which I have the honor to represent on this floor, and many others of foreign, high, or parentage live in the city, of Taumton, and foreign birth or parentage live in the city of Taunton and many of the towns of the district.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not yield. I desire to state that I have lived among these people all my life and I know something of their characteristics. I know how energetic they are, and how they have built up the communities in which they live, and how orderly and peaceable they are.

In 1904 there was a six months' strike in my city, the result of which was that 111 cotton mills were closed for six months. There was not a single case of disorder arising from the strike that was brought before the court. The strike was peaceably settled at the end of six months. I want to say to you further that in the month of December last the operatives of my city asked for an increase of wages. As a matter of fact, every union in the city asked for it. It is as well unionized as any city in America. All the unions met and asked for an increase of wages.

The manufacturers met them in a proper spirit, as they have for many years, and I challenge you to find another city in the United States where the mill owners meet the operatives in a better spirit than they do in the city in which I live. They met the labor leaders and held conferences with them. They finally made answer why they could not give the increased wage that was asked. The unions met to receive the answer of the manufacturers, and only in the case of one union did the majority of them vote to strike. They have a very good rule, which is that they will not order a strike unless a two-thirds vote in favor is cast by the union. All the other unions voted by majority not to strike. As I have stated, I am pretty well acquainted with the labor situation of my own city. I have not the scale of wages here, but I can furnish it.

The time of the gentleman from Massa-The CHAIRMAN. chusetts has expired.

[Mr. Greene of Massachusetts received permission, by unanimous consent, to extend his remarks in the Record.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Naturally, with so large a population of foreign birth and parentage in the fifteenth congressional district of Massachusetts, I have frequently been interested in behalf of my constituents who have friends and relatives in the countries from which they came who seek an opportunity to enter the United States

I find the restrictions in the existing law and rulings by department officials debar many persons from entering here. These restrictions are reenacted in the pending bill, and I do not object to the physical and mental tests in general therein provided.

But I have always opposed the illiteracy test as a specific measure, because long experience has convinced me that it is entirely unnecessary and might prove harmful rather than beneficial. In every instance when this issue has been presented since I became a Member of this body I have voted against this proposition, and I shall vote against this bill. I could cite many cases that have come to my knowledge of children of illiterate foreign-born parents, educated in our public schools, who have acquired distinction in civic, university, political, and business life in harmony and in competition with those who claim American ancestry

The patriotism shown by those who come from abroad and their loyalty and devotion to the Government of their adoption, added to the training their children obtain in the public schools, inculcate in the minds of the entire family the true spirit of American citizenship. This spirit precludes the possibility of antagonisms, which the proponents of this bill seem to fear are liable to arise unless the illiteracy test is applied at the ports of entry.

In Massachusetts every voter since the year 1857 has been required to read a portion of the Constitution and write or print his name on the registry book in order that he may be entitled to vote. The only other requirement is that he shall be native born or possess a final certificate of naturalization. I have known during my career in municipal life many persons to whom this test of reading is a hardship and embarrassment.

To persons coming to a strange country, and amid new surroundings, such a test, I believe, would be a much greater embarrassment and hardship, and that it would prove highly detrimental in shutting out worthy and otherwise qualified persons from contributing their energies to the upbuilding and perpetuity of our Nation.

I can testify from actual knowledge of the prejudice that existed against the immigrants more than half a century ago. But these immigrants have assimilated with and strengthened the purposes of the early settlers. It must be admitted that the illiteracy test will not debar the anarchist.

Labor unionism did not originate in the United States. Many of its most active and efficient officials and a large proportion of the membership of labor organizations in this country will, I am quite sure, be found to be either former immigrants or their direct descendants. I refer to this matter only as it seems to me it is an effective answer to the charge that immigration, under existing law, is or has been detrimental to the cause of organized labor.

When President Jefferson proposed the acquisition of the lands west of the Mississippi River known as the Louisiana Purchase the citizens of Boston in public meeting assembled protested strongly against the project.

They, like those who now take the narrow view on the question of immigration, feared that we could not assimilate the people of this vast territory. Their fears have been proven groundless in the light of our earlier and later experiences. In view of the experience the country has already had with the immigrants who have come to our shores our powers of assimilation ought to prove that they are not detrimental to our best interests. For nearly three centuries the United States has taken under its sheltering wings emigrants from the lands across the seas. These persons have helped to make the United States great and prosperous. They helped us to acquire our independence. Their wisdom and patriotism formulated our Constitution and created a Nation which has been the marvel of the civilized world. Those coming to us in later years have builded our railroads and developed our resources in times of peace and helped us fight our battles and preserve our Union in times of war. If we are to take a new departure and create new conditions, let us hope that the result may not prove as detrimental as many of those who oppose the literacy test believe.

If this test proves detrimental after trial, if it should be adopted, the Congress of the future may reverse our action in this respect.

Mr. DERSHEM. Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill, and I am heartily in favor of every one of its provisions.

It is said of us that we as a nation are less patriotic than of yore; that if conditions similar to those which preceded the Revolutionary War, when the hand of the oppressor was grievous and hard to bear, prevailed to-day, there would be no revolution, because patriotism burns but dimly in our breasts, and that day by day, as a people, we care less for our country and its institutions.

A writer gives as his reason for this supposed condition the number of immigrants coming to this country, without a spark of love for the homeland and even less for the country to which they come. These alien people gather in our larger cities, and by precept and example debauch and degrade our citizens. They are here but a few years when they are allowed to vote for city officials, members of the State legislature, Members of Congress, governors, judges of our courts, and President of the United States. Their influence reaches far into the very life of our Government and is certainly not unlifting.

of our Government and is certainly not uplifting.

Personally I am sure where the foreign born are not a large part of the population our people love our country and revere its flag as much or more than in the days gone by.

Be this as it may, this I know: When our forefathers came here the very best and most patriotic people of Europe were coming to our shores, with zealous hearts, longing for a country in which they might find peace, prosperity, and happiness. But now conditions have changed, and of the million or more immigrants coming to our country every year at least 80 per cent are of a very low type of humanity, who care very little, or not at all, for the welfare of this Nation, and by association and amalgamation with our people lower the standard of our citizenship. The healthy, strong, intelligent foreigner I would welcome to our land, but I am opposed to making this country an asylum for the undesirables of all the world. We say within ourselves that conditions may improve, but instead they are rapidly getting worse.

The deplorable political and financial conditions of the eastern and southern countries of Europe, coupled with the prosperous condition of the United States, creates a large natural emigration to our shores. The most convincing proof in the eyes of the people of these countries of the exceptional prosperity of our country is the large sums of money, almost unprecedented to them, which annually arrive from friends and relatives residing Besides this natural emigration, however, in the United States. we are burdened with a dangerous and most injurious unnatural emigration which from year to year assumes larger proportions. This unnatural emigration consists of paupers and assisted emigrants, and is induced and brought about by the unscrupulous and greedy activity displayed by a large number of agencies and subagencies having well-established connections in the United States and abroad, apparently unknown to the steamship companies, which activity manifests itself in the peddling of steamship tickets and prepaids on the installment plan, both here and abroad, the constant agitation and offers of inducements by subagents in Europe, occupying semipublic positions, who, in order to earn commissions, play upon the ignorance and susceptibility of the plain peasant, frequently inducing him to sell or mortgage all his belongings for the purpose of raising the necessary traveling expenses, which latter transaction is also turned to profit by such agent.

In my own State the foreign-born criminal and insane cost the State of Pennsylvania, every two years, more than $4,000,000. This does not include the foreign-born poor confined in our poorhouses and jails. The Pennsylvania Legislature for the two years ending June 30, 1913, appropriated to the various State, semi-State, and private institutions $15,578,553.78. Twenty-seven per cent of this amount, or about $4,000,000, were expended for the maintenance of the foreign born who were in the various institutions of our State. On December 31, 1911, there were in the eastern penitentiary 1,350 and in the western penitentiary 980 convicts, making a total of 2,330. About 28 per cent of these were foreigners. The criminals confined in Pennsylvania's four penal institutions cost annually about $1,600,000. If 25 per cent of this amount is charged to the foreigners, the amount is $400,000. We can readily see by these figures that more than 25 per cent of the entire appropriation to State, semi-State, and private institutions goes to maintain the foreigner, and the foreign-born criminal and insane cost the State of Pennsylvania every two years more than $4,000,000.

The average weekly cost per capita in the five State hospitals for the insane in Pennsylvania is $4.35, although only about one-half of the insane in Pennsylvania are cared for in these five institutions. This is a fair and, I am inclined to believe, a low average rate. The total number of foreign born confined in the insane institutions in Pennsylvania May 31, 1911, was 4,577. This number, at the average cost of $4.35 per week, reaches the enormous sum of $1,035,317.40 per year.

EDUCATIONAL TEST.

In many cases this provision may work some hardship, and as a matter of theory it possibly is unfair. In practice, however, you would find it would be the means of keeping out the class of people we are now hoping to keep out in some other way. It is quite probable something could be done, as has been suggested by a former Commissioner General, in the way of distributing immigrants throughout the West to prevent congestion in the seaboard cities. We ought to check the evil at the outset; however, and keep out the worst aliens, so that we would have to distribute only the better classes. If men are undesirable, the more you distribute them the worse off you are.

The percentage of illiteracy is enormously greater among the undesirable nationalities than among those we have always been glad to welcome to the United States. But is not the ignorant man as good a workman as one who knows how to read and write? Ought one to put up the bars against poor people whose illiteracy is the fault of the country where they were born, and who, perhaps, come to the United States as much to get an education for their children as for any other reason? There is the sentimental argument. Of course, we ought to be generous about our own advantages, but there is no God-given right by which men can come to this country and expect us to educate them. The fact of the matter is that the uneducated foreigner, who can neither read nor write in his own language, can not be reached by our educational institutions. He remains in a condition of hopeless ignorance, and while he may be a good workingman he is not a good citizen. We might take his children, if he has any, and keep him out, except for the inhumanity of such a proceeding, but it is an undeniable fact that the grown man, who comes here illiterate, seldom or never rises sufficiently to be reached by our American institutions. These ignorant people can not meet the competition of the educated men of their own nationality. They are too ignorant to know where the conditions are best for them, and they herd together in the cities. They can not be reached by our schoolteachers or the missionaries, and they are the ones who first go to the hospitals and the poorhouses, because they can not bring themselves to learn anything from their own people or from their American neighbors. I believe we can institute a practical educational test which will work well and which would not be more unfair than is any other test.

To our own very heavy burden of defectives and degenerates we are adding every year thousands of aliens, whose presence here will result, because of their own defects and those of their offspring, in lowering the physical and mental standards of the American race. We have much still to learn about heredity, but we know enough to be sure that if the quality of our race is to be preserved there must be a far more careful selection of our immigrants than we have ever attempted to make. The need is indeed imperative for applying eugenic principles in our legislation, but the greatest, the most logical, the most effective step that we can take is to begin with the proper eugenic selection of the incoming alien millions.

We hear much of the conservation of our natural resources, but the conservation and improvement of the American race is vastly more important than all other conservation.

wealth of a nation is the quality of its people. Of what value are endless acres of forests, millions of tons of coal, and billions of gallons of water if the race is not virile and sane and sound?

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. Barton, by unanimous consent, was given permission to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate on this section and amendment close in 30 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman means on this amendment to the literacy test?

Mr. BURNETT. I mean to this paragraph, and that is the only amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. I hope the gentleman will extend that time. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Alabama refers only to the amendment offered by me to strike out the educational test.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDFOGLE) there were 62 ayes and 61 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statements of my friend from Texas, Mr. SLAYDEN, and I cordially reciprocate the sentiments of friendship which he has expressed. I want to go further than he has, however, and say that I agree with him on nearly all questions save this one. I was interested in his remarks, not because of what he said about conditions in Belgium, and so forth, but because of the State which he so well represents on this floor. I remember the time when Representatives of the great State of Texas stood upon this floor protesting against the National Government undertaking to regulate the question of immigration, for the reason that while conditions in the North—in New York and Pennsylvania and the other crowded sections of the countrymight justify legislation to exclude foreigners, such justification did not exist in the State of Texas, and for that reason they expressed a preference for the sovereign right of the State to regulate a question of that kind according to its own sweet will; and while it is true that the question of immigration is national, yet the Representatives from that great State at that time made the argument that the National Government was doing something against which they were bound to protest on account of the conditions existing in their State. What might suit New York might not and did not suit Texas, they said, and because of the difference of conditions they demanded different treatment.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have only five minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman say that the State of Texas has the right to prevent the handling of the immigration question by the National Government?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, no. These seasoned lawmakers understood that they had no such right, yet they protested against the regulation of the question by the National Government as an iniquity and injustice to their State, a State which they said needed immigration, and the Lord knows it needs it just as much to-day as it needed it 20 years ago, because Texas has more land and less people than any other section of the country.

I am opposed to the literacy test, for three reasons: First, because it is insincere and hypocritical. It is proposed in the name of education, while in reality you merely want to restrict, and you propose here to coin hypocrisy into American law, and against that I protest. Secondly, I am opposed to it because it punishes a lack of opportunity. Think of it, the land of opportunity is to go on record before the civilized world as punishing the lack of opportunity of those poor people who could not get the necessary education at home in order to pass this test

Do you know that every one of the men and women, in order to be admitted, under existing laws must well-nigh be an angel? Look at these laws and the drastic restrictions you have placed around the poor immigrant. He must be physically sound and mentally sound. If there has been blot on his character in the past, he can not say, like our friend from Mississippi, the Hon. John Allen, "Never mind the past, but I point with pride to my spotless future." [Laughter.] No; his good intentions for the future avail him nothing. Before he can pass the gate it is necessary for him to point to spotless past in the first place. Why, persons, male or female, who succeed in getting by the inspectors at Ellis Island would be good enough to be readily. admitted into heaven, whether they can read and write or not; but in order to be admitted into this free country they must be able to read. In other words, our restrictionists propose to set up a test more stringent than that which would easily entitle an immigrant to eternal bliss.

My third objection is that an educational test is no test of character-in fact, is no test of the fitness of an immigrant at all. From a practical standpoint it would be better to exclude educated classes and admit those who have not had the benefit of a school training, because the latter we really need for our rough work, while we have an ample sufficiency of the former class in our own country. As honest and self-respecting legislators we can not and should not depart from the truism that character is the only test of a man's worth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTHOLDT, Mr. TAYLOR of New York, and Mr. Loft were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I realize the opposition there is to very large immigration to our country, and I question the desirability of having too large a number of immigrants coming into this country. No one would question the fact that we do not desire immigration more rapidly than we can properly assimilate it, but, Mr. Chairman, I have never yet been willing to judge of the honesty of a man or of his capacity, morally, mentally, or physically, by the test of whether he could read, when he had been brought up without the opportunity to learn to read. [Applause.] I think it is perhaps a reflection upon a citizen of the United States, born and raised here close to free public schools, if he has taken no advantage of his opportunity and learned to read, but I can not believe that it is a reflection upon a citizen of a foreign land who has not had the same opportunity of free public schools in which he might learn to read. And we all know that if in the history of our country those who were not able to read had not been permitted to be pioneers of the country, the country would still remain un-settled, and if those who were not able to read had not been permitted to come into the country we still would be a desert land.

I can not bring my conscience to the point where it enables me to judge of the desirability of a foreigner becoming an American citizen, with the right to rear his children here, by the test of whether, without the opportunity, he has been able to learn to read. There ought to be other tests which will enable us to properly restrict immigration. I do not believe that this land of ours, held up as the hope of the ignorant every-where in the world, held up as the hope of the oppressed throughout the lands of the world, that here we can afford to say, No matter how willing you are to become a good citizen, no matter how industrious you may be, no matter how eco-nomical you may be, no matter how willing to work you may be, yet you can not become one of us except by the arbitrary, test of whether, without the opportunity which we had, you have learned to do that which we have learned to de, namely, to read. I hope we will never reach that point. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. Garrett of Tennessee having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Hay, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6060 and had directed him to report that it had come to no conclusion

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 11 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise

Mr. DONOVAN. To ask a question-is it 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama what the understanding is, if there be one, whether this bill has the right of way on Monday or whether the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be

Mr. BURNETT. If we meet at 11 o'clock of course this bill will have the right of way from 11 to 12, but what the ruling of the Speaker will be on that question I do not know, but we shall ask for the right of way that day.

Mr. MANN. The right of way, of course, would not depend upon the House meeting at 11; that would not be the test, of course. I do not know whether there was any understanding.

Mr. BURNETT. No; there is not.
Mr. MANN. I have no objection.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that many of the Members of the House, this being Saturday night, will probably go away to spend Sunday with their families. Now, they may not be able to get here as early as the gentleman from Alabama suggests, if the House meets at 11, so I suggest to the gentleman that he ought not to press his request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. I withhold that motion for one minute for the gentleman from Washington.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE AND APPROACHES ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER, VANCOUVER, WASH.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass the bill S. 4094, an act providing for the erection of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at or near Vancouver, Wash.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table

Senate bill 4094.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a similar bill on the House Calendar?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and a favorable report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 4094. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at or near Vancouver, Wash.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, has not the stage of business gone for the gentleman to take it from the table?

Mr. MANN The gentleman asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has, except by unanimous consent; but the gentleman asked unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Multnomah, in the State of Oregon, the county of Clarke, in the State of Washington, or the said counties of Multnomah and Clarke, acting jointly, be, and they or either of them are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Vancouver, Wash., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would like for the gentleman to give an explanation of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing the building of a bridge to cost nearly $3,000,000 between the two States, and is to be paid for by the people of the two counties named. A favorable report has been made by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and the bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. GARDNER. Is a similar bill now on the House Calendar?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and reported favorably. Mr. GARDNER. And reported unanimously? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Johnson of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m) the House adjourned until Monday, February 2, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

Monday, February 2, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Lord our God, Thy kingdom ruleth over all. We can not by any means take ourselves out of the jurisdiction of Thy law. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. All forms of human endeavor and all the activities of organic life must come within the province of Thy kingdom and within the jurisdiction of Thy law.

We pray that the may be inspired with a sense of God's right to rule and with responsive love to Thee for all Thy goodness to us, so that every act of our life may be brought into conformity to Thy will and that we may act as the stewards of God, commissioned of Thee to perform a great work for Thy people, and that we may constantly receive the blessed benediction of our Father in heaven. For Christ's sake. Amen.

[Telegram.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 28, 1914.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Cincinnati Stock Exchange at a special meeting of all its mem-ers, held January 28, 1914, unanimously adopted the following reso-

The Cincinnati Stock Exchange at a special meeting of all its members, held January 28, 1914, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

That we earnestly protest against the passage of Senate bill No. 3895, introduced by Mr. Owen, entitled "A bill to prevent the use of malls and of the telegraph and telephone in furtherance of fraudulent and harmful transactions on stock exchanges," for the following reasons:

First. We declare that the title of the bill is misleading and a reflection upon the integrity of exchanges and the members thereof, as a recognized stock exchange protects any legitimatized transactions.

Second. The bill is in violation of the Constitution of the United States and is illegal.

Third. This bill, if enacted into law, would subject the laws of the several States to the sole authority of the Postmaster General, in violation of State rights.

Fourth. It would disorganize and destroy the market and collateral value for securities of all kinds, and many of the corporations would withdraw their stocks and bonds from the stock-exchange list.

Fifth. Legislation as proposed in the bill is reactionary and not progress and interferes with the publication of quotations in the newspapers, which keep the public advised as to the values.

Sixth. It will destroy real estate values by destroying the real estate exchanges and indirectly affect all real estate.

Seventh. The proposed legislation, instead of creating wide markets and publicity for securities, will have the opposite effect, and the results will do incalculable harm.

THE NEW YORK COTTON EXCHANGE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the necessity for Congress to regulate the New York Cotton Exchange becomes more apparent every day to those from the South who are familiar with conditions there.

I send to the desk a letter just received from a prominent mill president at Columbia, S. C., which I desire to have read for the information of the Senate.

What is needed is a law to compel those who sell futures to deliver what they sell and not tender something else, as has been the custom of the New York Cotton Exchange.

After the letter has been read, I desire that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and express the hope that that committee will, as soon as practicable, bring in a bill to regulate this important matter and protect the manufacturers and southern farmers against the manipulators who have been running the New York Cotton Exchange.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

HAMPTON COTTON MILLS Co., OFFICE OF PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER, Columbia, S. C., January 29, 1914.

OFFICE OF PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER,
Columbia, S. C., January 29, 1914.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: I note with pleasure that you have recovered from your recent indisposition, and I sincerely hope and trust that you have regained your strength, for the Democrats have done so much good so far, and I realize that your long experience and good judgment has been an aid to the Democrats now that we have a majority.

In looking over the Journal of Commerce for Monday, January 26, I note that it is stated a spinner tried to secure 3,000 bales of good middling cotton in New York City, and that this spinner was asked 192 points above the quotations of March cotton, which closed on that day at 12.57 cents. According to my addition this cotton manufacturer was forced to pay 14.49 cents per pound for March delivery for spinable cotton, when the New York Cotton Exchange quoted middling cotton at 12.57 cents for March delivery, and their basis is that good middling cotton has a value of 65 points over middling. According to the New York Cotton Exchange quotations this cotton should have been priced to the spinner at 13.22 cents. Now you can see that the trading in actual bales for good middling cotton for March was on a basis of 14.49 cents, and the theoretical trading engaged in by the speculators was on a basis of 13.22 cents. Now cotton manufacturers have to pay the price for good cotton and make their cloth on that basis. Yet when we go to New York to sell cloth we always continually have thrown in our faces the New York Cotton Exchange prices, and according to this basis of figuring same is 1.27 cents too low, or for a 500-pound bale $6.35. I am not giving you anything except facts, and the truth is that 14.47 cents represents just about what it would cost a spinner to get good middling cotton for this mill for March delivery.

In view of the fact that the New York papers continually criticize Congress for attempting to regulate the New York Cotton Exchange, or for having anything to do
